were born, and they have shrunk instead of expanded in the last twenty years. Not only did men in the same lines of work despise and ignore one another, but they felt the same towards any who did not share their animosities. Thus, ugly factions developed, and these wasted, in destructive rivalries, time and energy that might have been employed profitably. Inhabitants in towns that were broad enough to pull together have now more strength to resist fading into passing highways or becoming mere suburbs of neighboring centers.

To determine the mental state of William Edward Hickman, California kidnaper and murderer, one so called alienist agitated out of his brain a proposition to write on the prisoner's skin, and if the letters so inscribed remained after three minutes he was crazy; if they disappeared, he was sane. Both sides claimed victory, doubtless depending on eyesight and inclination. Also duration of skin marks would seem to depend on the sharpness and power behind the finger nail which was used. Anyway, it was something new, if not decisive, and it added color to the stage setting of the sensational murder trial.

Many years ago we wrote a story and, in order to make the heroine appear terribly sick at one juncture, we explained how she had a burning fever and at the same time how she had to be anchored to her bed to keep her from floating out on the billows of her own perspiration. We soon discovered that people did not sweat when they had a fever. We were not consistent.

Also it seemed advisable to have the heroine peg out in the closing chapter. This was more inconsistency and not agreeable to the popular imagination. In the writing spiritus we found one had to make his work dovetail with known facts in order to appear reasonable. We also found that every heroine ought to survive every obstacle and be carried away in triumph by the proper lover. Of our experience we were reminded by one of the participants in the public speaking class at the high school Thursday night. The student had a well worn speech telling about an old lady who was afraid to cross a busy street on account of teams of horses that were coming and going. In this day it seemed she should have substituted automobiles for horses. But the point was that some charitably inclined children piloted her over and enabled her to land safely on the other side, and the point was well taken and well expressed. All the speeches we heard were constructive and drew logical conclusions. We think the training builds a foundation that will prove wonderfully helpful later on. If we were not so darned old and so busy harmonizing outgo with income, we would join the class and learn some things.

It would offer as additional proof of immortality many phenomenally developed intellects of people who have departed and others of equal attainments who are yet living and doing, still struggling with life's problems, solving mysteries and extending knowledge. If great minds and big souls are to be annihilated, what was the idea in the first place? If these are to survive and continue to unfold, won't the rest of us be given a chance to develop and grow through super-natural ages?

Bruce Bliven, editor of the New Republic, is quoted as saying while in Sioux City recently that any one of five republicans mentioned for the presidency could defeat Al. Smith of New York. Al. is said to be strong with the home folks, but he doesn't seem to figure much on people outside and they don't appear to be greatly excited over him. There is a good deal of the United States outside of New York and the feeling there for a home candidate may be chilled when the rest of the country gets around to expressing itself.

There still survive isolated examples of the bitter business rivalry which existed in frontier towns as mentioned by Bess Gearhart Morrison whose father was a pioneer Methodist preacher and who is quoted by Will M. Maupin in the Omaha Bee as saying: "I was well into my teens before I realized why there were two churches in that frontier Nebraska village. It was to enable the two druggists, the two general merchants, the two lumber merchants and the two bankers to go to church on Sunday without having to speak to each other." The spirit of hatred among competing business and professional men had much to do in keeping towns from growing and amounting to something. Some towns where this condition prevailed are little bigger now than they were a week after they

BUYING CARS.
Automobile manufacturers plan to sell five millions of cars in the United States this year, according to a report. An automobile has become necessary to hasten transportation and speed up all kinds of business, but buying it solely for pleasure is unwise if one is thereby compelled to postpone essential obligations or is likely to endanger the soundness of his credit. To put off payment for a home or sidestep household or business improvements or to have to go around a block to avoid meeting a creditor who has an over-due bill, in order to acquire an automobile for the joy of riding and burning up gasoline, would seem the height of folly. One should have a car for pleasure as soon as he can afford it, but he should not yield to the temptation until he is reasonably sure he can carry the burden. If five millions of cars are to be sold in this country this year, doubtless many will be bought at the sacrifice of prior obligations or to take the place of things more urgently needed.

Education.

Wayne, Neb., Feb. 8, 1928.

Editor Herald: I notice a news item in the newspapers of February 6 to this effect: that the University of Wisconsin will drop 1,700 students of the freshman class consisting of 2,900, and that the 1,700 will not be allowed to register next fall as sophomores. The grounds of dismissal seem to be that the students are not able to carry college work or else have entered the university under the impression that they would find a "glorified playground on the campus."

The announcement raises some points of inquiry. For instance, May a university, supported by the taxpayers' money, deny the right of attendance in such wholesale fashion? May some taxpayer arise and say he is being deprived of "liberty and property without due process of law?"

Personally, I am inclined to think the University may exclude incompetent and uninterested students if care has been used in making the selection. The mere fact that an institution is supported by the public does not carry the right to use it for some other purpose than that for which it has been created.

For example, we all contribute to the support of a court house. This does not mean that the building is available for public picnics or gatherings of a miscellaneous character.

Cities sometimes maintain public swimming pools or bathing beaches. This does not forbid them to exclude incompetent swimmers from too deep water.

Another consideration arises: Perhaps the rank and file of the taxpayers will applaud the university for its action. In these days we are too apt to assume that the public is demanding certain ideals and practices in the educational system when the public has never been consulted.

Sometimes conditions are the result of the work of a relatively small group of "experts" and enthusiasts. It would be interesting at least to get the real public sentiment on some such questions as that raised by the University of Wisconsin. J. G. W. Lewis.

BETTER OFF NOW.
People are better housed, better clothed, better fed and better educated that they used to be, and they ought to be healthier and happier and live longer than former generations. Houses were seldom built successfully to resist cold in winter or heat in summer, and they had few if any conveniences. To keep one's back from frosting and his face from blistering before an insufficient stove, it was necessary to circle around like an impaled bug. Now stoves and other heating equipment are designed to distribute warmth uniformly, and one doesn't have to twirl himself like a top to insure comfort. Lighting has progressed from the pine knot and candle to use of gas and electricity. Things like fruit that used to be considered luxuries, bought only on special occasions, are now necessities and they do their full part in safeguarding health. Education is available to everybody, and it has been turned to advantage more than ever before. Increased comforts and conveniences increase the cost of living, but if they insure health and prolong life, stimulate useful service and add to human happiness, they would seem to be worth while. If they impart thrills expressed in improved service and increased production, the increased cost may easily be taken care of.

Last week a state man tested gravel that is being placed on highway No. 20 between Osmond and Plainview, finding the material to be up to standard. Excellent progress is being made on this project at this time, the crews working day and night. When completed the highway between Plainview and Omaha will be completely graveled.
A deal was made whereby E. J. Weber sold his grocery store to Clarence Miller of Norfolk. It is reported that Mr. Miller is acting for the Robert C. Large Tooth Found In Niobrara Region

Niobrara, Neb., Feb. 3.—A large molar tooth indicating that a mammoth plant eating animal lived near here at one time, is on exhibition in the Niobrara Tribune office, having been found recently and brought to the office by Harry Mabie, a workman of the Western Bridge and Construction company.
The tooth, which was found in a gravel pit seven miles east of here, measures 4 by 7 1/2 inches and weighs 4 1/2 pounds. It is believed to have belonged to some mammoth beast which roamed the marshy fastnesses of the regions, now Mississippi and Missouri river basins. The largeness of the tooth would indicate that the animal weighed several tons. The fossil appears to be perfect and well preserved and its broad and flat shape, showing it was not set deeply in the jaw, indicates that its owner was a plant eating animal. It will be sent to the state university for identification.

Why Nebraska Is Going So Good.
Omaha Bee: One who has access to the newspapers published in Nebraska is not going to become pessimistic on the prospects for the state's future. In almost every country paper that comes to our office we get news of some local project that is indicative of prosperity and growth. One of the latest of these is provided by the Oakland Independent of January 27.

It contains an account of the annual meeting of the Farmers Co-operative Union Elevator company, at which the 1927 business was reported on. During the year the concern did a gross business of $421,660, with a gross income of $26,011.80, and a net income of $12,855.55. Dividends on capital stock were paid to the amount of $3,522.75, and profit-sharing dividends of $3,530.75, while $5,802.05 was carried over to surplus. The capital stock of the concern is $50,325, with a surplus of $15,217.23, with assets, current and fixed, of $98,995.12.
Six per cent paid in earnings on capital stock, another 6 per cent returned in profit-sharing dividends, and over 10 per cent put into the surplus fund, is solid proof of a prosperous year of operation. Not a great many business enterprises in Nebraska can make an equal or better showing.
Where farmers carry on their co-operative marketing on a conservative basis, they are thriving. The experience recorded at Oakland can be duplicated many times in Nebraska.

Mrs. C. M. Hamilton and daughter, Donna Mae, and the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Hille and Ervin Hille of Norfolk, left last week for Glendale, Calif. Mr. Hamilton went there last fall. All will make their home in the west excepting Ervin Hille. The Hamiltons formerly lived in Wayne and owned a bakery here.

Fred Gath, living on a farm north of Hoskins, who suffered a fractured bone in his hand which was caught in a corn sheller several weeks ago, was taken to a Norfolk hospital last week and underwent an operation for the resetting of the broken bone which was not mending properly.
