FRANCIS FLOOD SPOKE TUESDAY TO FARM GROUP

Pacific Stock Rotation Is Among Observations Of Globe Trotter. SHOWS HIS OWN MOVIES

Francis Flood, who is travel editor of the Nebraska Farmer at Lincoln, was accompanied to Wayne by T. A. Leadley, managing editor of the same paper; R. V. Koupal, editor and manager of the Nebraska Merchant and Trade Review, and Charles H. Stockdale, circulation manager of the Nebraska Farmer and Trade Review.

Mr. Flood's talk concerned the islands of Borneo, a southern Pacific island about the size of Texas, or of Kansas, Nebraska and South Dakota combined. He and his companions traveled through this territory last year, meeting up with headhunters, poisonous snakes, tropical jungles, excessive heat and quantities of rain.

Although the explorers went to Borneo in what was alleged to be the dry season, they encountered rain almost every 24 hours, a circumstance which did not add to the comfort of travel through warm jungles not more than 50 miles from the equator.

Strings of Trophies. In Borneo villages, the speaker explained, there are only a few houses, usually only one large hall in which all the families reside.

The late style show held in connection with programs at the Gay theatre last week was considered a success in both attendance and interest.

Grand Jury Reports. Following an investigation into the behavior of Omaha, a grand jury found much to commend and little to condemn. The statement of the jury reported that a lot of false rumors had been circulated to the detriment of Omaha's reputation.

Winter Vacation Pleases Omans Just Back From Western Coast

Winter is the time to take a vacation motor trip, say the Clyde Omans who returned Thursday night from an 18 weeks' sojourn in the west. Explaining their statement, they said that in the winter time there is little or no dust, the roads are not cluttered with tourist traffic, hotels are uncrowded and accommodations are let at a minimum price all of which adds to the attractions of a winter trip. When Mr. and Mrs. Oman left Wayne November 19 they ran into blizzards and high winds which left a trail of ice in northeast Nebraska. No ice was encountered by the travelers, who, nevertheless, bought a scoop shovel and added it to their traveling gear. Not once was it needed, although the two Nebraskans found snow on almost every mountain pass they crossed, even in sunny California.

Visit Many Friends.

The first of a number of stops with relatives and friends was a ten-day visit in Worland, Wyoming, with their daughter. Road conditions in this section of the country were good, a promise of the excellent hard-surfaced thoroughfares which motorists find almost all over the country now.

At Carmel's Hump Pass in the northwest the Omans were unable to make a crossing because 53 inches of snow had descended from the heavens and stacked itself up in the roadways. Detoured to Sand Point pass, the middlewesterners were fatigued at the sight of huge drifts of white, feathery snow on every fence post, twig and eminence.

Enjoy Winter Scenes.

So quiet is the air that the snow falls and stays in heaps, unmoved by a breath of air. On fence posts, for example, the snow stands in heaps two and three feet high, the top of the little drift slid over, cap-shaped, where the weight of the moisture could no longer stand. Saugumie Pass, which must be crossed by westward bound travelers, has been straightened and smoothed out to eliminate many of its old thrills, as well as dangers. Great snow ploughs plied the pass road all winter long, shoveling away the moist snow which fell. After the ploughs had passed, drifts of snow as high as the walls of a room were left on the road sides.

Indian Black Elk Hero Of Verses

Neihardt's New Book Gets Good Review In Metropolis.

Interesting to those who remember John G. Neihardt as a boy in "The West" will be the New York Times review of the poet's newest book, "Black Elk Speaks." Poet Neihardt and his two daughters were in Wayne last spring just before they went to Manderson to collect material for the book herein reviewed.

Like the soldiers of the G. A. R., the Indian veterans of the border skirmishes and wars of the '60s and '70s are fast becoming, in Black Elk's phrase that is redolent of the spirit of Ecclesiastes, "grass upon the hills." Only a few years remain for the youngest of them; hence the inestimable value of an amanuensis like John G. Neihardt. A poet of that "splendid wayfaring" of border life in the days when the hundredth meridian was still a tallismen to the rebellious small boy of the American East, Mr. Neihardt has qualifications above the average for this sort of inspired ghost writing.

Black Elk, whom Mr. Neihardt sought out on a pine barren near Manderson, South Dakota, was an enemy of Plenty-Coups, for the Sioux, of which tribe Black Elk was a holy man, hated the Crows. The Crows, in the fights that saw the defeat of General Crook and the obliteration of General Custer in the '70s, were on the side of the white men, and in Plenty-Coups's story there is an account of those catastrophes from the Crow standpoint. Black Elk, through an interpreter, flashes light from another angle on these controversial battles. Thus, these two outstanding memoirs of Indian life on the plains in the last century complement each other at a very important point.

Churches Are Beautiful.

Many beautiful churches on the coast attract large numbers of attendants. In Seattle, for example, there is a Presbyterian church which has 4,000 members, the largest membership roster it is said, of any in the world. The Rev. Matthews is pastor of this congregation. The new Methodist church in Hollywood is another large and attractive place of worship. And, of course, Almee Temple McPherson Hutton draws great crowds of worshipers to her doors. From their visit to the temple, the Omans drew the conclusion that Mrs. Hutton is an important force in the life of the city. She feeds large numbers of the poor from her soup kitchens and collects great sums of money for charity in the course of her work.

At Forest Lawn mausoleum Mr. and Mrs. Oman and Will Cunningham saw the new reproduction in stained glass of Leonardo Da Vinci's famous painting, "The Last Supper." So marvelously executed is this picture that large pilgrimages are expected.

Huntington Park library is another southern California institution that is well worth visiting, Mrs. Oman notes. The Huntington estate gave the money for the establishment of this free public institution, and has endowed it for the future, as well.

Attended Big Picnic.

Wayne county folk gathered at Long Beach this winter for a county picnic, at which Mr. and Mrs. Oman enjoyed visiting many former residents. While in Los Angeles they also saw Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ingham and J. C. Forbes, Mrs. Beaman's father and sister, who are living in Alhambra, and the W. O. Hanssens.

Delightful as the west was, the travelers were glad to start home by way of the Needles. They came through the enchanting old towns of Santa Fe and Albuquerque and over Raton Pass north. One interesting stop was made at the Grand Canyon, which they entered as the sun was setting. At Colorado Springs, they visited Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Dean briefly before starting over the eastward route.

Food and rates were cheaper in Colorado than in any other part of the country and travel was pleasant. On the entire journey, the Omans found people somewhat discouraged about present conditions, but hopeful that the future will bring better days.

Alfalfa Promises Good Return.

Omaha Journal Stockman: Farmers in the western part of the Corn Belt will be quick to recognize the promising outlook for alfalfa seedings this year. Seed of good quality never has been cheaper, and in many sections the supply of moisture in the soil to give the tiny plants a good start rarely has been greater. Moreover, a dwindling acreage and low yields resulting from drought and disease in some sections have lowered production of alfalfa hay and caused it to become relatively high in price in comparison with other farm feeds. Little can be added to the volumes that already have been written regarding the virtues of this crop. Primarily it is a soil builder, and the hay is excellent feed. Rations for all kinds of live stock which are high in carbohydrates may be balanced with alfalfa, and a large saving made in the amounts of high-protein feed which must be purchased. Any excess of alfalfa acreage which is not needed for hay may be grazed. The crop makes outstanding hog pasture. In addition, farmers should not forget that areas seeded to alfalfa are removed from the production of grain crops in many lines of which a surplus already exists.

not so Crazy Horse: The young Black Elk's admiration for Crazy Horse is very plain; he boasts that the Washichus could not kill him in battle, and had to resort to duplicity to "rub him out." Black Elk's father also admired Crazy Horse, and the family left the Soldier's Town to join the great man in fight, "because there was no other way to keep our country." And because of this decision Black Elk saw the fight with Crook, and the massacre of Custer's men. Black Elk's account of this celebrated battle is fully as bloody as that old chromo that was the standard adornment of bar room windows before Mr. Volsted inspired a song writer to offer to give a dry American back to the Indians.

"You can see that I am only a pitiful old man after all," Black Elk remarks to Mr. Neihardt, but this "pitiful old man" is a philosopher with a serenity to be envied. He reveals himself as a sort of Indian Platonist: "Crazy Horse dreamed and went into the world where there is nothing but the spirits of all things. That is the real world that is behind this one, and everything we see here is something like a shadow from that world." And the Indian Platonist is also a critic of greed: "I could see that the Washichus did not care for each other the way our people did before the nation's hoop was broken. They would take everything from each other if they could and so there were some who had more of everything than they could use, while crowds of people had nothing at all and maybe were starving." This observation was provoked by Black Elk's trip with the Buffalo Bill show to Victorian England, where he performed before the Queen herself. Victoria told him that if he were a Canadian Indian she would not permit him to be used as entertainment. The Indian criticism of gold fever has been mentioned; the buffalo meant far more to Black Elk than any "yellow metal"—and perhaps the nations that are breaking their necks for a favorable balance of trade in terms of this metal will on the advent of Utopia agree with him.
