Midget Tools And Shining Gun Stocks Are Made By Craftsman

Gus Spittgerber Has Hobby In Creating Objects Of Finest Materials.

To delight a midget are the tiny ones made by hand by Gus Spittgerber in the shop which he and his brother, William Spittgerber, own on their farm ten and one half miles southwest of Wayne. Diminutive though it is, a hammer in the set is delightfully perfect, balanced, and fit for use by a shoemaker who might tap infinitesimal nails into slippers for a fairy.

"It takes patience," he admits modestly, but any observer knows that it takes a certain amount of real genius, too, to fashion such perfection from raw, uninteresting scraps of metal.

Something from Nothing. It is a delight to this craftsman to make something from what appears to be nothing at all. He has made a number of paper knives from odds and ends that look like nothing, but with finish by being real examples of craft.

The wood is forged carefully, trimmed with a file, and brought to perfection with comparative ease. Mr. Spittgerber makes these tiny tools for diversion, for his hobby is metal-working and gun-repairing and making.

"On the tracks in the shop last week hang quite an assortment of firing pieces, even an old bear gun, which the Spittgerbers are convinced must have come here with the very first settlers.

For John Sievers of Wisner, champion in mid-west blue rock shoots for several years, Mr. Spittgerber has devised a gun improvement that is most worthwhile.

It is with thought for the utility as well as the looks of his products that Mr. Spittgerber has been concerned. He used a broom handle, for example, to make a cleaning rod, but he ornamented the rod with lacquer-turned decorations.

Death of Edison

THE passing of Thomas A. Edison marks the close of a wonderfully active and useful life. He contributed more to human comfort and convenience than any other man in the world.

Edison's first work was that of a newsboy on a train in 1859. Soon afterwards he learned telegraphy, and it was not long before he showed the talent that developed and made him the world's leading inventor.

Following his death, members of his family issued a statement in answer to a question regarding the inventor's religious convictions. In effect the statement expressed the departed's belief in a supreme intelligence and confidence in another and higher existence.

Every part of the civilized world has benefited by the products of the Edison genius, and all will have a feeling of profound regret over his passing.

Absolutely Regular THE State National Bank of Wayne has a graph showing periods of prosperity and depression since 1790, and the one which has prevailed with varying severity since the Wall street blow-out two years ago, is called the secondary post-war depression, and the history of recovery from previous wars gives ample reason for the definition.

The graph also shows the soaring and lowering of wholesale prices. These prices scored a peak in 1920 not equalled since 1813 and 1814, incident to the war of 1812, and commodity values reached the lowest level in the history of the country during the free silver depression of 1896.

After the war of 1812 came a two-year period of prosperity, then a year of recession, then a little spurt of good times followed by nearly three years of tough sledding.

Back to 1813. Omaha World Herald: Among those who are not impressed by the gaucheness of modern times, who would if they could choose, prefer to live in an earlier era, is Dr. C. E. K. Mees, the English scientist. For his own part he would prefer the age of Pericles in Athens.

Pericles first came to public attention in Greece as a reformer and muckraker. He was one of those who prosecuted Cleon on a charge of bribery, after the Thracian campaign, an affair which would have turned the Ohio gang green with envy.

There is no answer. To those inclined toward the romantic, the golden ages of Greece and Egypt must indeed seem alluring.

beginning in 1835 was followed by the panic of 1837. Prosperity shot up with the cotton boom in 1838 and down with debt repudiation from 1840 to 1843.

Discovery of gold in California in 1849 doubtless prevented a usually severe depression following the Mexican war. Secession and the conflict between the north and south from 1861 to 1865 gave conditions the customary ups and downs.

Between the primary and secondary depressions following the world war was a period of what is called Colidge prosperity. It is recalled that if prosperity were running as high as indicated during the three or four years referred to, farming communities were not greatly benefited as their prices were out of proportion with those prevailing in other lines of production.

How long the secondary post-war depression with which we are now wrestling, will last is of course a question largely of conjecture. It is aggravated by a worse paralysis all over the world.

A newspaper that could satisfy everybody all the time would be a phenomenon. Some things that ought to be published are inadvertently omitted.

Addresses before the clinical congress of American surgeons in New York recently showed a growing recognition of the destructive influences of the emotions on health.

The Washington Wash

By Strickland Gillian. Washington, D. C.—One who studies in friendly, unprejudiced mood the contrasting careers of President Hoover and that of his picturesque one-time predecessor, Theodore Roosevelt, cannot help being struck by the difference.

When the two administrations come to be compared in the perspective of history, it will surprise all the unthinking of today who may still be living at that time, to discover that Mr. Hoover did many more dramatic things than Mr. Roosevelt did.

Take the abrupt, decisive action on the year's moratorium; the trip to Detroit to reason with the Legion; the conference with big bankers and politicians of both parties at the White House to take a radical step in colossal financing.

Washington is a great place for anecdotes, some of which are probably true. It is related that on one occasion when "Sockless Jerry" Simpson of Kansas (by the way, he was one of the most learned and most able men in his time) was inveighing against the government.

Here in Washington as elsewhere there is war between the proprietors of stores and their employees, especially those in the sales departments. The management spends a lot of money for the use of an advertising agency's best brains and efforts and art.

A. A. U. W. Gives Time To Study

Radio Courses Are Offered As Inducement To Busy Members Of Group.

Radio will be one of the phases of modern life especially considered by A. A. U. W. members in study groups this winter. Announcement was made at Wednesday evening meeting of radio programs which will be broadcast at stated times during the winter season. The first of these programs was given Saturday evening, and others will follow at short intervals during the winter.

Various phases of education in France were discussed by Miss Arny Chateaufort, who spent the summer in France. Particularly interesting to American women is the fact that many French children are sent to school at the age of two on two and one half years, attending sessions intended for boys and girls. The children in these groups range in age from two or three to about six years, and are trained in emotional reactions, physical habits and social conduct. They also learn to read, and master some of their fundamentals before they enter the school in which boys and girls are separated.

In the advanced schools, Miss Chateaufort observed, extreme liberality is shown to the student. In schools of university grade this is generally true of the continent, although it is not true of the more secondary schools of the French system. Free prizes are given to successful French scholars, and the ceremonies attendant on the giving are very gorgeous, according to Miss Chateaufort's observation. Even the President of the Republic is often one of the guests; and important educators, in the full regalia of their offices also attend, and take part in the programs.

Miss Chateaufort exhibited interesting objects brought back with her from France. Among them were charmingly decorated French playing cards, some Brittany dolls in native costume, and a length of dark blue fishing net from an ancient town on the Brittany coast.

Conditions and customs in Czechoslovakia, where Miss Anna Geisler visited during the summer months, interested women of the club as Miss Geisler described them. She told of living conditions, and the simple scale of living to which the residents have accustomed themselves. Frequent meals of soup, coarse bread and coffee as staple items of diet, and the rule she said for substantial food is rather expensive, and the common people have little money to spend on it.

Clothing is not so expensive in Czechoslovakia, but living expenses seem to come rather high in general, despite the help the people receive from various sources. Return of illegal immigrants to their own shores by the United States government was a matter which excited great interest, also. Miss Geisler closed her address with a round table discussion and questions.

Special study groups were announced by Miss Beulah Rundle and will include sections dealing with international relations, radio drama, and perhaps other subjects.

Frozen Fish Good Proof Of Story About Sport

One fish story that must be believed is the one about the northern pike caught at Maple Lake, Minn., by Elmer Gailey and Harvey Hostetter, for the fish was brought back, nicely frozen in a cake of ice, and placed on display in a local shop window. The gleaming fish which weighs ten pounds, has attracted a lot of attention, the latter part of the week, when it was placed on show.

Russel Bartels of Wayne, senior law student at the state university in Lincoln, has been named one of Nebraska's five young men to be candidates for Rhodes scholarship. The state committee selects two from the five to be candidates. The others named as applicants are Eugene Robb and Victor Seymour of Lincoln, Walter Huber of Irvington and Henry Gund of Blue Hill.

Modern Woodmen of America plan a loyalty campaign in Wayne Friday, November 7, at Hotel Stratton. About 500 from Dakota, Dixon, Cedar, Thurston and Wayne counties will attend. Head Counsel A. R. Taibot will be the principal speaker.

ADVISES FEEDING CORN TO LAMBS

Lincoln, Neb.—Prof. M. A. Alexander, of the Agricultural college, advises Nebraska farmers who contemplate running lambs in cornfields this fall that they should be fed corn while in the fields. The college faculty member said lambs will get along quite satisfactorily on the growth in cornfields and volunteer wheat until the supply is so small that they do not get a complete fill each day.

Alexander added that the addition of corn will cut down the feeding period necessary to finish the lambs after the grass is depleted.

FALL TRANSPLANTING IS FOUND ADVISABLE

Lincoln, Neb.—Prof. W. H. Yocum of the Agricultural college, says that fall is the best time for transplanting in the garden. He says the soil is warm and in good working condition at that time. Now that the weather is agreeable, it is a good time to do transplanting, Yocum believes. In the spring the soil will be stocky and the weather cold.

In choosing a time for correct transplanting, he advises that plants should be moved when there is least demand for water.

Warn Gardeners To Get To Work

Deferred Frost Gives Long Autumn Season To Begin Tasks Of Season.

Friday night's light frost heralded the winter season rather mildly, but seasoned gardeners are sure that the first frost is merely a warning to prepare gardens for the winter season. Gladiolus corms, ground as soon as their leaves have dried. Moist soil must be shaken from the roots, which should be placed in the air to dry before going to an airy, dry space in the cellar, where they can winter.

Dahlia tubers may be left in the ground safely until frost. If they can be removed from the ground without breaking apart, they will keep better. Stems should be cut a few inches above the roots. The tubers should be buried in dry sand in the cellar, about six inches of sand being left above and below the tubers.

For Amaranth Blossoms. Gay amaranth blossoms are a rare delight during the winter months. The way to assure them is to begin right now. Take plants in from their out of door summering place, and gradually dry the soil by reducing the amount of water. Along toward the latter part of January they will become active and they may be brought out at that time from the cool, dry place where they have been stored. They must be watered freely to induce large blooms.

If you like to pick pussy willows in the spring, florists recommend autumn planting of a salix caprea. You will be surprised at the rapid growth a willow tree will make, and the supply of fuzzy catkins early in the spring will delight you. If rabbits are at home in your neighborhood, protect the lower part of the young trees with quarter inch mesh wire. Rabbits, it seems, are particularly fond of young willow stems.

Fewer Hogs in Germany.

Omaha Journal-Stockman: Some emphasis has been put on increasing hog production in Europe, but the United States department of commerce reports that in Prussia which produces 70 per cent of Germany's hogs, there is a 35 per cent reduction in brood sows. The production cycle seems swinging downward in Germany at the time it is swinging upward in the United States. Which isn't bad news for American producers because Germany is our heaviest potential importer of hog products.

Terracing Proving Advantage On Farm

Lincoln, Neb.—After trying out terraces on a 20-acre field for two years, Albert Engles is now building 17 terraces, totaling more than five miles in length, on his farm near Auburn. Engles is now terracing 120 acres of hillside that is in pasture and alfalfa.

Before the first work was done two years ago the 20-acre field had been quite badly eroded by rain water. Engles expects to keep all of the soil fertility he has built up in his pasture sod and alfalfa field by terracing the land before it is broken up. The conservation of rainfall, particularly during the spring and at times of heavy rains, is one of the most important advantages of terraced hillside, Mr. Engles says. He thinks he will need all of the moisture he can conserve in order to produce a crop in dry years on the newly broken sod and alfalfa land.

I. D. Wood, agricultural extension engineer of the College of Agriculture at Lincoln, helped Mr. Engles lay out the first terraces two years ago, and again recently when he set the stakes for the 17 terraces. Engles is doing the work himself, using horses and a six-foot grader. The terracing job will cost him practically nothing in cash outlay.

Engles maintained the terraces in his 20-acre field by going over them once each year with a road grader. He has been able to farm over them with practically every kind of farm implement.

The hills where the new terraces are being built have a drop of about 5 per cent or one foot of drop in 20 feet down the hill. Wood laid out the 17 terraces so that there is only a five-foot vertical drop between the terraces. Each terrace also slopes six inches per hundred feet toward the side of the field to give a slight runoff for heavy rains. Water that does get away will run down the road side or pasture where it will do very little soil erosion damage.

Dominated by Fears.

A. F. Allen in Sioux City Journal: Mankind ever has been intimidated by its fears. Fear is one of the determining factors contributing to what we are pleased to call Depression, formerly characterized less euphoniously as Hard Times. It is Fear, more than any other one factor, that has slowed down and is now retarding the pace of business. Timidity has got into the minds and hearts of all of us, with a few exceptions of which rough and ready Gov. "Bill" Murray, of Oklahoma, is a type. Because of fear, money, the timidest thing on earth, has made itself inaccessible. Capital is exceedingly wary of investment, will take no chances. Industry will not engage in new enterprises. People who have idle money, or savings, know not what to do with it. Fear has made them distrustful of banks and of every sort of investment. The working-man who has a job is fearful of wage cuts, apprehensive of the loss of his job. The man who is jobless is confronted by the possibility of hunger and poverty. The employer fears that he will not be able to meet his obligations, to pay his taxes and interest charges. Everyone fears that in the universal dullness he will lose his accumulated savings. Because of Fear, people have ceased to buy except to supply pressing and vital needs.

Fear grips the people of this country with a hold of iron. We are told that what ails us is lack of confidence, which is only another way of saying that Fear oppresses us. What is to restore confidence? What is to relax the grip of Fear upon us? How are we to get things going again? Where must the start be made, and who will make it? The answer to these questions will be the solution of the problem that for the moment has us flooded and taking the count.

Eleven million women in the United States are said to be gainfully employed. Women's place is in the home—especially on the evenings when she brings in her pay check.—Detroit News.
