Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 16.—Twenty per cent increases in tax assessments for the Northwestern Bell company, the American Telephone and Telegraph company were declared void today by the state supreme court.

It took similar action in another appeal from the state board of equalization, brought by Stanton county in protest against a 10 per cent assessment increase on cattle.

The court held that the same principles of law hold good in all four cases. None of the plaintiffs had proper notice, it ruled, nor the chance to present their cases properly at hearings.

This decision is expected to have considerable bearing on many tax matters over the state. Most of the public utilities companies in Nebraska received assessment increases this year.

Four classes of property are affected by the court's decision. The board of equalization had voted 10 per cent increases on cattle, 10 per cent on electric and public utility companies, 20 per cent on telephone companies, and 30 per cent on telegraph companies.

Where an increase in the assessed valuation of any class of property as returned by any county is made by the state board of equalization, without due notice to such counties and without affording sufficient opportunity to be heard," read the court's opinion, "such increase is in violation of the statute and amounts to confiscation of property, without due process."

"Although the plaintiffs did have hearings, the evidence introduced on those occasions was meager."

Many have completed corn picking and others will finish soon. Late weather has been helpful to rapid work in the field, and results have been large and gratifying. Yields are fully holding up to previous estimates.

It should be remembered that the trapping season does not start until December 1 this year. Previously the season opening November 16. Anyone following the latter date, is liable to be arrested and fined. The new date gives the Thanksgiving day, but gives no assurance that they will not be sacrificed before Christmas.

Dr. A. L. Bixby who is sojourning in the west, presents the persistent habit of a friend in punching him in the ribs whenever the latter says something which he fears will not otherwise arouse appreciative interest. Ribs fill a useful place in the world, but they were not intended as signal gongs. Anyone in the habit of drumming on other people's ribs to attract attention should try some other method.

The death of James W. Good, secretary of war, and native of Iowa, has been a source of profound regret. The secretary was a member of congress at one time, and he gained valuable experience as a basis for his service in the president's cabinet. He was a man who proved faithful to every trust, and who endeared himself to every acquaintance. His death is a severe blow to his associates and friends, and his going is a distinct loss to the country which he served.

HAPPINESS.
"To the Editor: In an editorial in last week's issue of the Herald the editor took issue with one who had said that one should derive joy from his work. He made the statement that he thought the majority of people had no sense of joy in their work, but only a feeling of satisfaction when all went well. I believe there is no place where more real joy and sheer happiness can be found than in one's work. Of course one should select work for which he is fitted, study it and try to improve it and himself, grow with it, and delight in it. St. Augustine said: 'Blessed is the man who has found his work; let him ask no other happiness.' Another said: 'If there is any joy greater than that which comes from a sense of work well done, I have not sensed it.' One can, however, take up work not of his own choosing and by making it his job, and giving his best to it, derive a real joy therefrom. When one cannot do this his case needs a diagnosis and cure. My suggestion is that he is working at too high a tension. The Old Maid."
We find no reference in which we took 'issue' with the proposition as to deriving joy from work. We merely stated that we were neither happy nor unhappy, neither having tickled emotions nor blighting misery, and we guessed that most people, in pulling their respective loads, have had about the same feeling. We did not say they should feel that way, and we do not object if one can experience more than satisfaction—if he can grin and giggle in supremest happiness all the way up the grade without even an occasional sobering spell as he hits an obstacle or reaches a sharp turn in the road. We have found no easy path in making progress. We have found no soft snags, but we have found enough rough spots, enough hazards—as the fays in golf—to prevent throbbing ecstasy. We like hardships, like vicissitudes, like taking chances, because of the relief felt after difficulties have been surmounted and ground has been gained. The relief may be interpreted by our critic as happiness or joy, but it does not grab us with such enthusiasm as the suggester. Anyway we think she misunderstands our position.

Northwestern Nebraska potato growers will score unusually good fortunes in the sale of their crop this year due to shortage in other states. Nebraska potatoes yielded more per acre and of better quality than usual. It appears that advantage has favored all kinds of crops in this state this year.

We regret that Editor F. D. Stone has found it necessary to leave his post in Hartington again to sojourn in Arizona as a safeguard to his health. However, he has promised to contribute liberally each week to his Hartington Herald and thus help enliven that always interesting newspaper. But we would suggest to Editor Stone that he make haste to recant his former denunciation of mince pie, embrace that health-building delicacy and see if he will not be so strengthened and sustained that no climate, no matter how raw, can disturb his vitality. A course in Arizona mince pie might soon send him home fortified and reinvigorated.

A contributor to John W. Carey's Rear Seat, Sioux City Journal, raises the question as to whether one may not be sticking too close to his job, neglecting due association with his family and others. Conditions often determine the advisability of a course followed. If one lacks capacity to make headway without long hours and close application, if members of a family appreciate a liberal success above mediocrity, preferring to choose their own associations and enjoyments rather than to force participation of a reluctant household head whose career might thus be disturbed to the detriment of important output, it would seem justifiable to stey with one's task as long as necessary to make the grade and meet expectations. If goals in prospect require the effort without impairing health or disturbing household serenity, there would seem no good ground for complaint.

WEAVER SPEAKS.

In the celebration of Nebraska's seventy-fifth anniversary, Governor Weaver made a speech in which he reflected full understanding and high appreciation of the state's fine qualities. He said in part:

"Nebraska has no mines of gold or silver, or precious stones, but it has a soil which will last forever with proper care and which will feed many times our present population. In addition it has a salubrious climate and a wonderful water supply.

"Civilization is not at its best where men dig in the bowels of the earth. Its richest bloom is found in the wide open spaces where the winds blow and the sun shines on God's creatures and where the food that sustains life is nature's rich gift to free men. A country like this will be taken and held by the strongest of the race, and they become the torch-bearers of civilization.

"Such a state is Nebraska. Its people value the legacy which has come from the courage, industry, sacrifice and faith of the pioneers. As worthy sons of worthy sires they will pass the great legacy on not only unimpaired but improved, to posterity. They are looking up and not down. They are optimists and not pessimists. They will do their bit in the future years in the building of a greater Nebraska which will come not alone from the development of our material wealth, but primar-

NEBRASKANS.
Stopping at Omaha recently enroute to Washington City, the mayor of Long Beach said that 5,000 of the 165,000 people in that western city moved there from Nebraska, and declared that they are uniformly desirable citizens. We are not surprised. The Pacific coast has always regarded people hailing from the middle west as contributing the finest type of citizenship, and there is no better representative of this central group of states than Nebraska. Much credit is due our climate which is no coddling influence. It does not breathe softly or brush one's cheeks with downy caresses. When it takes a notion to turn on wind, it blows hard enough to be felt and to arouse defensive energy. It gets hot and cold, rains and snows with vigor, and the result whips people into wholesome action. Thus, the climate puts iron into blood, rigidity into backbone and courage into soul. So, surpassing sturdiness is developed, and when a Nebraskan journeys out to California to see the country and investigate the climate, he is welcomed as a stalwart figure, superior mentally and physically, quite in contrast with the natives of the southwest who all their lives have been pampered by gentle zephyrs and who shudder and shrink even when they see the picture of a snowstorm or an icicle.

ly from the character and ideals of a people who believe in freedom of opportunity, equality before the law, and that the only justification for organized society is the happiness and contentment of the citizens who constitute the state."

Manufactured Demands.

Lincoln Journal: With lobbyists and their methods receiving a lot of attention at Washington, a question arises that will not down. It is: How many demands for legislation for this purpose or that are really demands from the masses? Observation is that the most people have little interest in many things that get a great deal of publicity, both oral and printed.

Ruth Hunn McCormick's remark that the demand for a department of education at Washington is a manufactured one, prompts the query. Organization, she says, has manufactured the demand. Such a department might or might not be a step in the direction of progress but the point is that the people, as a whole or as a considerable part, have not asked for it.

Much of the demand for some phases of farm relief was manufactured, not by the farmers themselves, but by politicians. There was a real need for proper legislation to aid agriculture, but the necessity felt by the farmers for such was many times magnified by politicians.

When tariff revision is the order manufactured sentiment is not hard to find. Great organizations with the sole purposes of aiding some industry or some industrialists burden congress with figures and statistical information. The consumer too often is not heard. Legislation is accomplished through organization so frequently that wonder may be expressed that much of it has not been more baneful.

Direct expression is infrequent, while expression by self styled or employed "representatives" of interests and industries is always available. Propose a change in the tariff on any manufactured or home produced article and the main issue is lost in the information and for and against arguments piled up that too often do not apply closely to the question.

Manufactured sentiment in this country too often influences representatives of the people, and that, too, frequently when its disguise is far from perfect.

Business.

Sioux City Journal: During the greater part of the year production of goods has been at a high level, yet there is no evidence anywhere according to the current issue of Guaranty Survey that there is a discouraging accumulation. In fact stocks are low in spite of the heavy production. Inventories no doubt will show this to be true, that production has run along pretty evenly with demand, and on that score sales and distribution have been eminently satisfactory.

The time has long since passed when production was expanded for above the needs of the market. Thanks to the increased efficiency of railroad service in recent years, goods now may be had on short notice, and production meanwhile can be increased overnight. This explains the change from the old days when vast stocks of goods had to be carried, both in wholesale and retail, to meet changes in the market.

By way of showing that goods have been moving in increased volume this year, it is advised by the bureau of railway economics that class I railroads for the first nine months of 1929 handled freight amounting to $69,601,678,000 net ton miles, an increase of 20,233,895,000 over the same period last year, or a gain of 5.8 per cent. This also was an increase in net ton miles of 12,285,490,000 or 3.4 per cent over the first nine months of 1927.

Freight loadings for the first 44 weeks of the year showed an increase of 1,596,025 cars over the same period last year. Loadings for the week ending November 2 reached the total of 1,071,650 cars. This was a reduction of 62,160 cars under the preceding week and one of 32,292 under the same week last year, but an increase over the same period in 1927 of 32,575.

Gratifying gains in earnings and sales for the month of October and for the preceding nine months are reported by a large number of the leading corporations. Almost without exception there were increases, which, compared with the showing last year, are most encouraging.

The Wall street flurry in stocks does not appear to have interfered in great degree with general business activity. The buying power of the country is practically what it was before the bear market started. Business is fundamentally sound with spotted conditions rare.

At Quilting Party. Mrs. R. E. Templin entertained a group of ladies last week Tuesday and again on Friday at quilting parties. After work the hostess served refreshments.

Wayne needed a hotel a few months back. There is an old, weather-beaten building on the principal street that bears a sign reading hotel. Whether it is running as a hotel yet or not we are unable to say but it is not the kind of building the energetic, prosperous people of that community would boast of as their leading hotel.

While Wayne is a very beautiful, substantial and progressive city, yet the Herald, under the management of Editor Huse, is its very best asset, for it has put Wayne on the map as the home of one of the best country weekly papers published anywhere.

On the occasion of our recent visit to Wayne the Kiwanis Club of that city, jointly with Editor Huse, entertained a large company of editors of the state in honor of the opening of the new Herald plant.

In the afternoon the editors and their wives were taken over the city in automobiles and in the evening a banquet was served in the dining room of the new Stratton hotel.
