

Achieved Wonders Since the First Phonograph—World of Variety—Accepting Gifts—Wayne-Pierce Highway—A Busy Teacher—Parents and Children—Human Values.

We recall paying ten cents to put the tubes of a phonograph into our ears to hear the marvelous reproduction of a piece of music. That was many years ago.

The March of Progress. It is a long sweep in experience from connecting the first phonograph with the auditory nerves by means of a flexible pipe line to sitting before an ornamental contrivance and capturing voices first hand from almost anywhere.

Have Become Fastidious. Surfeited by good things, we are hard to please. The program that suits one does not suit another.

No Charity Felt. Listening. We grow impatient if results are not forthcoming. If one could see the performance, as in a theatre or public forum, delays would be less annoying.

Temperamental Extremes. Different kinds of people lend variety to the world. Two current news reports reveal striking temperamental opposites.

Probably Different Now. Years ago in Oregon a Canadian told us that Canada did not accept gifts of Carnegie libraries in the belief that donations had an injurious influence on the young of the country.

Second Year on Job. Work on the Wayne-Pierce highway is now dragging through the second year since beginning, and around six miles are left to be graded.

Community Service. Miss Ruth Hanson who teaches south of Wakefield and who brought a group of her students to Wayne early Saturday morning to sing from the Herald's studio, is plainly an accomplished leader of children as well as a tireless community worker.

Cruelty to Children. We wonder what parents can be thinking when they are guilty of cruelty to their own children. If parents have no love for their children, no pride in their development—if they can stand to see them mistreated and injured—why wonder what kind of souls, if any, they possess.

Citation for bravery was received this week from Washington, D. C., by Harry Luckey, Jr., of Wayne, member of the C. C. camp at Ponca. Robert Fechner, director of Emergency Conservation work, writes Mr. Luckey as follows:

"You have already received expressions of commendation from the war department for your distinguished conduct in helping to prevent the drowning of several people on September 11, 1934. In addition thereto, I am taking this opportunity of greeting you with words of praise and expressing commendation for your heroic action."

"The account, as we have it, is that while Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Dutcher and their four-year-old son and Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Logfrin and their two-year-old daughter were crossing by ferry from one shore to another of the river near the camp, their car went overboard while temporarily unattended with the two ladies and the two children in it.

"Such a display of heroism is an indication that you have a splendid conception of the meaning of brotherhood of man and you may be sure that it is very gratifying to me and that all such acts reflect favorably, not only on the doer thereof but also on this organization. I wish you success in your future undertakings."

MOST MEN CHOOSE HONESTY AS BEST AND SAFEST RULE

MOST men are honest, and could not be led into dark and devious ways by prospect of profit. A cartoon in The Saturday Evening Post shows the contrast admirably well. In the background is a big group of honest men, the square-shooting majority, going about their business, manifestly free from guile, free from evil purpose. In the foreground are crouched two men to represent the crooked minority. Over them is a magnifying glass through which the professional agitator, sensation-seeking politician and yellow journalist are making an examination, each expressing horror and doubtless drawing conclusions magnified to cover the innocent as well as the guilty. It is a fact that dishonesty will not succeed for long, if at all. And the fellow full of tricks—typical of a very small minority—is soon found out, soon surrenders any confidence or respect he may have had and is destined to failure. The vast majority not only act honestly but think honestly.

OMAHA SPEAKER HEARD BY CLUB

Analyze Safe Investments For Average Man At Kiwanis Luncheon.

"Intelligent investments in American business will do more to eliminate hazards than any legislation which could be passed," is opinion of L. S. Holmes, president of Mortgage Acceptance corporation in Omaha, who addressed Wayne Kiwanians Monday noon.

"There are five ways to make money, by work, by going into business for oneself, by inheritance, speculation and investment. An investment is protected as to principal by definite collateral placed as security... speculation, in contrast, is money risked in the hopes that the amount risked will increase in total.

"We've passed the crisis in this depression and are starting on the up-grade, headed for another boom which will be greater than in 1929. Our savings are over-filled and positions which should be invested in American business. The main reason business is bad is because psychology of the American people has caused them to withdraw money from business... they're skeptical and afraid. But there are three good solid rules for judging any investment—safety, judging what's behind it, yield, or how hard the dollar will work, and ability to secure your money from the investment at any time, at given value.

"While the United States has made great progress within the last two years in improving school systems, ousting gangsters, eliminating child labor and the like, there are still millions of totally ignorant of financial knowledge. Unfortunately our public school system teaches students how to go out and earn the dollar, but not how to invest it.

Report cards were issued on Tuesday.

High school art class has begun designing of spatter work Christmas cards, under direction of Miss Maude Curley.

In Junior High.

History 8 class has finished study of the Revolutionary war. Hygiene 8 is studying ventilation and Billy Jones and Van Bradford explained to the class Friday how the Wayne school is heated and ventilated. Language 8 had special reports on Thanksgiving this week, and arithmetic 8 has taken up study of insurance, with outside reports by committees.

Seventh grade literature class is reading poetry. In geography the children have taken up study of Venezuela and Harlan Liggett made special report.

Lila Westerhouse and John Berry made a bookcase-chart for reading 6, and on this will be pasted little books showing each library book read. Leah Jean Casas and Helen Martens made special reports on the beginning of Rome for history 6. In art, pastel landscapes have been designed.

In Lower Grades.

Marion Sottle withdrew from fifth grade on Friday and has enrolled at Columbus school. Attractive Thanksgiving posters have been made by tearing colored paper into designs, such as turkeys. On the book shelf chart which was put up two weeks ago, 26 books are shown as read and reported. Myla June Thomas and Betty Ann Zepelin have read the most.

Fourth graders have been making geography booklets on the Amazon Indians, and writing about horses, weapons, tools and transportation with pictures for illustration.

Third and fourth graders had a joint Thanksgiving party on Wednesday afternoon, each helping plan the entertainment and arranging for refreshments. FIFTY-FOURTH YEAR

WAYNE, NEBRASKA, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1934.

NUMBER THIRTYFOUR

Benthack, Thomas Johnson, Dorothy Ahlvers and Gordon Johnson, and refreshments were planned by Nancy Nicholsonsen, Rodney Love, Doris Jean Rockwell and Robert Elnung.

A big map of Nebraska has been drawn on third grade floor by the children, illustrated with towns and rivers which figured in early history of the state, such as Platte, Republican and Missouri rivers, and old Bellevue. From this they are learning directions. An interesting arithmetic lesson resulted when they worked out the map proportions, making it three times as large as the wall map. Pioneer booklets have been completed. This third grade "little theatre" with its pioneer setting, is on display in the Herald window this week.

Dogs have proven most interesting to second graders and they have talked about how to care for the animals. Dog stories have been read, and some of the children drew life-size dog sketches for booklets. For language, Miss Ruth Ross arranged mounted magazine covers on the bulletin board and the children told original stories which these illustrated, then the others told which one was described.

Gannysack covering has been put on the big Indian tepees in first grade. Marilyn Goede has entered the room, coming from Wisner school. Yvonne Dunn brought candy, and Cleone Heine brought cookies for their two birthdays on Tuesday, November 20. The little folks brought yarns from home and wove these into Indian-type rugs.

Measles took a heavy toll in kindergarten room Friday, only six little tots answering roll call. The community project is proving most absorbing, the train being completed and apt to be made out of breakfast food and cracker boxes as this is a health project. An entire toy town will be made for the project. A Thanksgiving party was enjoyed on Wednesday.

PONCHATRAIN LOVE
Near the lake of Ponchatrain I found you
And here I shall forever be
Where the Spanish moss is waving welcome
Where the salt is warded from the sea.
Where the cypress grows beside the river
I shall ever sing my love to you
The brownest little maid of all the swamp land
You with tender eyes I know are true.
Let the world go by with all its sorrow
You alone shall always keep me here;
There is no sorrow on the lake, my dear one
When you, my love, I know are near.
It is here we'll dream our dreams together
Where the lators bask in sunshine bright;
'Tis here we'll build our hut where none can find us
Worship in the stillness of the night.
Yes, my dear, we'll worship one another
And die near some old gallant pine
Where one may sooth the eyelids of the other
And plant a grave with columbine.

Attic Yields Up Interesting Trio Of Scrap-Books For Margaret Mines

Three interesting old scrapbooks came to light recently when Miss Margaret Mines was excavating among family belongings stored in the attic. So fascinating these proved that the clean-up must be delayed while Miss Mines turned through the well-aged pages and found recorded in the clippings a cross-section of life of a century before. For the books date from 1840 which is an early date, indeed, in the history of this youthful country.

A neat person, a methodical one, who assembled these books. The clippings are now yellowed—small wonder for many of them are dated back to 1840. Each page is methodically numbered on little square tabs. What was occupying the thoughts of men, what were filling the papers at that time? Let's glance through.

We're reminded that these were dangerous days, that living conditions were crude, and that Indians presented ever-present danger to the Americans by an article on a Seminole massacre. Dr. Henry Perrine and his family were awakened from sound sleep by the Indian warwhoop and discharge of guns. The Indians were firing at the windows and glass falling. The family ran to a trapdoor which led to a cellar used for bathing—for the tides filled it two days. The doctor remained above and called to the Indians in Spanish, telling them he was a physician, at which they shouted out and left. The doctor then pulled a seed chest over the trapdoor and remained above, thinking himself safe. But the war-thirsty redmen returned, found him up in the cupola and massacred him, yelling like demons the while. Crockery, doors, windows were smashed, and chests of wearables carried off for loot. Then the house was fired and fell into the smoke-filled cellar. The entrapped white family managed to dig out and found a loaded launch which the Indians had temporarily deserted, and in which escape was made.

Recipes for getting rid of corns, hints on protecting grape vines, and religious clippings are interspersed with bits of poetry which took the unknown's fancy.

Unexpected Charge.
We read a laughable incident from Revolutionary war days. At Battle of the Thames, the British were in open formation and the American General Harrison ordered his men to push through these openings and form in rear of the British forces. "A huge, long-legged, brawny fellow named Lamb was in the American company. He weighed 240 pounds and was as good-humored as a pig, and brave as well. His great weight had broken down his Kentucky horse and he was mounted upon a short, stout, wild Canadian pony from whose sides his long limbs hung almost to the ground—looking not unlike an overgrown schoolboy astride a rough sheep. When the charge was made, Lamb's pony took fright and broke into a strain. Lamb pulled until the bit broke in the animal's mouth, and all command of him was lost.

"The little pony attached himself to the work, dashed out of the ranks, soon stripped off his file, leaders and pushed on in advance of the company. Lamb was no longer master of his horse nor himself, and he was in a quandary. If he rolled off he would be trampled to death by his own friends. If the horse rushed upon the British lines, he must be killed. Either way death seemed inevitable, so he thought he'd just say something they could tell his friends in Kentucky, when they went home."

"He struck both heels into the pony's flanks and urged him to his utmost speed. On they drove, some 50 yards in front of the leading file, Lamb's gigantic person swaying from side to side, and his legs swinging in a most portentious fashion—the little Canadian pony 'pulling foot' for all he knew how, his tail straight, his nostrils distended, his ears pinned back, and his shiny eyes flashing from under his shaggy foretop; with all the spite and spleen of a born devil. Just as he got within stride or two of the British, Lamb flourished his rifle and roared out in a voice of thunder, 'Clear the way, will you, for I am coming!' To his surprise the line opened right and left, and he passed through unhurt. So great was their astonishment at the strange apparition of such a rider, on such a horse, that they opened mechanically and let him pass. So soon as Lamb gained rear of their position, he rolled off on the grass and let the pony go his own road. A few minutes more and Lamb was with his comrades securing the prisoners."

ney from Cronstadt in 37 days and a few hours, said to be the shortest journey on record.
There was bitterness in the presidential campaign, such in that early days, and threat of destroying our democracy by placing the wrong man in power. Said General Jackson: "This is a great and momentous crisis in our national affairs, in which our dearest rights as freemen are deeply concerned. The presidential election at hand will decide the fate of our republicanism system... whether it will be perpetuated on the great principles laid down in our written constitution, or changed to a great consolidated government with rights of the states destroyed, our glorious union burst asunder, and constitutional liberty lost forever."
Then a pathetic story of a drunkard's daughter who, wasted and pale, lay dying while her drunken father cursed and babbled... it ends with the moralistic request, "Why don't you ask Pa to be still while I'm dying?" and must have brought tears to many a reader.

They rather dwelled on the morose, on the pathetic in those days. For instance, the article on a lunatic who fancied himself the "true God" and was taken to an asylum. He attended services regularly, carrying along his own chair, on the pews of which he had written, "True God, own me."
We read of a good old-fashioned baptism in the river when "five were buried with Christ by baptism" and a dove seemed to signify divine approbation as it flew over the water just as one young lady was being raised from under the water.

"Remember the riddles of yesterday? You'd expect to find a few in any well-balanced scrap-book and here they are: "Dean Swift often speaks of a queen whose name read backward or forward, is always the same. When a child you were dressed in a thing whose name read backward or forward, is always the same. You may go out and walk at an hour whose name read backward or forward is always the same," and so on.

The poetry varied, seeming to embrace all manner of subjects. Beginning with "Oh, happy days of childhood, Ye have left me all too soon. When I wandered in the wildwood and sang sweet "Bonnie Doon," to the all "tee-totaller's Song." "We are all tee-totallers from the Cold Water band... to oppose intoxication we have pledged our reputation and we give you invitation for all to join us here."

A doctor writes of the great benefits of tomatoes, recommending that persons moving from east or north to the west or south, should by all means make use of the tomato as a food, and that everyone should use it raw, cooked or in catsup with their daily food.

Open-Minded.
Then there's the story of an old man who went to the English elections wearing purple and orange colors on his coat, mounted on a donkey profusely decorated with blue ribbons. He joined the crowd and someone called out, "Hollo! master, why you are for both sides?" "Oh no!" "Why, you wear the colors of both parties," "Why, you say I dunner like copation; so go w' my party, and let my ass do w' his."

Let's reflect on the daily habits of Milton, the poet. "He rose at four in the morning during summer and at five in the winter. He wore coarse grey cloth, studied till noon, dined frugally, and in the evening sang accompanying himself on five or six olives and a little water, retired to rest at nine, and composed at night in bed."

The trial of Rev. Charles Torrey was occupying much space then. Rev. Torrey was accused and also convicted, of stealing three slaves from a Baltimore owner and carrying them to parts unknown. This stealing was punishable by law, of course, but those resourceful folks who operated the underground railways and spirited enslaved blacks up into free northern territory, were men and women of courage and conviction. The young minister was ordered to penitentiary for many years' confinement... so were many others before the Civil war came to decide, for all times, the question of human bondage.

Dear to the hearts of all backshopmen in printing offices are the traditional jokes to be played on unsuspecting "devils." Seldom does the newcomer escape being sent all innocently to borrow a "paper stretcher" at a rival print shop... to ask loan of the "type reducer," or a "round square," and usually early in his career he is introduced to "type lice" with squirt of black, sticky ink in the face. But the scrapbook tells of a certain youth who was sent by his heavy-humored colleagues to a neighboring office to borrow a "quart of editorial." He was sent back with a picture of a jackass. This was rather severe on the jokers but they immediately sent the lad back with a message that "it was editorial they wanted, and not the editor."

ment is well described... for four-and-twenty hours the corpse remains under the roof where death has taken place, then is carried to the cemetery, laid in its winding sheet in inner compartment of a low stone building. This solitary erection contains only two rooms, the inner being called Hall of Resurrection and containing only the bed and a bell-rop, the end of which is placed in hands of the corpse. This cord is attached to a bell which rings in the next room, and which is thence called the Chamber of the Bell. Thus, should the corpse come to life during the night, the slightest movement would ring the bell and he obtains instant help. The nearest relative must remain alone in the outer chamber, ready to answer a call from the dead one. A ghostly vigil this must have been.

Fortune in the Soil.
A hint to the farmers on how to make a fortune in farming, written in 1859: "Good people, if you will take my advice, we will have easy times in less than five years. There is gold enough within less than one foot of the top of the earth to pay ten times as much as we all wear. Pay strict attention and I'll tell you how to find it. When you go to town buy all you need so you need go no more than once in two months... get firewood split and ready for use... make it universal rule to go to bed at 7 o'clock from October 1 to April 1, and get up at four o'clock winter and summer. Whenever you awake in the night do not lie in bed awake but roll out and get at something that wants to be done. Commence plowing as soon as frost is out of the ground in March and plow two inches deeper than you ever plowed before... start planting the first warm days in April... plow as fast as you can... commence cutting your grass before the seed gets fairly ripe and do not let it have but one dew... let stock horses run out all winter... whenever you get your corn cut, dig your potatoes and gather your apples before they freeze... then fall to making rails and resetting your fence... if you have to go to town don't go on Saturdays for every trifling, indolent person is there to hinder you from attending to your business... but hurry with your purchase and go home to your family... be sure and get your hands to bed by 7 o'clock... when it comes bad rainy weather, split your wood, clean the stable, repair machinery, weatherboard the barn, etc... and no odds how bad your cause is, patience and perseverance will overcome everything."

Which must have been a stiff schedule, even in those hard-working days of '59.

Charles Jones has completed a new barn for Martin Christensen near Carroll.
From Wayne Herald for December 1, 1898: The new electric light plant is nearly completed and in a few more days the town of Wayne will be illuminated... Prof. R. Durin has received word that a diploma of recognition is to be sent him for one of his pieces of statuary... Edgar Wade and Miss Enola Caffee were married November 30, 1898... William Huff died at Carroll November 23, 1898... the new brick building to be erected by P. L. Miller and B. F. Swan will be occupied by Wilson Brothers... Judge W. F. Norris and J. T. Bressler went to Omaha to attend a banquet for the U. S. Grant club... a large party of young people had a skating party at the lake east of Wayne.
From Ponca Journal for November 30, 1883: Speaking about coal is a reminder that there used to be a coal and mining company here in Ponca. It was a duly organized company, properly officered, with a capital of $1,000,000. There were 20 members, each of whom had certificates of stock purporting to be worth $50,000. The holes which this company bored into the ground created considerable excitement while they were being bored. Prof. Aughey came and examined them and smelled of them and pronounced them to be good holes, and rich. But after the holes were bored, and after the people were bored, the excitement gradually died away and the stock fell in value. Many of the certificates were traded or spouted, some were given away, and others were used for wrapping paper. They were printed on strong linen paper so as to avoid tearing while going through the stock market. Besides the stylish printing, and figures representing the owner's right to it, etc., there were several appropriate pictures, one of which showed a heavily loaded coal miner coming up out of a coal shaft. The miner's eyes were a little bleared and in some other respects he looked somewhat groggy, but he was cheerful, and the bucket he was bringing up was filled to the brim with excellent coal. These elegant certificates were properly filled out, dated and signed by the president and secretary. They represented amounts ranging from $10 to $1,000. It took the president and secretary two weeks to sign their names to such an immense pile of wealth. But now, as we have seen, the certificates are somewhat used up. Probably not more than half of them could be found again. How would it do for those who have certificates to get together some evening and by a raffle or by a game of "trezeout" decide who shall have the whole? The winner can dedicate the wealth thus gained to the establishment of a free library or to endow a college. Or if he is not of a literary turn of mind, he can use them for a new style of restaurant meal ticket, or saloon checks, or to paper a room.

SYNOPSIS
Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby girl, whom he names "Penelope." In a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles.

For in that illuminating instant he realized that in adopting Penelope he had made a terrible mistake. His wife didn't want her! At the very moment of the commencement of his experiment, he knew it was a failure. However, it was too late to turn back. He must realize this, so she took the baby from him.

In a moment of insane fury, Mr. Gatlin performed what he considered a long neglected duty. He took Mrs. Gatlin's classical countenance in both hands, bumped her head repeatedly against the wall and told her that if she ever opened her mouth again in his presence without his permission he'd just kill her. She didn't. She sued him for divorce and had Penelope on the witness stand to prove that Mr. Gatlin had beaten her; that he had remained away from home until late at night and refused to reveal his whereabouts. Mr. Gatlin entered a cross-complaint and petitioned to have Penelope allocated to him. Unfortunately the judge was a pudding-head. He refused to accept Mr. Gatlin's explanation that

"Theodore," she said, "I must insist on one thing. Penelope must never know that you and I are not her natural parents. I feel that such knowledge might detract from her love for us."
"That won't work any hardship on me, my dear," he replied. "I feel just as enthusiastic about her as if I were her real father."
"Another thing, Theodore, I love Penelope dearly, as you know, but I can't be made a slave to her. Do you realize, dear, how she keeps me tied down?"
He gritted his teeth, and his wife went on: "We simply must have a nurse for her."
"Have two of 'em," he growled. "Whatever she needs she shall have."
"That's right. Start spoiling her immediately."

It was always like that. However, as the child developed, she brought Mr. Gatlin each day closer to happiness than he had ever been before. She was his refuge. She was a healthy baby and hence a happy baby, and there was not the slightest chance that she would ever be spoiled by having her own wishes perennially deferred to. If Louise Gatlin accomplished nothing else worth while (and this she accomplished unconsciously) she did nothing to inflate Penelope's ego, which, as everybody knows, is the breeding ground of human selfishness, which, in turn, accounts for the unhappiness of most of humanity. Mr. Gatlin, of course, would have done, in secret, much of this good work, had not the realization come to him quite early in Penelope's little girlhood that any demonstration of excessive affection on his part was inevitably counteracted by an excessive severity on the part of his wife toward the child.

She was a pretty child, of olive complexion, with very dark blue eyes and rich, shiny, jet black hair. She was unusually intelligent and affectionate, of quick sympathy and winning, gracious ways. She was the apple of Mr. Gatlin's eye, and by the time she was ten years old he no longer cared a snap of his finger for his wife.

If Penelope was Mr. Gatlin's refuge, he also was hers. She never complained to him—doubtless because she feared her foster mother, who had succeeded in inculcating in the child a duty complex quite out of proportion to the lady's deserts. Nevertheless it was understood between them that they were a pair of outlaws; mutual sympathy drew them closer together each day; their mutual love was a sweet and holy sentiment.

Mrs. Gatlin knew what she was up to. She was going to cure Penelope's fractured nose by faith—and he had no faith in such therapy. He followed with a doctor, demanding at the front door to be admitted—a request which was ignored. So he had laid hands on Mrs. Gatlin but once, and that only in a moment of frenzy. He granted Mrs. Gatlin the divorce, liberal alimony and the custody of Penelope; whereupon the honorable court was treated to the spectacle of Mr. Gatlin and Penelope weeping in each other's arms. However, Mr. Gatlin was permitted to have Penelope to himself two Sunday afternoons in each month and one-half of each school vacation.

The first Sunday afternoon Mr. Gatlin availed himself of this privilege, his quondam spouse had hysterics, for with the malevolence of a devil Mr. Gatlin announced he was taking Penelope to a ball game. He took her, too, and they had a gorgeous time together until a home run sailed into the bleachers and struck Penelope violently on her pretty little nose. Mr. Gatlin, with the unconscious form in his arms, fled to a hospital, where he was foolish enough to telephone Mrs. Gatlin what had occurred. She appeared on the scene and carried Penelope home at once.

Mr. Gatlin knew what she was up to. She was going to cure Penelope's fractured nose by faith—and he had no faith in such therapy. He followed with a doctor, demanding at the front door to be admitted—a request which was ignored. So he kicked in the panels of the front door, which he had no business to do because it was no longer his. Mrs. Gatlin having acquired it in the property settlement. Thereupon she summoned the police by telephone and had him arrested, and the next morning he was tried, and found guilty and placed under bond of a thousand dollars to remain away from the place for one year. He didn't do it, because he knew what would happen to Penelope if he did. And he could afford a thousand dollars—fifty thousand dollars if need be—to prevent that! He cracked within twenty-four hours—at night, but he was quiet about it. He remembered he had never straddled his latches, so he entered quietly and kidnapped Penelope.

Within two hours he was arrested en route to a San Francisco hospital in a motor car with Penelope, for disobeying the magistrate, he was adjudged guilty of contempt of court, his bond of a thousand dollars forfeited—and he was sentenced to thirty days in the county jail. Mrs. Gatlin preferred a charge of kidnapping against him, which is a felony, and since Mr. Gatlin knew he would be tried on that charge when he emerged from jail he improved his sitting hours by swearing to a insanity. Penelope, Mrs. Gatlin with unusual cunning, was brought before a jury, she was denying Penelope medical attention, she turned her house over to an agent and disappeared—with Penelope.

From his cell in the county jail, Mr. Gatlin issued orders to his attorneys to find Penelope and take legal steps to prevent his ex-wife from removing her again beyond the jurisdiction of the court that had granted their divorce. A diligent search of three months failed of its object, so Mr. Gatlin neglected to deposit any alimony to his ex-wife's credit. He knew she could manage very well without the alimony. But he also knew Louise. She would have what was coming to her or know the reason why.

When six months had passed, Mr. Gatlin decided he had never been acquainted with her, for she failed to make any demand upon him for her alimony; hence he realized she preferred, by keeping Penelope from him, to cause him the maximum of suffering rather than reveal her whereabouts by making a claim for the alimony due her. A year and a day from the date of the granting of her interlocutory decree, her attorneys petitioned for the final decree, which was granted. Mr. Gatlin thereupon discovered she was living in Paris.

This news brought him no comfort. She was beyond reach of United States law. However, he had detectives place her under surveillance. They reported her as living alone, so Mr. Gatlin concluded she had placed Penelope in a school.

One day the detective agency sent him a very good snapshot of a little girl and asked him if this was the child he was seeking. The agency was unable to recognize her the original of the photographs he had sent them.

When Mr. Gatlin gazed upon that photograph, he wept. Mrs. Gatlin's faith cure, as he had suspected it would, had proved wholly ineffective. In his agony, the words of the poem came back to him:
And you, my sweet Penelope, out there somewhere you wait for me, with buds of roses in your hair, and kisses on your mouth.
He sold his retail shoe business and placed all his assets in a trust fund, the income to be paid to him during his lifetime and to Penelope after his death. He saved out of this trust fund, however, ten thousand dollars, with which he purchased a letter of credit and a ticket to Cherbourg. (TO BE CONTINUED.)

Well, Maybe, Al
