

Making Progress - Cattle Increase Weight 2.35 Pounds Per Head - Two Kinds of Charity Recipients.

When a teacher openly punishes a ringleader student, she doesn't merely arouse the fear and hatred of the one punished. She excites the horror of and thus inflicts undesired punishment on innocent students...

Looking Backward. Let us go back forty years ago. It is convenient to go back forty years because forty years ago was the other big depression and the other big drought.

Advanced Qualifications. A teacher's qualifications have been raised amazingly in two scores of years. Back in 1894, the average teacher didn't learn more than enough to earn a certificate.

Cost of Contract Work. Average cost to carry hog contract signers in Nebraska from January 1 to July 1 was 2 percent of benefit payments.

Feeding Demonstrations. In an attempt to help Nebraska farmers use all available feed to the best possible advantage in carrying stock through the coming winter months...

Ground for Encouragement. When we consider the progress made by schools and colleges in the last forty years, and contemplate avenues of improvement lying ahead, we feel largely encouraged and mightily fortified.

Cattle Feeding Results. Edward Perry reports the following recent experience in feeding a bunch of cattle: On July 19 last he bought 41 head of cattle that weighed a total of 54,645 pounds.

Deserving and Undeserving. Some persons are driven by absolute need to accept relief. Others with pride long dead, seek and grab charity as a sort of inherited right...

Fairacres Herd Is High In State

Herdman Melvin Cording Explains Plan Of Feed For Dairy Cows.

For the second time in six months Fairacres Farms Holsteins registered high herd and high cow in Nebraska testing associations. This record was based on herds milking 16 or more cows. The 22 Holsteins produced for August an average of 1,032 pounds of milk and 38.9 pounds of butterfat. The Fairacres cow testing highest in the state had a record of 2,244 pounds of milk and 85.3 pounds of butterfat.

In commenting on the dairy situation, Melvin G. Cording, herdman at Fairacres, says, "The dairy farmer is faced with one of the worst feed shortages the country has ever experienced. Faced with the perplexing problem of a low return for butterfat and feed prices reaching war time prices, it behooves every one engaged in the dairy industry, either on a large or small scale, to watch as never before, the kind and amount of feed fed, to balance a practical ration accurately and to know without any guess work, the cost of producing a pound of butter fat. It is highly important that we get the maximum production at the lowest possible cost. True, we can let a cow 'rough' it and get from $3 to $9 of butterfat each month without any expense for grain or hay, but by feeding a conservative amount can bring that $3 to $9 a month up to $15 or $30 a month.

leaving a margin of profit even during these times. "In feeding the dairy cow it is very easy to run to extremes. Some insist on letting the cows 'rough' it, giving the excuse that milking is too much work and doesn't pay, while others spend the entire cream check for feed, forcing the cow to produce more than she profitably can and sending the cost of production up to the point where even a small amount of profit is out of the question.

"Perhaps I can best illustrate," adds Mr. Cording, "by using the figures on our own herd at Fairacres Farms, compiled for the month by a state tester. During the month of September the 24 cows on test averaged 43.7 pounds of butterfat, making a total for the herd of 1051.1 pounds. The feed cost for each pound of butterfat was 11c, giving a return for each dollar expended for feed of $2.97. Checking the record of one cow in the herd that produced 46.9 pounds of butterfat (this is slightly higher than what the average cow will produce month after month) we find that she consumed 700 pounds of ensilage, 300 pounds of hay and 200 pounds of grain at a total cost for feed of $5.20 and leaving a profit of $11.25.

"The usual requirement for a cow weighing 1000 pounds and producing 20 pounds of milk a day is 40 pounds of silage, 5 pounds of corn stover or oat straw, and six pounds of corn meal plus one pound of cottonseed cake to bring up the protein necessary for a cow in milk.

"If we are to keep our herds from starvation and expect them to breed and produce normal calves next year we must utilize the feed we have to the best possible advantage keeping in mind that there is still a small amount of profit to be made by following a program of conservative feeding," Mr. Cording concludes.

High School Freshmen Recall Unique Experiences As English Assignment

If you were to recall your most exciting moment, where would it center, in your early youth or in later, more mature years? Perhaps a near-accident, perhaps a threatened business disaster, perhaps a long-anticipated trip to some special spot, perhaps the realization of some cherished plan...

Elmer Mortensen asked his freshman English students to write of their most exciting experience and received an interesting variety of answers.

Marjorie Hook recalls the fright occasioned when a herd of goats came thumping down the mountainside to the small Nevada mining town where the family lived, threatening to annihilate little Marjorie and her sister before they reached the house.

Lloyd Surber writes of one night when he and other boys "got a Model-T Ford and went to Carroll," not telling their folks because they wouldn't get to go (which is logical).

Genevieve Lyngen ended a series of runaways as a six-year-old by being pinned up in the yard. Dale Albertson fought, as do most small boys, and also said a few words which were not in the book of eti-

Leona Gramquist after recounting the numerous things which harrow one on a strange country road, alone. "It is very unwise for strangers to attempt expeditions on foot over country roads."

Fred Gildersleeve has helped with threshing every year since he was ten—he gives a good description of his first experience and the things he learned: "I found out that the concaves were rows of teeth in front of the machine to cut up the grain. You also have to have different kinds of teeth according to that kind of grain you thresh. You use a plain tooth to thresh oats or barley, but corrugated teeth for alfalfa and sweet clover. Corrugated teeth are rough with grooves in them. The sieves are about in middle of the machine. They shake back and forth and in this manner separate the grain from the chaff and straw."

Betty Chittick, new-comer in Wayne, recalls coming to Nebraska from Wyoming and seeing the green hayfields for the first time, thinking them to be "lawns," and mistaking the numerous mail-boxes along the way for bird-houses.

Anita Bush recalls her first day's work and the thrill of getting a pay-check. "Wauneta Bomer enjoyed a play circus which began with a parade including all the 'foxes and animals in our reach,' and ended with a performance in the barn, admission being one pin, button or hair-pin. And 'the circus was a great success, especially for the newspapers for there were advertisements in the lost column. (Meaning, one gathers, the ads placed by frantic owners who had missed their pets)"

Wilford Lindsay had a struggle with a strong-minded horse but finally "tied a rope around his nose so he couldn't breathe and then he went all right." (A hint on horse-taming). Chester Jensen fell off a horse, pulling along his companion, Franklin, and landing under the animals with no dire results. Roy Hagin visited the flood district in Sioux City and saw people being taken from their houses in boats. Dolores Frevort and her sister, Marcella, had a good scare from the neighbor boy when they were left alone one evening—ghostly rappings were not half-scary when one knew the source. Don Sund and Lloyd found their "ghost" who haunted them outside their pup tent, to be Lloyd's dog and the dog has reason to remember his "haunting" for he received a good lump on the head from Lloyd's tomahawk.

Fern Evans and her two sisters were "haunted" one evening—by the neighbor's cat. Real honest-to-goodness burglars are recorded by Bonadell Porter and Betty Blair. Bonadell was home alone, to make things worse, and had that "funny feeling inside of me, like you always have when you don't feel safe." When she crept downstairs and turned on the lights, a man ran from the house. Betty and her family came home from Christmas vacation to learn that their house had been broken into... they found rooms wide open, drawers pulled out ready to fall any second, dresses and shirts on the floor. Betty lost the Sunday school fund of which she was treasurer, Indian head pennies and "phony" nickles.

Learning to ride a bicycle and learning to skate were choice of several young writers. James Sharer's neighbor boy held the bicycle up till James got on when he gave it a shove. James went about a block, then fell off. "We did that all afternoon," he writes. Which would indicate that James was not easily discouraged. Beverly Canning had an escort of three boys to hold the "bike" while he practiced but they "graciously left him" and Bev met up with a parked car which bumped into him by getting into the road. (Bev's logic reminds one of many another accident alibi.) Marjorie Grier's maiden trip on a bicycle ended suddenly when she lost control on the wheel and crashed into a bridge at bottom with damage to wheel and herself.

Kathryn Young, a novice at skating, managed to jump down over one curb but therewith sat down and slid across the street in most unexpected and distressing fashion.

Aronid Reeg was caught out in the field while cultivating by a heavy rainstorm. Robert Tucker well remembers his first ride on a train for he sprawled out in the aisle and noted a most odd feeling in middle of his stomach.

Dorothy Lutt received punishment eight or nine years ago which she "still remembers as if it were today." She and her sisters quarreled over dishes in their play-house and their father appeared, wielding the proverbial "big stick." The next day can imagine.

One warm summer evening Dale Brockman decided to take a little joy ride and get cooled off. He pushed a buggy over the hill and went down at good speed but someone didn't seem to negotiate the turn at bottom, landing unhurt in the ditch. "The moral, he says, is not to make a turn when going at great speed."

Robert Maricle was as wet as if he'd fallen in the horse tank after being caught in a sudden thunder-storm. When Faye Sandahl brought home her guests for a slumber party, they were locked out and had to sleep on the front porch. Robert Wright recalls hunting in the country and being caught off gravel by a storm. Helen Hughes remembers a pleasant afternoon of "Russian Play-my" and "Racehorse Rummy" which ended in a rain. Myron Gildersleeve and two pals put together a car and had lots of fun out of it, although little travel. Lucille Reeg mixed with a can of cream when she fell down the cellar steps. Arvid Hamers' family met up with a truck on a narrow grade but came through safely.

Mildred Ringer entered a declamatory contest and went through the shiverings and shakings which precede such a public performance, even getting up at 6 o'clock that morning to go roller skating because she couldn't sleep. Helen Martens earned 50c as her first wages, after driving the stacker-truck... collision with a dirt truck wrecked their car badly and kept the party in a Wisconsin town three days when the Aen Austins were traveling overland.

Betty Helen Ellis returned from a camping trip with regret, bringing back the temptation to get up at six-thirty, to throw dish-water beyond the flag pole, wipe one's silver with napkin and other camp habits.

The castle contest ended and we have started an arithmetic play house. Two members of the third grade have been able to enter so far.

The second grade is studying the members of the ake family in reading, as lake, take, bake, etc.

Pressure For Votes
 THE warning issued from the New Deal's Nebraska headquarters that if voters do not elect New Deal candidates, this state will suffer loss of relief funds from the federal treasury offers solid reason why support should go to opposing candidates who dare to question the advisability of policies launched by the national administration. The threat to discriminate in handling public funds should be indignantly resented by the masses everywhere.

If an administration uses government benefits, distributed for public works or for other purposes as pressure to secure votes, it virtually employs the federal treasury to influence election results. If a community or an area does not need an irrigation system or a drainage ditch or a post office building or other improvement, it should not be provided. If one of these enterprises is needed, it should be ordered in the course of public duty—not as an inducement for popular favor. Government heads are elected and are paid to give necessary service—among other duties to cause improvements where they are most needed—not where they will yield greatest support to an aspiring candidate. Using the public treasury as a leverage for party support may justly arouse a storm of disapproval.

In the coming election Nebraskans may be expected to rise above questions of public patronage in placing their support. The spirit of independence is too deeply rooted here to be threatened into submission to policies they think are ill advised. They cannot be cudgeled into exchanging free action for a mixture of relief and restraint. The issues between rivals for congress and United States senate are clearly defined, and people will be asked to decide between a swing to the left or a swing to the right. If they have already had too much interference with business and agriculture, already too large an accumulation of indebtedness for the future to pay, considering the doubtful progress of substantial recovery thus far, they will not support one hundred per cent devotees of the New Deal. They will send men to Washington who will at least resist measures which they think are out of harmony with the fundamentals of permanent recovery. Certainly they will not be persuaded by threats or promises to act against their own best judgment.

President's Radio Speech
 IN his radio speech Sunday night, President Roosevelt asked capital and labor groups to suspend hostilities and establish "a trial period of industrial peace." The president discussed reorganization of the NRA at length, expressing the belief that faults could be removed and good points retained. He gave emphasis to the value of the individualistic spirit and the importance of preserving it. "We count, in the future as in the past," he said, "on the driving power of individual initiative and the incentive of fair private profit, strengthened with the acceptance of those obligations to the public interest which rest on all of us."

But the question would seem to be how much of a load of government restrictions an industrial institution can carry and still answer the demands for increased employment. Responsible heads of industries must be permitted to direct their activities and make the income equal the outgo if they are expected to fit helpfully into the recovery program.

Assurance of freedom from radicalism in public policies and freedom from future tinkering with the country's money value would undoubtedly operate to the advantage of the business.

Charge Of Theft Faced In Court
 To charge of theft of 200 bushels of shelled corn valued at $100, Glenn Foltz pleaded not guilty Monday at preliminary hearing in Wayne county court and was bound over to district court with bond fixed at $200, which he furnished.

Charges were filed June 2 by George F. and Harry Hofseld for the theft which occurred May 27. Foltz was not apprehended until this week.

Trial will be in district court, the time not yet set.

Deeds To Property Filed In County
 Property deeds recorded in Wayne county the past week include the following:
 Frank Sederstrom and wife to A. V. Teed, September 27 for $1,800, lot 5, block 22, original Wayne.

Isabelle Basket to John C. Bruze, September 27 for $500, lot 8, block 3, original Hoskins.

Evan Jenkins to Samuel Jenkins, September 29 for $1, and other consideration, the west half of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter and the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of 30-27-2.

August Kal to Anna Kal, September 28 for $1, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of 32-25-5.

Whether the NRA can be made worth while still remains a question. As it reduced competition, it increased the cost of living, and raising the cost of living for farm communities, already suffering disadvantage, naturally inspired resentment. This proved a barrier to business volume which largely defeated the purpose. As the NRA exacts requirements from business, it inevitably retards the recovery movement.

Election Approaches
 ELECTION will be here in another month, and October will see all candidates on the qui vive with major candidates bringing out their heaviest oratorical artillery to inform and convince the public. Voters have more momentous questions than usual to consider and decide, and they will need to exercise best judgment to chart a sound course and avoid future disappointment.

A debate between the two candidates for the United States senate promises to enliven the Nebraska campaign and contribute to popular information touching governmental tendencies and possibilities. The more completely the New Deal candidate swallows the New Deal, the more hesitant people will become in sending him to Washington to represent them at a time when democratic institutions are in the crucible of severest trial and when excessive harmony may be dangerous and critical inquiry and modifying influences may be invaluable. The debate will be informative and stimulating, and will be followed with liveliest interest.

Opponents of surrender to New Deal experiments—past and ahead—cannot win a majority in the next congress, but they can muster enough strength to resist unwise trends in shaping public policies.

Business and industry are invited to get into the harness, increase employment and spread glad dollars, and at the same time they are hampered by government competition, fears of inflation, fears that costs will exceed incomes. Let the government remove instead of build barriers to freedom of operation, and reestablished confidence will soon be reflected in quickened trade arteries.

The Omaha Journal-Stockman presents government statistics to show that while the potato crop is short in spots, the total production is greater this year than it was last year. So, the country will not suffer from lack of one of its chief articles of diet.

The record shows slightly more rainfall this year than up to this time last year, but damage was caused by failure of moisture to come to relieve a prolonged, intensely hot spell, with torrid winds, during July and August.

Times Change.
 (Nation's Business)

In New York City the other day the Market Commissioner revoked a license for a frankfurter stand in an open market place on the ground that the man who ran the stand had made such profits that his wife had bought "a $40,000 apartment house." That was too much—a man whose wife could buy a $40,000 apartment house shouldn't have a license to sell hot dogs in a city market.

But further reports complicate the case. The husband has asked the courts to overrule the Commissioner. In effect he says:

"Sure, my wife bought an apartment house. She paid $3,500 down on $40,000 and she's paid another $1,500 to reduce the mortgage to $35,000. But the best she can get is $400 a month income from the building, and when she's paid taxes, income and upkeep, there's no profit.

"Why don't you get after my son. He has a flower stand and makes, maybe, a dollar a day. He's putting himself through college with that but he isn't a property holder, so you let him alone. What's it all about? My other son's in law school. Must I take him out?"

An odd case. Not long ago we'd have hailed the hot dog dealer as an up-and-coming American because he'd made and saved a little money and had become a property holder. We'd have held him up as a model and printed his story, and picture in the "Success" magazines. Now we frown on him. The world is cock-eyed, or are we?

Charges Are Filed For Altering Check
 Luther Barnes of Randolph, faces charges of altering a check and also of possessing an altered check. He will be tried in Wayne county court October 31. J. O. Webb of Hoskins, filed charges, alleging that a cream check which he gave Barnes was made out for $3.11 and was altered and cashed for $8.11. Barnes' bond which is fixed at $500 and which he furnished, was signed by about 30 people.

Gridders Will Play At Randolph Friday
 Wayne college high football squad plays at Randolph this Friday evening, 7:30 o'clock, under the lights. Fifteen boys are now reporting for practices.

Legion In Meeting.
 Wayne Legion met last evening at the court house and nominating committee reported.

Roof On Building.
 Roof is being placed on Wayne's new telephone building.

Has Dinner Meeting.
 Wayne Young Business Men's club met last evening at Hotel Stratton for dinner and business.

DREAMS.
 Probably the subconscious mind handles dreams, sometimes a pleasant and often a disagreeable sensation. Ancients used to consider dreams prophetic, and would take them to the neighborhood soothsayer for proper interpretation. Kings used to accept a dream as a portent of evil or of a promise of good, but as a matter of fact most kings' dreams dovetailed so perfectly with badly behaved consciences that they spent a good deal of time and effort trying to dodge the shafts of secret guilt. Ancient rulers had plenty of superstitions and these superstitions worked with crazy dreams to cause a lot of trouble. Now dreams are not considered important. An abused stomach may stimulate the subconscious mind to perform in an ugly fashion, and this subconscious stratum seems to be able to conjure up numerous images altogether out of harmony with the brain's rational and usable department. If we dream that the world is slipping from bad to worse, with utter ruin and chaos ahead, we feel greatly relieved on awakening to find nothing really to fear and much really to encourage. If we dream that a high tide of prosperity has returned, we awaken with an agreeable feeling and our disappointment is modified by the hope that has been inspired by the picture fashioned in dream land.

Hilda Neihardt Learns Of Indian Lore While Summering On a Reservation

Miss Neihardt of Neihardt hall! Reminiscent of a character in a Victorian novel dealing with English gentry. In reality referring to Miss Hilda Neihardt, who has come to Wayne to study at the college which knew her illustrious father as a hard-working student, and to live in the beautiful new dormitory which was dedicated to Dr. John G. Neihardt, Wayne's most famous graduate. She's petite, poised, blonde and speaks deliberately and easily on whatever subject is mentioned. Has a natural love of the out-of-doors, of horses and of the beauties of this Nebraska land which her father has so ably recorded in his works.

They're pals, Dr. Neihardt and Miss Hilda. They've spent many a good hour conversing with wrinkled Indian warriors, learning the unwritten history of the redmen in days of their glory, drinking in the unwritten beliefs and religions of the early dwellers, their laws and their justice. All these revelations Miss Hilda has shared in, a wonderful experience for a young woman just of college age.

Miss Hilda, her sister, Miss Alice and Dr. Neihardt spent a very happy summer on the Long Pine reservation, camping on a creek—a lovely spot in that restful pattern peculiar to our Nebraska—big trees and deep bluegrass and blue, white-flecked sky overhead. Black Elk, the aged Indian seer who will be found in Dr. Neihardt's "Song of the Messiah," which closes his epic cycle of the Indian Wars, was still on the reservation. An old man, half-blind, but possessed of great wisdom and dignity. Black Elk will not long inhabit the government-given reservation. . . . when he has gone to the "happy hunting ground," his great vision and the part it played in re-moulding and re-motivating his life will live on in "Song of the Messiah."

Did you ever see an Indian butcher and cure meat in fashion of his forefathers? Then ask Miss Hilda, for she witnessed a butchering this summer. Dr. Neihardt had two steers butchered for his own use, and took the meat home the animals, then loosened the hides, laying the carcasses out on the hides to keep clean and bedding them on leaves. Then the meat was cut up into strips about a foot long and six inches wide and thick. By cutting these strips back and forth, but not quite through entire thickness, the meat could be pulled out into a long strip only an eighth inch thick. These were hung over racks made from peeled saplings, then liberally covered with salt and

HOLD FAST

When you find you're disappointed
And the whole darn world is wrong,
Great that disappointment early,
Friend, and do it with a song.

If, perchance, you've lost the battle
With the failing evening light,
Pull your belt a little tighter
Know that this is the time to fight.

If you feel your smile is waning
And you cannot stand the gaff,
Just relax your face a little,
Yawn a bit — and then — just laugh.

Or, if the whole round world is dark
And it seems you cannot win;
It's then the time to wet your lips,
Stretch your arms a bit and grin.

For nothing's what it seems to be
And your trouble cannot last;
Just sing and fight — laugh and grin
And above all things, hold fast.
