TELLS CLUB OF EGYPTIAN TRIP

Dr. Kathryn Haganir Gives Account Of Cruise In The Mediterranean.

Life on shipboard and the glories of modern Egypt were described by Dr. Kathryn Haganir of Wayne college faculty in her talk before Kiwanis club Monday noon.

Dr. Haganir's trip was made aboard an oil-burning freighter, American-owned, which was carrying autos and machinery for the oil fields.

To those not familiar with life aboard ship, as well as those to whom it brought back enjoyable memories, Dr. Haganir's descriptions were of interest.

The ship on which Dr. Haganir crossed had an interesting history, and an interesting future as well.

Two Weeks In June. Half of June pushed devouring drought entirely out of the picture in northeast Nebraska.

Fistic Combat. We did not listen to details of the fistic battle Friday night, and we do not know whether it was a recherche event—that is, whether it was carried out with great elegance and refinement—or not.

Noted Poet Here. Carl Sandburg, famous American poet, who was an attraction at the Wayne State Teachers college on Thursday evening, called on the Herald in the afternoon, and he gave us the impression that while he is in sympathy with many of the endeavors of the Washington administration, he is averse to destroying food or to any policy involving regimentation of food production.

We are glad Mr. Sandburg called and give us their reactions to the swiftly moving events of the world, even though we cannot always agree with them.

Dr. Haganir's dragon, which is an interpreter or agent, roused her early in the morning after reaching Cairo, The National museum here has finest collection of Egyptian treasures in the world, and contains most of the valuables from King Tut-ankh-Amen's tomb.

Now he lectures at teachers' colleges in Kansas and Nebraska during the summer, and to with an assembly service out of Chicago and Rochester, N. Y., in the winter.

In the basement of his Beatrice home he has experimented and built up some unique machinery for entertainment purposes which is also of scientific value.

JUNE WITNESSES UNUSUAL NUMBER OF BRIDAL PAIRS

SEEMS to us there are more June weddings than usual—perhaps an evidence that good times are arising around the corner.

Matrimony involves responsibility that both parties to a contract must share equally to insure success. Neither can suspend exercise of effort and judgment and expect the other to carry all the burdens.

The way for a couple to avoid the always popular divorce court is to be mutually sympathetic, counsel together and take a lively and helpful interest in each other's ambitions—providing they are not too egregiously foolish to get by the rule of reason. In case an apparent error has thus seeped into one of the brain cells of either, the same should be quietly argued into extinction.

Of supreme importance, couples must think and pull together, blunder together, rise or fall together, ever striving to attain the unattainable and working in happy accord while doing it. A couple may be rich in the spirit of cheerful good nature if not in the possession of worldly goods.

His skill was soon recognized and he was transferred to the ordnance department where he worked with guns and machinery until his honorable discharge May 19, 1919. He first went to Fort Riley, Kan., and then was in several camps in his work. He spent most of the time at Camp Dix, N. J. After returning home Mr. Splittgerber followed his mechanical trade in connection with his farming.

ARREST SNIPER HERE TUESDAY

George Crowdy Denies Ill Intentions In Escapade Sunday In Omaha.

"A man must have been drinking to do a thing like that." Thus spoke George Crowdy, 29-year-old Bennington man who was taken into custody from the Floyd Richardson farm near Wayne Tuesday afternoon, in connection with a bullet attack near Omaha last Sunday evening.

Crowdy was sought as the sniper who terrorized a group of Irvington residents, shooting at them without warning on the highway four miles west of Florence, and later attacking Omahans near Hummel park.

He was object of a concentrated man-hunt Monday as sheriff's deputies traced a brown Ford roadster to a point six miles northeast of Blair before losing the trail. It was thought that the driver was heading for Minnesota.

He's a quiet sort of fellow, this Crowdy, steady looking with long wavy hair combed straight back, brown eyes, and dressed in overalls and blue shirt when apprehended. He answered questions unemotionally, without rancor, seeming to be surprised only by his own alleged misdoings.

He has served time in Douglas county jail for stealing of gas, and was identified by the Irvington group from photographs on file at police headquarters.

G. F. Nye, Douglas county attorney, and Ralph W. Jones and Walter Young, deputy sheriffs from Omaha, arrived about 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon and questioned Crowdy, obtaining a signed statement from him. Crowdy was taken back to Omaha about 8 o'clock that evening, handcuffed, charged with shooting with intent to kill. Officers sought to establish if he knew the people at whom he is alleged to have shot, and if there was a robbery motive behind the act.

Crowdy told a detailed story of the week-end's happenings, under promptings from the Omaha officials. He is 29 years old, unmarried, calls Bennington his home but has worked on the Will Harrigfeld farm two and one-half miles east of Emerson for about two months, helping to build a house.

Crowdy said that he left Emerson about 11 o'clock Sunday morning, stopping at Herman to see his uncle, H. O. Williamson, stopping at a Lyons cafe, and at Blair to see his mother and father but not finding them at home. He was alone, driving his own car, a brown Ford roadster, 1929 model, with two new horns in front which made the car easy to identify. License was 1-67185 and motor number A1539742. He had with him a 32 automatic pistol of foreign make which he had purchased from Helve Knudsen of near Blair about two months before. The gun was back of the cushions on a small shelf, was loaded with 10 shells and he carried extra shells in his pocket, Crowdy stated. He reached Blair about 6 o'clock, went on to a

Expect Approval Contracts Soon

New Ruling Is Made About Hog Litters Farrowed During Year.

Payments on the corn-hog contracts have not yet been given final approval, Agricultural Agent G. H. Liggett states, but they should be soon and payments should then follow.

Farmers signing corn-hog contracts need not worry about the number of litters they farrow in 1934, according to ruling 61. The ruling states definitely, however, that the farmer must keep within his allotment of pigs raised from the 1934 litters.

Removal of the requirement regarding number of litters farrowed will permit those who have already farrowed more than their adjusted number to sign up the contract without technically violating it before they sign. The ruling will also permit those who have poor luck with their pigs this year to farrow more fall litters in order to reach the 75 percent allotment of their hog base.

Because of adjustments necessary to meet the county quotas, some farmers now have more pigs than they are allowed under the adjustment. Instructions from the corn hog section are that no one should kill the extra pigs at the time of signing the contract. No statement has been made regarding the final disposal of the extra pigs.

Adjustments in corn acres for this county will change the total number of acres a farmer can have for grain this year, but none of the corn which is planted need be destroyed. The extra acres can be grown for fodder. With the exception of those who took out practically 30 percent of their corn base as contracted acres, all other farmers can keep the same number of contracted acres and change the percentage figure on the contracts. For example, if a man with a 100 acre corn base has taken out 25 acres as contracted acres and he gets cut five per cent to 95 acres for a base, his 25 acres become 23.3 per cent instead of 25 per cent of his base. The benefit payment will be made on not to exceed 30 per cent of the adjusted corn base.

Government Functioning

DAVID Lawrence, sagacious political observer, reviews at considerable length the legislative and bureaucratic experiments that have been going on in Washington during the last year, and points out that in the feverish haste to bring the country out of the dumps, the different branches of the government have not functioned in the usual manner, the constitution often suffering in the name of an emergency. A year ago congress acted largely as a mere rubber stamp, and the president, surrounding himself with a bunch of so called intellectuals, did not always know provisions found in proposed legislation. Mr. Lawrence insists that voters should elect congressmen who are disposed and able to take their full share of responsibility, pledging themselves to stand by the president when they think he is right and opposing him when they think he is wrong. "Faith in the righteousness, the honesty of purpose, and the tolerance of those who govern us is the central theme of representative government," say Lawrence, and then he offers these concluding paragraphs: "It is the true meaning of the words uttered at the outset of our republic that governments, after all, derive their just powers to govern from the consent of the governed."

"The constitution has provided a legislative branch, a judicial branch and an executive branch of the government. They are intended to balance one another and to act as a check, the one upon the other. "In this trinity we have built the greatest republic in the world. By preserving our separation of powers, we shall make our dual system of federal and state sovereignties a revitalized example to all civilizations of the benefits of autonomy and self-government."

Weather Problem

THE Fremont Tribune suggests that the unusually widespread drought from which some parts have recently been relieved, emphasizes the problem of raising crops in frequent conflict with contrary elements as more important and more vexing than any of the numerous other problems with which people have to contend. The Tribune concludes: "The corn belt's sufferings this spring remind one of those eerie predictions some geologists have made—that the greater part of the interior of America is destined, some day, to become semi-arid and barren, a nearly waterless region, where things will not grow and men will not be able to live except as scattered nomads. "To be sure, not all geologists make this prediction, and those who make it put the time of this change far in the future—which, to a geologist, means anywhere from 50,000 years up; so that no one need worry for fear that the hot, dry weather which is blighting the crops today is the forerunner of the desert's arrival in Iowa. "Nevertheless, these stories of parching drought and devastating heat make one think about it. And they lead one to wonder how long it will be before men get sense enough to settle their differences with one another and present a united front toward their real enemies—the implacable and unrelenting forces of nature. "For these troubles of the present day—over-production, marketing difficulties, tariff restrictions, falling prices, and the like—are, after all, secondary. Settle them all, and there still remains the task of forcing the earth to yield enough to feed her teeming millions. "That is the oldest of all society's problems, and it will probably be the last to be solved."

Almost Tragic

IT is sometimes almost tragic to be cocksure in politics. Old-timers will remember the campaign involving a contest between Geo. W. E. Dorsey, running for reelection to congress, and O. M. Kem who had been nominated for the office by the populist convention. Both candidates stumped the big Third district, and it is recalled that Dorsey regarded Kem's candidacy with a good deal of haughty disdain, belittling his chances and indicating that all remaining to be done was to announce the result. The morning after election Dorsey discovered that his insignificant opponent had captured the congressional shoes with a large majority to spare. Congressman Kem did not make any stir in Washington, nor did he accomplish less than many other members who made greater pretense. He wore no whiskers or sartorial oddities to make him conspicuous. In Washington he burned no red fire, but lived in a way to save his money, issuing at the end of his term with a comfortable cash balance. He did no harm if he did no good. It is said the steel strike did not materialize because a secret ballot revealed overwhelming opposition to it among employees. An effort is to be made to settle differences through the assistance of the labor department at Washington. The dispute seems to involve privileges rather than wages and hours, and probably workmen do not relish joining the already too large army of unemployed in the hope of adjusting a disagreement over ways and means. They show sanity in figuring that this is no time to quit work.

Old And New Way

Before advent of the radio, political party leaders staged frequent public meetings addressed by speakers who were conversant with current questions and who marshaled all the facts and logic at their command to uphold convictions. A speaker of unusual note brought many from the surrounding countryside—a considerable inconvenience before the days of automobiles to gain first-hand information. The public speaker traveling from one central point to another, was a chief source of knowledge and inspiration in the old days. Notwithstanding multiplied conveniences of travel in late years, members of a family may now sit at home and hear speakers of highest rank discuss questions of public interest. The mediocre political orator of former years could not muster a crowd in these days if he tried, and usually he doesn't try. The radio has supplanted the old-time political meeting, and the result is more information at less cost in effort and time. The result is more widely diffused knowledge of current events with no advantage accruing to one group above another. Thus, a family in the most sequestered location is able to learn quite as much about world affairs as the family in a large center of population. Moreover, the one most isolated from the world may gain a larger understanding of a subject and give it closer analysis than the one whose attention is frequently diverted by the hurry and anxiety of trying to pay the landlord's toll and otherwise trying to live from hand to mouth. It is our guess that the hinterland is the place to go for what is going on in the world, thanks to the radio.

one time and performed sundry other mental tasks. Doubtless all the time the poetic muse was working and getting ready for expression. Often the one who becomes outstanding in any field has had a hard row to hoe. Trials that test one's metal seem to fashion into the foundation something that gives later courage and powers of achievement. The burnishing and stimulating effects of the depression may prove helpful if one has enough time left to turn them to advantage.

HOME

Home is the most valuable American institution. It should be and usually is the cornerstone of every country's civilization. Home is the citadel of humanity's purest loyalty. In simple devotion, in noblest gratitude, in unselfish sacrifice and mutual helpfulness, in housing the most cherished memories, it is heaven's greatest gift. It proclaims evidence of a soul. It steels the man and woman and child to endure the buffeting of the world, and around it clusters the most precious and most stimulating memories. Like one's religion, one's home has been deemed inviolable. American tradition has stigmatized one who has abused the home or who has treated its sacredness with indifference as an enemy of society. Yet we read that in Russia the home is often cruelly crushed as a necessary service to the state. An instance is told of a school girl who was rewarded by the soviet government for reporting to the authorities that her father and some other peasants had converted to their own use some corn belonging to the collective farm. Driven no doubt by need to use corn which they had raised and which had been confiscated, were the peasants more guilty of wrong than the Russian government? Realizing the communistic oppression, can you imagine the state of mind of a child shading in the product of peasant toil, turning her father over to the authorities and accepting a reward for doing so? That is Russia where the home and the church seem to be marching to their doom before the inexorable juggernaut of the communist terror. If a Russian child thinks a parent is doing wrong, why not dissuade him rather than betray him into the chains of a conscienceless system? Let us preserve the American home and hold it aloof from influences that have chilled spirit and deadened hope in some countries of the old world.

Insulation Board may be used on the walls and ceilings of every room in the house. It may be used to cover cracked plaster, to line closets and pantries, to enclose built-in cupboards, to insulate attics, to make a sun room of the porch, to partition large rooms, to transform a cold garage into a warm one, to make a basement laundry, workshop or playroom.

We make and fit, very economically, screens that actually keep out flies—screens that will last as long as you have your home.

We have a complete stock of white cedar and creosoted, life-time posts. Using every other one with a steel Red Top post makes an excellent stock fence.

Zinc Insulated Royal Fence is made of the highest quality of materials that long experience and the most up-to-date mills can produce and is sold with a definite guarantee to equal or outlast in length of service any other fence made of the same size wire and used under the same conditions. We invite you to see our fine stock of this quality wire.

Heath and Milligan Super Spar Varnish is designed for use where the surface is exposed to water, rapid changes in temperature, and direct rays of the sun. It will fully protect your front door, porch ceiling, window sills, drain boards, porch furniture, and any surface that needs an extra-durable varnish.

There's a Heath and Milligan quality paint, varnish or stain for every surface and every purpose.

Garden pieces cost but little in proportion to their utility—and their variety of design is almost inexhaustible. See our attractive stock of chairs, lattice, bird baths, bird houses, etc., or our shop can make any design for any special purpose.

Let us estimate any insulation, repair or improvement that you have under consideration. We'll tell you the whole cost quickly and you will be under no obligation of any kind. Why not call right away—our telephone number is at the bottom of this space.

World Peace Is Wonderful Ideal

F. S. Berry Sees Need To Adopt Plan To Safeguard Americanism.

Flag day address was given to Sioux City D. A. last Thursday by F. S. Berry of Wayne. Excerpts from the talk follow: "We have all had our reverses and our troubles; but what happens to us as individuals is of small moment comparatively speaking; but the kind of a government and the kind of a society we leave behind us for our posterity to live under and in is a big thing and a mighty important thing. The old spirit of sacrifice for country and for the public good needs to be revived; we have suffered a patriotic slump as well as a financial slump. If as a people we are unwilling to endure the hardships and difficulties called for by the times and are only looking for the easy way out for ourselves, and are only willing to build a mere temporary structure for our own benefit at the expense of those to follow us, instead of building a permanent foundation in the spirit of the forefathers at our own expense for the benefit of the generations to come, then we are traveling down the westward slope and the prophecy of McCaulley and Carlyle that this republic would not stand the test of time may eventually come true and the history of the ages that men gain liberty only to destroy and lose it will repeat itself.

"We have been and are living in a state of uncertainty and anxiety; that frame of mind is justified by events; government suspicions business and business distrusts government which is unfortunate; in the present struggle in our political and economic life business may well be highly patriotic and government should be an impartial referee, which calls for a type of men in public office who are nation minded and care only for their country and nothing for their political future. Many of us have become filled with fear and despair and have lost hope in our institutions and our ability to solve our problems. That frame of mind is unjustified and unwarranted but always more or less exists in every depression; it is rapidly forgotten when conditions improve as they always have and will again. With only about 7 percent of the people of the world we own more than half the world's wealth; we produce about half the world's food and minerals; in industry we are supreme; that the common man had opportunities here and our standard of living far above the rest of the world is well attested by the fact that people came here from other countries until they had to be excluded by immigration laws; 60 per cent of our farms are not mortgaged at all and probably 50 per cent of our urban dwellers live in their own homes; millions of our common people have savings of money and securities, and life insurance protection and investments. In the depression of fifty years ago it was freely predicted, even by high government authority, that further expansion was impossible; that there was and always would be a surplus; that an era of low prices had come to stay and future profits impossible; that there was little in sight for either capital or labor. Those predictions were followed as you know by years of unprecedented development and prosperity; any one today who thinks we are hopelessly sunk overlooks the potential power of America and the initiative and genius of its citizens.

"I am not unmindful of our problems and things which threaten us from without and within. We are in a state of flux—a state of change and are going somewhere, at least temporarily. There are some things in political philosophy and economics and life which are fundamental. We must hold fast to those fundamentals and proceed along the line of reason founded upon justice. Zeal without fundamentals, no matter how laudable, is but a runaway engine and either dies out for want of steam or wrecks things at the end of its course.

Golden Wedding Observed Here

From the beginning of his farming career in this county, Mr. Gildersleeve has raised many cattle and hogs—in fact, he has fed every year since about 1886. He believes in feeding all the grain and corn he can raise, plus a great deal more. Every year except a couple, he has shown a good profit on his cattle. The early years were more successful, however, for there was more of a margin between price paid for the stock and the market price. Greatest profit was during the war years.

there are some things we must view and some problems which must be solved from the standpoint of practical realism. Our policy of national defense is one of them. The disarmament conference at Geneva failed of any practical result because of well known reasons. Too many nations are not satisfied with things as they are; they are still aggressive, are over-populated, have ambitions for territorial expansion and there are still deep seated race hatreds. Each would be glad to see other nations reduce their armament and keep on building up its own. Everyone knows that the policy of this country and its people is to discourage and keep out of war. There can be no honest difference of opinion among our citizens except over the best and safest plan to carry out that policy. We must face facts as they are and not as we might wish them to be and act accordingly. Many honest and conscientious people in this country are being deceived by clever and designing propaganda from without and within. I hope they will check their source of information and from whence it comes. There are entirely too many designing and unscrupulous people in this country of foreign connections and sympathies subtly spreading their propaganda in fertile soil who would not help to save us but would gladly take up arms against us and attempt to destroy our institutions. No one wants over-preparedness but only a reasonable frame-work of strength as a warning against assault from without or within and sufficient to end trouble quickly if it should come."

to view the pyramids, and upon arriving Dr. Hugarin was reminded of Napoleon's words to his army as he stood before the Pyramids—"Gentlemen, 40 centuries are looking down on you!" Modern engineers wonder at the building of these huge burial places of the Pharaohs—with no stone available these kings sent miles down the river and brought back huge blocks of stone, transporting them up the Nile on barges and hauling them the nine miles across the desert.

The traveler's first camel ride came at this time—she mounted on a surly animal which the driver switched from the rear, and the owner tugged at from in front. Her dogman mounted a small donkey which he completely covered with his huge bulk, only the ears of the plodding little animal showing.

The masses of Cairo should be visited on Saturday, the Mohammedan sabbath. Visitors are given sandals to wear and are taken into a great dimly-lighted cavern decorated in gold and mosaics. Only furnishing is the pulpit in which a priest stands to read services. The floors are covered with enormous Oriental rugs and as one wanders through the interior, he is apt to stumble over a Mohammedan kneeling at prayers.

Dr. Hugarin was introduced by Dr. U. S. Conn.

Arrest Sniper Here Tuesday

Arrest Sniper Here Tuesday (Continued from Page One) cabin camp to see the proprietor and then to a road house where he consumed three bottles of spiked beer and four or five whiskeys, costing him about $5. A blonde woman had been with him. About 10 o'clock he left the road house heading towards Omaha on U. S. highway No. 73. Then, he added, "the beer and whiskey 'hit him.' He came upon the car containing Mr. and Mrs. John Lauritsen and daughter, Doris, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hansen, all of Irvington, who were returning home from East Omaha. Crowley faintly remembers a car passing him and swinging in close and he "must have gotten mad." This was about four miles west of Florence on highway No. 36. Crowley took the gun out from behind the cushion after the other car had passed and remembers shooting at the tires, firing low, using his left hand. He fired about 10 times and then followed the car which had turned into the Eagle Sanitary dairy grounds, one tire punctured after shot had bored through the license plate. Crowley got out of his car and re-loaded the gun, firing several times in the air as he left. He didn't recall shouting "Let's have it out right now. Call a dozen sheriffs. I'm not afraid of them."

According to the Irvington party, the man who attacked them had driven up behind, bare-headed, and shouted something unintelligible, then dropped behind. A moment later came a fusillade of shots. Crowley says he left the dairy yard and went west to the highway four miles east of Bennington and went south from there through Irvington, stopping for gas at Benson. From then on his travels were hazy in his mind.

He did not remember accosting Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Patrikyuk and Mr. and Mrs. John Anderson near Hummel park, but says he probably started an argument with them. He doesn't remember having a gun after that and is sure he had no intention of holding up anyone when he stopped the party. Then everything is very hazy. His next recollection is of waking up on the south edge of Blair about 4 o'clock Monday morning and of taking the gun from its resting place in bottom of car and hiding it under the cushions of the front seat "because he didn't want it in sight." Evidently he had spent the night on the highway.

He went in to Blair, stopped at a restaurant to eat, saw his folks there from about 7 to 7:30, then went down to an oil station to see his brother. By then, he was entirely sober. Deciding to get out of Blair vicinity, Crowley started off on Fontanelle highway, going west about 10 miles, then north for another 15, hitting U. S. No. 73 at Craig. From here he went through Oakland, West Point, Beemer and Wislener, turning off to the Richardson farm before reaching Wayne. The farm operated by Floyd and Miss Gladys Richardson is two miles south and one-half mile east of Wayne. Crowley reached there at noon Monday and told them he was wanted at Blair for shooting up a car in north Omaha when he thought a high-jacker had cut in on him.

Time Interesting One To Be Living Writes Mr. Carlson

"The Herald is a welcome weekly remembrance of Wayne and its people," writes Victor Carlson of Eriksholm, Sturefors, Sweden, formerly of Wayne. "I have seen therein that the Nebraska weather has been everything but agreeable this season and I am waiting to learn if the black dust storm you had in May did much damage to crops in the county." (Mr. Carlson will be pleased when he reads reports of the bountiful rains of this month.) "Also here has the weather been out of joint this spring," Mr. Carlson continues. In the whole country, and in most parts of Europe, lack of rains has been predominant for two years. Water levels in lakes and rivers are far below normal." "Politically Sweden is very much unstrung. The 'socialdemokratiska' party is in power but is not strong in parliament, though it is the biggest of about a dozen parties. Russian sympathizers (the communists) are gaining in power every year because of an intensive agitation directed from Russia and with Russian money. Consequently a Nazi party a la Hitler is shaping itself for action at next election. "It is an interesting time we

Black Elk's Story Re-Told By Poet At Wednesday Chapel

The vision of aged Black Elk, a great prairie seer, was re-told by Dr. John G. Neihardt, fore college chapel Wednesday.

The story of Black Elk was powerful, beautiful in its simplicity. As a poet, Dr. Neihardt had a great vision which controlled the entire life and formed his character.

Interested in the "Battle of the Messiah" which ended in "Battle of Wounded Knee," Dr. Neihardt went up to Pine Ridge reservation, about 500 miles from here.

Arriving at the reservation Dr. Neihardt was advised to talk with Black Elk, a sort of preacher, and took a government interpreter with him to find the ancient Indian.

Protest. Tax Measure. Pender, Neb., June 15—Petitions are being circulated among Thurston county taxpayers protesting a proposed congressional measure to repeal authority for taxation of Indian lands.

If passed, the tax exemption measure would cause Thurston county to lose between 20 thousand dollars and 40 thousand dollars of tax revenue annually.

Petitioners argue that since the Indians enjoy all the benefits of county government there is no reason why they should not share in the expense.

grew older meanings began to come into the pictures he had seen. However, he was a typical boy and until he was 16 made little of his vision.

Prayer Is Answered. As Dr. Neihardt and the aged Indian sat talking they could see Harney peak rising up from among its fellows, and Black Elk said, "I have never been there in the flesh, only in the spirit, and I wish I could go before I die."

Dr. Neihardt arranged an excursion to top of the peak. As they climbed, Black Elk said to his son, "Ben, if I have any power left, something should happen up there today."

It had been a dry summer, a season of drought. The sky was clear, truly cloudless. Black Elk, a humble man, arose and addressed the heavens in a thin, pathetic voice.

"Make the tree to bloom... the tree has never bloomed... a pitiful old man you see here... I have done nothing of my mission... Hear me not for myself but for my people... Thin clouds gathered, a scant, chill rain began to fall and there was thunder—no answer to the ancient seer!"

Proceeding Dr. Neihardt's talk, Clement Williamson, teacher in Santee Indian school, sang two numbers accompanied by Miss Esther Ingham of Wayne.

These were an Indian prayer for rain from the original melody, and "Land of the Sky-Blue Waters."

Arriving at the reservation Dr. Neihardt was advised to talk with Black Elk, a sort of preacher, and took a government interpreter with him to find the ancient Indian.

He stood waiting, expectant, although he had had no word of their coming. Only that morning a woman had come to interview him and Black Elk had cut her off with "I see you are a nice-looking woman, and I can feel that you are good, but I do not care to talk with you about this matter."

That was final. But in Dr. Neihardt the Indian sensed a sympathetic interest and put aside that barrier which the redman usually erects against his white successors.

The two men conversed easily. Black Elk would go into sudden silence, sit with eyes downcast then would look up and say something strangely beautiful. "I can see the desire of this man to know of the other world," he announced.

"Something great happened to me years ago and I will tell it to you," said Black Elk. And before sundown the visitor had glimpses of the world inside Black Elk which was wondrously wise.

Next summer the poet and his daughters, Miss Enid and Miss Hilda, went back to Pine Ridge and lived five weeks among the "long hairs," talking with Black Elk all day long and far into the night.

Usually four or five old men would sit in and help with the story.

Black Elk's Story. And this is the story of Black, a great holy man. He was born "the year the four crows were killed," in 1863. At age of 9 when his tribe was traveling westward he fell sick at the Big Horn river, swelling up and going into a coma from a strange disease.

For 12 days he was called dead, although there was some breath coming from his mouth as he lay in the tepee with his father and mother anxiously watching over him. But he wasn't dead—he was seeing a mighty vision.

Two men from the spirit world came down out of the sky, came like arrows from the west, and each carried a spear. "Come, the grandfathers are awaiting you," said they, and Black Elk suddenly felt strong and well and arose, stepping onto a little cloud and rising to the sky. The cloud traveled very fast and reached a great white plain of clouds, very still except for soft whispers. A bay horse came trotting along on the white plains and the spirit men told Black Elk to mount. The three came to the holy tepee built of clouds with a flaming rainbow overhead, and Black Elk rode inside to find six very old men, "old like the hills, old like stars," seated in a row. These represented the six powers of the universe—the West, the North, the East, the Tree of Life, the Spirit of the Sky and Spirit of the Earth.

And Black Elk stood watching the Spirit of the Earth grew younger and finally took on Black Elk's form, and each one underwent the same transformation, meaning that Black Elk was to take the power of each. Then Black Elk again mounted the horse, and was part of a great procession of many horses, a procession made up of young boys and girls, youths, men and women, old men and women, very, very old people on canes, and Black Elk at the last mounted on his spirit horse. And the sky ahead was filled with baby faces of generations to come. And so Black Elk foresaw four generations, in the third much confusion from guns roaring and men and women crying, and all the world embroiled in strife. Thus saw he the present generation.

Black Elk was taken to top of the Harney peak, which the Indians considered the center of the world, and from there the spirit men showed him all the good things of the world, everyone living together in harmony and plenty. And in the center of this he was to make a tree to bloom and to thrive, in protection to his people.

Awakening from his coma, the Indian had been convinced that this vision would help him to lead his people to better life, and as he

Winside Lady Was Early-Comer To Wayne's Historic Old LaPorte

To a tree-bare, wind-swept old LaPorte in year 1874 came a young matron with her husband and small son. Their home was a dug-out built into the hill, its back under window looking out above the dirt bank. Here on the farm three-fourths mile north of LaPorte site, now home of the Ernest Sandahls, the Joseph Aglers lived for seven years, fighting grasshoppers and food scarcity, knowing the hundreds of privations and discomforts which characterize pioneer life—but young enough that such troubles did not matter. When you're young and able to work, and when everyone else is struggling, too, hardships are immaterial. One has hard, unbroken soil to conquer, to teach to become productive and manageable. The wife has children to raise into strong, healthy prairie dwellers, probably schooling them in her spare moments.

Coming from Lee county, Ill., where they had been married three years before, the Aglers were among Wayne county's first settlers. Mrs. Agler was nee Miss Emma Roberts, and is a sister of Mrs. Mary Brittain, who with the judge, came the year following. Mr. Agler had seen service in the Civil war with Seventy-fifth Illinois, Company K.

Attached to General Blair's staff as messenger, he had seen many a battle and braved many dangers. Once, as he carried a message, three horses were shot out from under him in the course of his ride. With General Blair he made that famous march to the sea.

Center of interest in early LaPorte was the court house, and the first building was replaced by a new brick structure a year after the Aglers arrived.

The dugout in which the Aglers set up housekeeping has a room on lower floor and a sleeping room above. A small cookstove heated the dugout—heated the upper room, too, for the cottonwood planks of its floor had shrunken and heat rose up through the cracks. Wood was hauled from along the river at Ponca and Jackson, the nearest tree country. A good buy supply must be laid in before wintertime to assure heat for the cold months.

For a time the Aglers burned hay, also, but by the third winter they had harvested a corn crop and could burn cobs which were much more successful. No gardens, no crops the first year or two, but soon the pioneer folks had raised a hog or two, had a grain crop and some vegetables, and then they lived in comfort. Fruits were scarce—about the only kind available was English currants which could be found at LaPorte center. In the fall the pioneers butchered, salting down the meat in their little smoke houses as best they could.

Parties were held at the court house occasionally, especially on the Fourth of July, or other holidays. Everyone helped with the programs—contributing his or her talent whenever called upon. Mrs. J. M. Cherry and Mrs. John Brestler would give generously of their time. Once in a while special performers would be brought in—such as the Swiss bell ringers—and everyone would pitch in to help expenses. A Methodist minister from Wisner or Ponca would come for church and Sunday school, holding the meetings in schoolhouse or court house. Everyone went to the same church, Methodists or otherwise, for creeds did not matter in those busy soil-wrestling years.

The grasshoppers came two years—they left behind very little that was edible, growing. Corn, garden truck, even the tobacco plants were gnawed down and a dead, brownish land it was that remained after they migrated. There were plenty of visitors in the Agler house—relatives and neighbors from back in Illinois came out to make new homes; and stayed with the Aglers until they could settle. Judge and Mrs. James Brittain arrived, also Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Agler, parents of Joseph Agler, and their daughter, Martha, later Mrs. Henry Merriman of Wayne, and Mr. and Mrs. Peter Merriman. Nearest neighbors were the Cyrus Hunters, Mr. Hunter serving the infant county as clerk, treasurer and also being postmaster.

The second year in the new county, little Clyde Agler died. Three other children were born into the family—Ray Agler of near Wayne, Sadie, now Mrs. Jerry Longnecker of Winside, and Myrtle, now Mrs. Dudley Lockwood of South Sioux City. The Aglers remained on the LaPorte farm until 1905 and then went into Wakefield city, moving to Winside in 1917. Mr. Agler died 10 years ago, and Mrs. Agler continues at her home in Winside, her grandson and family, the Joe Longneckers, living with her. She numbers among her descendants 11 grandchildren and six great grandchildren.

CARL SANDBURG LECTURES HERE

Defends Theoretical Men Who Are Under Fire As The "Brain-Trust."

"We're living today in the most tremendous material civilization and most closely-woven world so known, the lives of all peoples over the world more closely interrelated than at any other time," said Carl Sandburg, lecturer-poet who appeared before Wayne State Teachers college student body Thursday evening. "It's harder for us to have definite personalities," he continued, "it's harder not to become standardized and lose ones identity."

"Educators see students who are making fairly good headway. They along come forces outside school with which they must combat. Teachers of Shakespeare have competition in Mae West and her contemporaries. Instructors in literature, true lovers of the classics which have stood tests of time and mean nourishment for living personalities, know competition in the True Story magazine.

"We've seen education as a science and schools as institutions, come under fire during recent years when heavy public debts have aroused the public. Newspapers have carried on steady campaigns against the so-called 'frills' in our schools, and other forces cry out against the theoretical in education, calling it impractical. Of such are the 'brain trusters' who are attacked as men of theory and not worth while. The cry is—'We must go back to the Americanism of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Abraham Lincoln and Ralph Waldo Emerson."

"But George (Washington was the arch rebel of the American revolution—he destroyed the authority of the British empire on this continent for all times. He was an outlaw for eight years—huge sums of money were spent to hunt him down.

"Take Benjamin Franklin—he was a very practical man, according to history, but he was tremendously theoretical also. He did beautifully foolish things just as does any profound and dutiful professor. He experimented in things scientific and laid the foundation for many later discoveries based on his theories.

"Then Abraham Lincoln—we think of him journeying to Washington in 1861, not knowing for sure if he would be inaugurated as president, not sure if his friends in Washington would be able to establish his election, and saying mournfully that there were no precedents to guide him. Out of his own keen brain he had to forge methods to use—no American philosophy to guide him. He had to chart his own course through a fog as thick as that through which Washington plowed.

"Emerson's essay on 'Self-Reliance' will impress you first with the realization that this is a truly great document, and second with wonder that its author was not hanged as an anarchist.

"How often these theoretical men must be called in by practical men who say, 'We've tried everything, let down buckets and send up rockets—now see what you can do!'"

"We've now reached the point when human wants seem irrational—when it seems ridiculous for anyone to lack the necessities of life when productive capacities of men have piled up those needs so high."

Defines Poetry. Answering the questions, "What is art?" and "What is worth listening to?" he enumerated several of his own definitions of poetry which proved both amusing and whimsical. Art, said he, comes in only after human needs are filled. Poetry is an art practiced with the horribly plastic material of human language. Poetry is an echo asking a shadow-dancer to be his partner. Poetry is the journal of a sea animal living on land, wanting to fly the air. Poetry is a silver of the moon lost in the belly of a frog. Poetry is a pack of invisible keepers. Poetry is the achievement of the synthesis of hyacinths and biscuits. (This last is based on lines, "If I had two loaves of bread I would sell one and buy white hyacinths to feed my soul," which brought forth another, "I have two baskets of hyacinths and I wish to God I could sell one to get—biscuits!" Poetry is the capture of a picture, song or flare in a deliberate prism of words.

Mr. Sandburg then told two whimsical stories from his children's books—about two big, tall skyscrapers who stood side by side for many years, rooted to the soil. They decided that if they ever had a child it would be one that could be free—free to travel and to see things. So when the child came, it was an overland passenger train.

Then he launched into reading of his own poems, and singing the American folk songs he has long collected, accompanying himself on a guitar. He read "Sea Wash" which has "musical intentions," he read "Physiog" which deals with the face which is "just handed to you." And "Snatch of Slip-Horn Jazz" which slangily advises one to "Be Happy, kid, but don't be too doggone happy" for something always comes to burst a too-happy bubble.

Sings Folk Songs. From his "American Song Bag" he pulled out varied numbers. "We have a peculiar song heritage," said he. "No other country can compare with us in diversity. Some of our songs came over with the English and Irish some 200 or 300 years ago. Others were sung by the men who pushed back from the coast in exploration. Then there are the (Continued on Page Two)

"Uncle Bob" Morrow Undaunted By Many Years Of Blindness

Known for all legal and postal purpose as R. H. Morrow, few there are among his townspeople who don't hail this familiar Winsider as "Uncle Bob." To long-time residents whom he remembers as youthful and strong, to the youngsters whom he has never seen, to traveling men who used to show him their merchandise, he is always "Uncle Bob."

About 18 years ago his eyesight left him—left him in a world of darkness. But "Uncle Bob" was not daunted. He did not get down into a coma of uselessness. Instead, he learned to do things all over again, via the touch method, and remarkable indeed are his accomplishments.

He is official housekeeper as his wife, Mrs. Minnie Morrow, is Winside postmaster and must be gone practically all the day. And the house is beautifully kept, the dishes carefully washed and put away by Mr. Morrow. In wintertime he tends the furnace and carries out the ashes. Summers, he takes real pride in his garden. Using a piece of gas pipe as guide, he measures off the rows, carefully marks the next one, spading and planting by this method. This spring he set out four apple trees, unaided, and each is thriving.

From talking with people he forms very definite ideas of them—what they look like, how they walk, how much they weigh. He tells their weight from volume of voice and the heaviness of the walk. Voices he recognizes easily—not long ago a former neighbor came to call whom he hadn't seen for 20 years—after hearing his voice in greeting he recognized him as Bill Templeton of Westington, S. D. Older voices don't change much, says Mr. Morrow, but children's do and sometimes it's difficult to place them.

In the evening Mrs. Morrow haunting times of the plains sung by the pioneer folks, songs of the open spaces crooned by cowboys around their campfires. Songs of blackfaced minstrels (now an almost extinct art), songs of the Irish who built the railroads and dug the canals, mountaineers' tunes, outlaws' songs, jail and prison melodies, and the majestic negro spiritual.

Of interest was one from Brown county, Ill., part of an old British ballad which the sender's grandmother sang as she washed dishes: "O, who will shoe your pretty little foot, and who will glove your hand, O, who will shoe your pretty little foot, when 't'begone to a foreign land?"

A lively tune from early Illinois, entitled "The State of Illinois," swung along to these words: "Move your family westward, bring all your girls and boys . . . to the State of Illinois."

From rural Kentucky came "An Inconstant Lover." "An inconstant lover is worse than a thief and will bring you to the grave. The grave will consume you and bring you to dust. But where is the young man that a girl can trust?" Another Kentucky folk song takes 42 verses to tell young folks how to live their lives. After listening to all 42, the boys and girls will continue to do just as they wish, says Mr. Sandburg. This starts out, "Hello girls, listen to my voice. Don't you every marry no good-for-nothing boys." Also from Kentucky came a song which originated when the mountaineers sat in their doorsteps, smoking their pipes and watched with considerable distaste the approach of the builders up the valley. "I don't like no railroad men, railroad men kill you if they can, I don't like no railroad men. I don't like no railroad boss, railroad boss got a head like a boss, I don't like no railroad boss. I don't like no railroad fool, got head like a mule, I don't like no railroad fool."

Next came a classic from the cottonbelt, growing out of the boll weevil's coming. If a pair get into a cotton field and are not interfered with, (if not met by an educational committee, he added with sly humor), the pair will have a

MY IMPATIENCE

The city streets were crowded today
And crowded far into the night;
There was hustle and scurry everywhere
And the streets were flooded with light.

I paused a moment and stopped to think
And then watching the people there,
I found that many were sad and wan
And their faces were carved with care.

I wondered whatever made it thus,
(That the people should worry so)
Can they not enjoy the lovely breeze
Nor the beautiful sunlight's glow?

Must they ever walk the marts of trade
With no time for the finer things
And know they not the joy of a book,
Nor the pleasure a picture brings?

And 'twas then I had another thought
'That I've held quite tight to my breast,
For I knew that I was so selfish
And I prayed as I went to rest.

I said, "Oh God, give us earthlings rest,
And take my impatience from me;
Help me to help as I go through life
Yes, to help Thy sons know Thee."

Versatile Carl Sandburg Talks Interestingly Of Many Things

Carl Sandburg materialized for his Wayne reader-friends Thursday. Those who had known him as a far-away, although unquestionably vivid and colorful figure of the literary world, met a Carl Sandburg of bronzed skin, tall, lank stature and whitened hair. A deliberate man when off the platform, but well worth waiting for his utterances. He talks of politics from the vantage point of long association with prominent personalities—he discusses journalism with the familiarity of one who once labored in the country newspaper office but rose to editorial prominence on the Chicago Daily News—he's an authority on Abraham Lincoln but not particularly talkative on the subject—he's both a student and an authority on American folk songs. Just now he's writing a four-volume work on "Lincoln: The Prairie Years," has spent five years on this and looks ahead to at least three more for completion.

He stopped into the Herald office to say that he appreciated finding a country paper which was close to its people—which knew how to be a country paper. Reading through the Herald's columns, he said he was conscious of how very complex are the farm problems of today. He commented on an editorial on painted lips and fingernails, enjoying it as a very frank expression with which he would agree 100 percent if he did not know some very worthy women who rouge themselves and paint their nails, but who work hard and have good brains. Just why these women adorn themselves thus, is not very clear to Mr. Sandburg but that he has such excellent qualities that he is willing they should continue their frivolities.

And such frivolities have their importance—look at Russia, he says—Russia is slowly drifting back to rouge and powder for its womenfolk. This nation of magnificent distances—covering a goodly portion of the earth's surface, cannot be understood by a fleeting visit, either—one cannot know the people of Russia by a two weeks' trip. Just as the citizenry of this country, the tinkering garageman and hundreds of other types and personalities—so is Russia a composite of varied types, reacting to varied situations.

Speaking of the western country, he stated that he never crossed the Missouri river to this region but that he suddenly, asked himself "What is it I am missing here? What is strange?" And the answer is, "No trees." He recalls a Brooklyn girl who was asked the difference between eastern and western regions and answered, "The east is where the trees come between you and God."

American folk songs, at first a hobby and later developing into a much-quoted book, "The American Songbag," make a fascinating study. About 15 or 20 different kinds attractive room with red tile floor was $2.50 for two. For $10 one receives 25 pesos or Mexican dollars. The cent in Mexican money is a centavo and each peso has value of 100 centavos. Mexicans have a centavo, five, ten, twenty and twenty-five centavo pieces and the peso, making the monetary system simple. Gasoline is sold by the liter rather than by the gallon and this fuel is about 6c a gallon higher than in the United States.

Main street of Monterey has attractive "store fronts and window displays, the travelers found. Most stores have tile floors level with sidewalks and the door remains open constantly as weather permits this. Business seems to be good.

All Mexicans bear their mothers' family name so their descent can be traced with considerable ease by similarity of names. It is a national custom or belief that children should support their parents so each child gives money earned to his mother for family budgeting.

In meat markets the party saw meat hanging on hooks and exposed to dirt, public handling and warm temperatures. Milk situation is quite the opposite. Due to bad epidemics in the past the city has a public pasteurizing plant and all milk must pass through this plant and be inspected. And each milk bottle must have the top covered and sealed. Mexicans cook almost all food in hog lard. The lard comes from Omaha and Chicago in 8,000-gallon tank cars like lubricating oil. It is heated and placed in five-gallon cans for Mexicans.

All passenger trains, Mr. Wells was told, are equipped with 16 soldiers and two officers for protection against bandits. It appears that the bandits shoot first and then rob, rather than rob first.

Mr. Wells visited with friends in Wayne Saturday. Knox county has 2,144 unemployed, according to relief report.

ALTONA Norma Carpenter will visit Altona each Saturday. She will gladly receive any news contributions.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Bennett spent Sunday in the Harry Bennett home. William Stuthmann shipped 31 head of cattle to Sioux City last week.

Omaha Women Express Favor Of Local Groups

"This letter is a voluntary and enthusiastic expression of my appreciation of the June 7 issue of the Wayne Herald," writes Mrs. Lueta T. Andrews of Omaha to the Herald June 10. "Nebraska state chapters, as well as the P. E. O. sisterhood at large, will thrill with pride that a newspaper of the high rating you hold should give so generously of its space and talent to our organization. You have rendered immeasurable service to P. E. O. in this issue.

"I have read your editorials which merit the attention of all Nebraska. You so well express the reaction of the great majority of thinking people in this country today. We have our opportunity in the short weeks before the primaries to assist in the nomination of candidates who are true to the ideals of our republic."

Mrs. Andrews is past state president of P. E. O. and served several years as executive secretary of the supreme chapter. She has also been chairman of housing in the national department of labor.

In another letter to the Herald; Mrs. C. E. Belden of Omaha, writes that she wishes "to thank the Herald and the town of Wayne for all the beautiful courtesies extended to P. E. O. delegates during the recent convention in Wayne. The college campus is an ideal place for such a meeting with the commodious buildings which were so delightfully adapted to our needs. The kindness and hospitality shown us by your local P. E. O. chapter could not have been surpassed and we could not help being impressed with the readiness with which the whole town seemed to join in our welcome. Even the intense heat of the weather took on a milder form in the cool-rooms of the dormitories and under the majestic trees of that beautiful hillside. We thank you for the copies of the Herald which brought to us such good reports of our programs. We shall always have happy memories of Wayne and its people."

A new medicine for typhoid fever has been discovered and its originator, Dr. Gregory Schwartzman of New York City, was presented the American Medical Association medal for the year last Thursday at the annual meeting in Cleveland.

Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, United States minister to Denmark, won her case in the chancery division of the high court, in which she claimed a 50 thousand dollar share of the Marokana tea and rubber estate in Ceylon. Justice Farwell granted the declaration that the defendant, Lady Edmee Owen, was bound to retransfer to Ruth Owens as executrix of the will of her husband, Reginald Altham Owen, a one-third share in the estate which was transferred by Reginald to his father, Sir Theodore Charles Owen, in 1921. Lady Owen must also pay the costs. Mrs. Owen came to London from Copenhagen to give evidence, but counsel decided it would not be necessary for her to take the stand.
