IN THE WORLD OF SPORTS

ONE WAY TO MAKE TENNIS A "REGULAR" SPORT IS TO PERMIT TOURNAMENTS BETWEEN AMATEURS AND PROFESSIONALS—IT WORKS IN GOLF

BY PHILIP MARTIN

The tennis world may continue to revolve without open competition but if a revival of interest in the sport is required, all the governing bodies need do is sanction open tournaments.

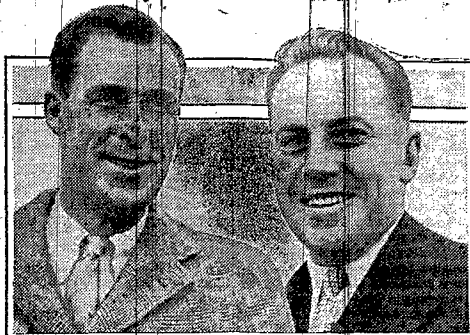

Tennis has existed for years as an amateur sport but never has been healthy as a professional child. It doesn't compare with baseball, boxing, wrestling, golf and other sports which the talented may adopt as their professions after periods of apprenticeship in the amateur ranks. And this may be the reason tennis often is called a "slimy" game, though it is known to be exceedingly strenuous and most difficult to master.

By crowning of the open tournament as they have in the past, the United States Lawn Tennis Association apparently is overlooking a fine opportunity to create new interest in the game. If this attitude were forgotten, hundreds of youngsters would be drawn into the game, knowing that after they had attained stardom they could teach, write or continue playing as professionals if they desired.

Open competition works in golf and no one has ever been known to protest. The rivalry between the professional stars and Bobby Jones, Jimmy Johnston, Cyril Tolley, Francis Ouimet and other amateurs has brought nothing but good to the game.

WITHIN recent weeks two of the world's leading amateur racketeers have announced plans to campaign as professional tennis players. They are William T. Tilden, ace of American netters for more than 10 years and Francis Hunter, Tilden's pal and doubles partner for the last four seasons. This increases America's group of professionals to four, as Karel Kozeluh and Vincent Richards accepted pro tennis several years ago.

Tennis as an entertaining sport would step up among the leaders if Tilden, Hunter, Kozeluh and Richards were permitted to meet the best amateurs. Johnny Doss, Newest recruits to the professional ranks are William T. Tilden, left, former singles champ, and Francis Hunter, right, his doubles partner.

Blomfield, Neb. A survey of Knox county farms from the director of the census at Washington reveals that 1,368 tenants are operating farms to 1,239 farms operated by owners. In 1920, 1,381 farms were operated by owners and 1,015 by tenants.

Creamery Production Is Increasing Now
Omaha: The prediction that Nebraska will rank second or third among the states in creamery production within the next few years, was made by Prof. H. P. Davis of the college of agriculture, who spoke at Omaha's chamber of commerce. Nebraska's rank now is fifth. Dr. Davis predicted Nebraska eventually will pass even Wisconsin as a butter producing state. Three hundred persons interested in the state's dairying development attended the luncheon.

Lyons Men Vanish In City Last Week
Chris and Dewey Shawver, father and son, and well known farmers from the vicinity of Lyons, had not been located the first of this week following their mysterious disappearance in Sioux City last week. The older Mr. Shawver, about 60, and his son, Dewey, about 32, are large landowners, and respected citizens. Both are married and have families.
The two men went to Sioux City Wednesday of last week to truck a load of hogs to a commission house for James Gallup and Tom Crippen, neighbors of theirs, who live northeast of Lyons. After delivering the hogs to a commission house, the men parked the truck in front of a Sioux City feed store, and near a hotel, although neither of the men had registered at any hotel in the city.
Relatives found the truck, with groceries purchased to take home, when they went to the city to investigate Saturday. No clues had been traced down by the police late Sunday, and the family feared foul play had figured in the disappearance of the two men.
