Garden Theatre Project Dropped

Various Matters Occupy The City Councilmen At Tuesday Meeting.

Plans for the garden theatre project for Bressler park to be built by FERA labor to beautify the park and provide an outdoor meeting place, were abandoned by city council at Tuesday evening's meeting. A delegation of townpeople living near the park was present and protested the plan as detrimental to their property. In the group were Dr. and Mrs. C. A. McMaster, Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Larson, Mrs. Nettie Cail and Mrs. Jessie Reynolds.

Mrs. McMaster as spokesman, asked that another corner be chosen for the location, believing that it would bring too many persons to that vicinity and would be very noisy. It would attract young people to the park at late hours, and tramps would probably sleep within its shelter, she stated. Also, it would obstruct Mrs. Cail's view. Mr. Cail stated that if he had to sell her property, it would have less value because of the proximity to the landscaping project. Mr. Larson said that he thought if the garden theatre were carried through, it should be placed by a landscape architect. Councilman Carl Wright supported the protests, saying that he noticed the noise from the park even at his home.

Bill Designed To Aid Farmers

Congressman Stefan Asks Farmers Be Allowed To Pay In Grain.

Realizing the urgent need for feed and seed and the lack of buying power among farmers in drought areas, also realizing that with a plentiful crop the coming season prices for farm products will drop, Congressman Karl Stefan has introduced in the House of Congress at Washington, D. C., a bill asking that farmers be given immediate aid in getting seed and also that they be permitted to pay back this loan in kind. That is, that the farmer return oats for oats, corn for corn, so that he will not lose further by reason of very probable lowering of farm grain prices after the new crop is harvested.

"There are hundreds of farmers in the state of Nebraska who have no feed to start the spring work, or seed or even money to buy the supplies, even the necessities of life. These farmers do not believe it unreasonable to ask that they repay the government bushel for bushel in grain and seed which they would borrow at this time, and in case of a crop failure repay the seed and feed loan in honest labor."

It requires 2-1/2 bushels of seed oats per acre, Mr. Stefan illustrated. According to present price of seed oats, this amount of seed oats would cost the farmer $1.90 per acre. Average yield of oats is 27 bushels. "In view of the fact that there is very little livestock left or produced on the farms, compared to previous years, to feed, it is reasonable to assume that the prices of grain that will be produced this coming season will sharply lower or be comparable to crop-surplus years, should the reward of the coming season be normal." In the oats illustration, deduct one-third of the entire crop for rent. This leaves 18 bushels to the acre for the farmer and at 25c would equal $4.50. Deducting the cost of seed, $1.90, there is a balance of $2.60 per acre. Cost of planting, harvesting and threshing, estimated at $1.60 come off of this, leaving $1 as the farmer's balance per acre above actual costs.

Congressman Stefan illustrated corn in the same way before congressmen. Price of seed corn is $4.50 to $6 and a bushel will plant 3 acres. Figuring the seed at $5, cost would be 65c an acre. Preparing ground, plowing, planting, cultivating and harvesting are estimated at $3 to $3.50. With the average yield 27 bushels and a surplus, corn would drop to 25 or 30c per bushel. The farmer's return would be $4 to $5.40 per acre. De-

Contribution To Park Draws Fire From Opponents

DESPITE the depression or perhaps because of the depression, Wayne is making and is planning to make considerable improvement, and its upward course is sometimes easy and sometimes fraught with barriers, as witness the court action that delayed the proposed but now assured community house. One comparatively inexpensive improvement—to employ FERA labor—that has aroused more conflict than its importance would seem to deserve, is a so-called outdoor theatre in Bressler park. As we understand, the ground would be fashioned into acceptable shape, using rocks and an abundance of foliage, and making a grassy platform. The plan is opposed by some residents in the immediate neighborhood on the assumption that it would be a nuisance. Other park neighborhoods would welcome it as a benefit. Another objection is that it would lack utility. Others contend that it would lend rustic beauty and would, like a rainbow or sunset, make up in that way for any shortcomings in practical use. But it is not a major improvement, as the tempest might suggest, and if after plans have been studied and understood, the enterprise is abandoned, no one can be greatly disappointed. (Since the above was written, the city council listened to protests and decided to junk the proposed park project.)

Corn-Hog Rule Is Explained

Pasture And Poultry Schools In The County Are Successful.

Administrative Ruling No. 107, which provides that the 1935 corn-hog contract signer must produce 25 percent of his hog allotment and 25 percent of his corn base, alarms many farmers unduly, feels Agent G. H. Liggett. They feel they are unable to sign contracts because they are unable to produce 25 percent of their hog base.

This ruling is not intended to force farmers to buy feed in order to produce 25 percent of their market base. If a farmer does not have the feed in some other way is prevented from producing 25 percent of his market base, he is still allowed to sign a contract and will have no deductions made from his contract.

The only object in this ruling is to prevent the retired farmer from collecting benefit payments on an operation he had no intention of carrying out. "Wherever a man is actually farming he is not affected by this ruling in any way," Mr. Liggett explains.

Sign-up of contracts is continuing at Mr. Liggett's office in the court house and no definite date of closing is yet set. Appraisal work started this week.

Hold Pasture Schools. T. D. Scheinhelm of Lincoln, was here last Thursday to conduct instruction at Carroll and Wayne about pastures. He also explained the pasture contests. Entries in the temporary and permanent pasture improvement contest will close April 1 and those in the new permanent pasture class close July 1. Mr. Liggett was well pleased with attendance and interest at the poultry school last Thursday, about 40 coming for instruction by F. E. Musshell and Lloyd Vance of Lincoln. Mr. and Mrs. Musshell were overnight guests in the G. H. Liggett home.

Expenses Needless Fear

The Norfolk Daily News calls attention to partisan criticism of Herbert Hoover's advice to return to the gold standard as a sound way to recovery, suggesting that the president may, in harmony with pre-election pledges, have in mind that very thing, and so warning against possible embarrassment. But that is needless fear. If administration chiefs and satellites were not invulnerable to embarrassment over inconsistencies, they would, contrasting pre-election promises with subsequent performance, have been embarrassed beyond recovery long ago.

A Message from Moscow.

Omaha Journal-Stockman: Out of darkest Russia comes a story that has all the earmarks of truth since it simply confirms the experience of all ages that penalizing thrift is a poor policy. The message from Moscow declares that "plans for a great cattle raising drive to reconstruct the industry which was laid low by the kulaks' revenge were formulated by the shock farmers congress. 'The tillers of the soil from the seven republics of the union applauded lustily when Jacob Yakoff, member of the central committee of the communist party, outlined plans for the re-admission of the kulaks, the wealthy peasants, to the soviet farms. Yakoff and his aid camp for the agriculturist announced the former class enemies who have repented will be accorded lenient treatment as a vanquished foe.' We are all more or less familiar with the early stages of the agricultural reforms in soviet Russia, how the thrifty and successful 'kulaks' or peasant farmers were stripped of their farms and other property and either shot or sent to exile while the farms and live stock were turned over to the state, and operated politically with the usual and inevitable result, reduced production and reduced state revenues. If the tide has turned, as the announcement from Moscow would seem to indicate, and thrifty farmers are to be once more given an opportunity to develop their initiative and industry, there may be reason to look for the better things from that communist cursed land.

Former Concord Man Recognized As Corn Authority

That Wayne vicinity has produced a notable scientist and a man who has made valuable contributions to the knowledge of corn genetics is evidenced by a feature article appearing in an edition of the Pasadena (Calif.) Post which came into hands of Miss Ruth Pearson of Wayne. The scientist is Dr. Ernest C. Anderson, formerly of Concord vicinity and a brother of Ivor and Miss Ethel Anderson.

Dr. Anderson is in charge of the California Institute of Technology at West Arcadia, Calif., and spends part of each year teaching at Caltech where he is an associate professor of genetics. He was brought out to the California Institute of Technology in 1928 from the University of Michigan, where he was teaching and doing research work. "A scientist through and through," says the article, "His hobbies are botany and 'bug collecting,' pastimes which he enjoys during camping trips."

"The Farm" as the experiment institute at West Arcadia is known, abounds with corn-pale green seedlings in the hot house, acres of stalks growing in the surrounding ground, corn cobs neatly tagged and packed in mottled, to prevent pests destroying them. There is the "ghost" corn with leaves of pale green striped with white, "lazy" corn with stalk sprawling over the ground in spineless manner, unable to stand erect without the aid of a stake, rootless corn, dwarf corn, corn with peculiar tassels, corn with husks covering each kernel, corn with dented kernels, black, yellow, red, orange, battleship grey and spotted corn. Fifty thousand corn plants have aided Dr. Anderson in his work during the past year so and 30 thousand were started last fall to use in experimental work. The corn seed is prepared for planting and planted almost every month in the year; the crops being staggered so that a constant supply of corn at the desired stage of growth is assured for experimental purposes.

Dr. Anderson's particular interest is the invisible little genes which are found in the chromosomes, bearers of heredity. And it is the location of these genes which he is seeking.

The work on chromosomes is not being carried on with a view to economic application but entirely for the purpose of obtaining a better understanding of inheritance, says the doctor. Yet, one of the plant breeders in West Virginia is utilizing Dr. Anderson's interchanges as an aid in the development of smut-resistant corn. Dr. Anderson is not concerned with problems of human heredity in his experiments although he admits that the more that is known about heredity in general, the more intelligently eugenists can deal with problems of human heredity and plant and animal improvement.

"The Farm" is an ideal place for detailed, scientific study. Secluded from curiosity seekers, it gives Dr. Anderson and his assistants an opportunity to work uninterrupted. The institution has stood many years and its work is known and recognized abroad.

Remove Technicality In Senate Motion

Lincoln, Feb. 22—With technical difficulties removed the senate today re-passed a concurrent resolution ordering an investigation of conditions at the Wayne State Teachers' college.

The measure was passed Wednesday as a "joint and concurrent resolution," but was recalled because such a resolution must be in the form of a bill. Dropping the word "joint" solved the difficulty.

The resolution authorized the appointment of a legislative committee of five to investigate teaching staff conditions. The house must concur in the resolution before the investigation will be made.

Pluck LIKE individuals, towns are having a strenuous experience trying to maintain advantages and keep moving ahead during this period of economic fear and uncertainty. In making progress, enterprises undertaken usually invite the opposition of persons who think their interests will be hurt. If obstructionists can muster only the strength of a minority, bedoming boosters when they think they are not adversely affected, and shifting the task of raising barriers to another minority group, a community is reasonably certain to grow substantially, see strong property demands, encourage home-seekers and new business ventures. In a town where opposition is well restricted to a minority, investments are safe and the future is reassuring.

Wayne is thus happily situated and unusually favored. Exceptional school and agricultural advantages have grouped here a wide awake and progressive citizenship. Enough opposition develops to arouse stout support to worthy undertakings, sweeping aside a kicking minority and insuring steady headway. If obstructionists were to unite in opposition to every proposed advancement, the town would be overwhelmed and would be helplessly and hopelessly mired down. Witness the town whose majority doesn't care! Inspect the town where a majority starts a hammer chorus when any improvement is proposed. You will find the spirit of dissent so firmly fixed that no one has the courage to suggest a public enterprise or risk a private investment. A town dominated by non-concurrence and perennial mossbackism is on the way out. In these times, such a town, indifferent to opportunities and needs, has an especially gloomy outlook.

Ominous PROPOSED amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act are contained in two identical bills—one in each house—and are now being considered by the proper committee. According to an analysis of the proposed legislation, the theorists down in Washington design to increase bureaucratic power in regulating farm operations. It is proposed to give the secretary of agriculture authority to decide questions of production and marketing, and substitute management by remote control for the privilege long enjoyed by the farmer to do his own planning and exercise his own judgment. The analysis discloses that the initial idea of basing the agricultural act on voluntary cooperation would be changed by adoption of the amendment, and that the farmer would, in that event, find himself still more largely restricted if he signs a government contract and even more seriously handicapped if he doesn't sign one. As reported, more absolute control is proposed by the amendment, and it would not only involve farming, but manufacturing and distribution. Congress should curtail rather than extend the power of Washington bureaucrats, decreasing instead of increasing obstructive interference with agriculture and other lines of endeavor. Legislation calculated to aid any group should not have tied to it so many restrictive strings that it proves more of a hindrance than a help.

Editor's Answer SAMUEL McKELVIE devotes the editorial page of his current Nebraska Farmer to answering a woman who criticizes his lack of sympathy for the things going on in Washington official circles. The critic is not specific, but bases her chiding words on what she assays as good intentions. Mr. McKelvie points out weaknesses in the NRA, proposed thirty-hour week, social insurance, giant public gratuities, mounting national debt and threatening tax load, and concludes with these paragraphs: "It is perfectly human for people to sit by and let situations like this go on without complaint so long as it does not affect them directly and immediately. Yet it must be apparent that we are building a house of cards which will crash about our ears unless the course of government is changed. Only the sovereign citizen can bring that about. If we are content with the little piece of money we are getting from the government today that is what we will get until the well goes dry. Then what?"

Senate THE United States senate is manifestly wrong in opposing President Roosevelt's plan to reduce government wages below the scale prevailing in private industry. In the past, the recovery program has been hurt by fixing the government's pay above what private industry could afford, and thus increasing the burden on business organizations which are expected to absorb the unemployed. The president finally discovered the mistake and in trying to correct it, he is so far blocked by the senate.

The talk in Washington to reduce the appropriation for relief expenditures is more sensible than raising wages above those paid by private industry. The idea of trusting the judgment of one man to make wise use of nearly five billions of dollars is no doubt justly questioned, and the senate might find popular approval of opposition to this plan. However, the government's further interference with private industry by outbidding wages it can pay would seem only an unnecessary truckling to labor unions at a critical juncture in the recovery movement.

The senate has had plenty of reasons to regulate and restrict the executive branch of the government, but in the one thing in which it proposed to assert its prerogative, it got off on the wrong foot.

The last week-end did not turn out to be a happy one for travelers who ventured away from home on invitation of Saturday's kindly sunshine. Wind and snow took possession Sunday, and highways soon became impassable. Stranded in other points or stuck in deep snow drifts, numerous persons had the joy of a Sabbath journey turned into a hard experience. The fall of snow will help, and the extra freezing has done no damage.

Both the United States house and senate appear to be shying at NRA legislation. The administration wants NRA extended two years, but if the lawmakers and bureau creators know its record of failure, as they should, it would not seem necessary to hesitate over a question of what to do.

Travelers to the business district of Wayne will not have to park cars on top of snow banks. The snow has been hauled away and parking is as convenient as in mid-summer, thanks to the progressive judgment of the city administration.

We are sure the Nebraska senate committee hit a popular chord when it quietly and quickly strangled the bill proposing to fasten an NRA law on this state.

Youth Settles Down. Omaha World-Herald: A profound change has been taking place in the prevailing type of college boy, according to Dr. Walter A. Jessup, president of the Carnegie foundation. The blasé, sophisticated, rah-rah boy type is passing. His place is being taken by a "hard-working, serious-minded person who demands more of the college library, the laboratory, and the instructor than did his brother of a decade ago."

Perhaps the change was inevitable. Phenomena such as those which marked the flaming youth period are more or less epidemic. They run their course and subside. Youth has been liberated from some of the old restraints imposed upon it by convention, and probably will remain so. It is a part of the new freedom which has followed breaking the shackles represented by the phrase, "Woman's place is in the home," with the unspoken implication, "and nowhere else." It is as natural that the mood of youth should swing back toward a more serious contemplation of responsibility as that the beginning of the period of liberty should be marked by excesses of frivolity.

Perhaps the depression has helped on the change. Such an expression as that through which the nation has passed in recent years hurts the weak fearfully, but young characters with the stomach for a struggle can grow strong on the sacrifices which it entails.

The future leadership of America is being developed in the colleges and universities of today. Dr. Jessup's observation is an optimistic forecast of what it is to be.

Signs Of Better Business. Omaha Journal-Stockman: Business is getting better. There's no doubt about it. Biased partisan reports are unreliable but the public has learned that the reports of reputable commercial agencies can be depended on, and last week's report by Dun and Bradstreet, Inc., was one of the most encouraging sent out by that agency. "Business again is giving more convincing manifestations of pushing forward to new heights for the year. Any pause at this time," the review stated, "is viewed as a preparatory period for more sweeping advances, rather than marking the beginning of a reaction similar to that which followed the abortive recovery movement early in 1934."

Naturally the gold clause decision of the United States supreme court created some uneasiness but the review declares that the announcement of the decision "was followed by an immediate broadening of buying wholesale and commodity markets, but its greatest benefit was the complete dissolution of uncertainty and fear which had restricted current action and postponed the release of future plans." And still there are those who insist that business is showing no indication of revival. It looks as if the man was right who declared that "the depression would be over and recovery begun at least six weeks before some people realized it."

A Burdened Town. Lincoln Journal: A Kansas town has but twenty-six houses, yet it is located in four townships and has four voting precincts. It is difficult to find a community so small that it has no distinction.

CRITICISM. An author criticizes newspaper reporters for referring to a crime as "bold" or "daring," and planting in an impressionable mind a suggestion of heroism. If an adjective is deemed necessary—though it is never really necessary—the critic would call a crime "cowardly" or "despicable." "Daring" implies strength and nobility of character, and may be worthily bestowed on one who rescues a drowning person or who risks his life in a burning building to bring a helpless individual to safety. Young persons are easily influenced in the right or wrong direction, and the exercise of proper psychology in writing crime stories would tend to displace any possible glamour with rightful ugliness or repugnance.

demagoguery. The Journal points to the Ford industry as a refutation of the charge that big fortune paperize the country. The Ford industry and General Motors and other industries have furnished employment and helped the circulation of money. Break down and redistribute centralized capital necessary to produce automobiles and where would industry and employment land?

New Type Report For Grade Pupils

To Develop Inner Urge For Learning Is Hope Of System.

A new type of report card which is being put into use in first three grades of Wayne city school and which will be extended to other grades through the eighth later, is designed to encourage pupils to acquire the true learning situation, states Supt. H. R. Best. The object is to get pupils to compete with themselves rather than with other pupils. The student with ordinary ability and a will to try will receive just credit. The pupil who is naturally capable and inclined to let his ability carry him through, will be encouraged to greater accomplishment.

The new report will be worded so that children can understand it and will include habits of citizenship. Work will be graded good, passable or failure. Habits will be judged as follows: U for underdeveloped, D for developed and I for improvement.

First six-week period of second semester closes this Thursday in Wayne school. Basketball team met Neligh here last evening. Helene Dobbins entered as a junior Tuesday, transferring from Ainsworth.

Ainsworth Men Buy Wayne Bakery

Lutheran Program To Be Broadcast

Lutherans of this vicinity will be interested in the DX distance program which will be broadcast by KFUC Saturday morning, 1 to 3 C. S. T., from Concordia seminary of the Lutheran church, Missouri

AT EIGHTEEN.

A study of 100 juvenile delinquents in the Annandale Reformatory of New Jersey shows that eightyone were unemployed when overtaken by blighting temptation. Of the remaining nineteen, four were working for relatives for board as wages. The story of unemployment, with nagging need for food and clothing—often eagerness to enjoy privileges dear to the heart of youth—reveals the promptings that bring youthful offenders into the meshes of the law. An unemployed father and an impoverished mother often start the son on the career of stealing with the certainty of ultimate detection and punishment. The average age of offenders is given at eighteen years, and unsatisfied desire to work and earn is mentioned as the chief cause. Then why pass a constitutional amendment, as proposed, to prevent the employment of young persons under the age of 18?

Selected From The Editor's Late Radio Talks

Today marks the natal anniversary of George Washington, revolutionary leader and first president, and his spirit still lives in the souls of succeeding generations who would preserve original principles and original ideals. In 150 years since the struggling colonies tore loose from foreign oppression and organized an independent nation, great progress has been made. We have become the richest and strongest nation in the world, and with all our resources and all our inherited character fiber, we should be able to exemplify the courage of Washington and maintain the early traditions of this country by successfully resisting the blandishments of dangerous experiments. Peril lies in strength that permits excess in self-indulgence. We are accustomed to so much and expect so much without paying the price that we often overload our capacity and weaken our position. To Washington and his faithful followers who sacrificed and suffered to fashion an independent nation, we may well look for inspiration to re-assert first principles and re-enforce a policy which guarantees equality. From the government's pioneers we may gather the spirit that does not ask for an easy berth, nor seek something for nothing, but rather the spirit that asks only for a fair chance to work and save and live without unnecessary restrictions. Keeping alive memory of Washington is a band of worthy descendants of the colonial struggle—Daughters of the American Revolution. Members of this patriotic group keep fresh the memory of Washington's rugged character and vital achievements. These noble women are an outstanding and potent force for genuine and uncompromising Americanism. On this anniversary we not only recount the deeds woven into the foundation of this country, but commend the spirit of the Daughters of the Revolution—inalienable descendants of the Revolution.

Inhumanities make one wonder why the world has been unable to profit more from the example and precepts of the exalted Nazarine. Cruelties in the dark middle ages are recounted as evidences of a benighted civilization. But have the intervening years brought us closer to the fount of mercy? Every war to be a success must synod, St. Louis, Mo., on frequency of 550 K. C. Dean Fritz and Prof. Th. spurn supernal values and become a brutal saturnalia of hate and slaughter. Every finely wrought sensibility must be thickly calloused to stand the sweeping fire of deadly conflict. I have just read in the Congressional Record a speech by Congressman Shannen of Missouri, revealing among other things the merciless devastations and sickening inhumanities practiced by both north and south in prosecuting the Civil war. In the Spanish-American war, the American soldiers had to be aroused by remembrance of the blowing up of the Maine and by the cruel treatment of the Cubans by the Spaniards to qualify for sanguinary battle. The World war, the worst and most blighting of all wars, left innumerable marks of savagery. Are we still suffering from forced ugliness of the war spirit?

Summary killings in Russia, Austria and Germany, often on most trivial charges, seem more to answer the demands of convenience or revenge than the edicts of justice. Only recently in Germany two women were executed on grounds of treason, whereas, their memory, like that of Joan of Arc in France, may turn from ruthless sacrifice to proud glorification. Let us come nearer home in pointing out brutalizing treatment. I have just read of the release of two prisoners who had been kept in solitary confinement at the Nebraska penitentiary for nine years and four months for leading a revolt in that penal institution. The newly installed warden said he could not sleep in the consciousness of the two men in solitary cells. Bad as the prisoners may have acted nearly ten years ago, why a system of torture that heals no wounds, that leads to no reform, but that slowly adds to physical and mental wreckage, and must appall the conscience of any one conversant with the facts? Justice never needs to be cruel or vengeful, and we are glad to note the humane qualities of the new warden who has restored to two men the usual walks of prison restraint.

Nations and individuals who profess to believe in the exemption of life radiated nearly two thousand years ago, will advance civilization by remembering ideals of mercy in exacting due retribution. ## Can You Remember

When Telephone Wires Were Strung Along Fences... When Farm Lines Switched Into a Hardware Store... When Toll Lines Were Kept Out of City Limits?

When you pick up your compact French telephone or reach for your desk phone and within a few seconds are conversing in easy tone with friends in Sioux City or Chicago or the far coasts, spare a thought for those not-so-distant days when telephone service was limited by city limits, when one's co-users could almost be counted on one hand, and when a first-try connection was cause for wonderment and great rejoicing. It's not so long ago, only about 1897—that the telephone came to Wayne to bind closer together this community and speed up communication and business activity.

Some independently owned and operated phones were already in use at Wayne—they were the Blake type, very rude concerns, the wooden boxes and battery mounted on a wall-board about three and one-half or four feet high. The receivers were fully eight or ten inches long and the mouthpiece but a hole in the box. William F. Perdue well remembers these early phones and particularly the battery which was a tall glass jar containing a powder dissolved in water, a piece of carbon and stick of zinc, all stirred up together. One cranked this formidable machine and usually some-thing happened. At first it was approached with a certain distrust and fear for who knew what this new noise-carrier might do? It might shock one... it might roar in one's ear and cause deafness... any number of things might happen. With quite as much scoffing and as much belittling as heralded the advent of the auto, Wayne experimented with the telephone.

In Herald for July 22, 1897, we find report of the new invention reaching Wayne: "W. A. Cottrell and W. W. Pritchard, the telephone men, were in the city first of the week. A car of poles was received here which they are distributing along the line and they expect to reach Wayne today with the line, which they expect to have in operation in about 10 days." The march of progress was to extend southwestward for a week later we read: "Mr. Pritchard went to Winside this morning where he expects to put in the phone and make connection with the new line by evening." Evidently things did not move as swiftly as expected for it is along in September that records show Mr. Pritchard would be putting in the exchange in Wayne in about 10 days, enough subscribers having subscribed to insure the success of the exchange. "Wayne is pushing to the front and will, in due time, take her place as the first city in Northeast Nebraska, if not already."

Then along in October we learn that the exchange was started on October 5 and Mr. Pritchard says the work will be rushed along. "In a few months our citizens will wonder how they ever got along without the telephone, the same as without the water works. W. I. Conn, who looks after the telephone lines in the city." Now things were going to happen. And sure enough, by November 18, the telephone wires had been stretched and fastened to the insulators and Mr. Pritchard informed the press that "we would put in four to five telephones by that evening, and would have 25 ready for operation by Saturday night."

And so the telephone came to Wayne, connecting by a single, swaying wire the members of families scattered over the county, and linking them, in turn, with telephone users over the entire country. Wasn't it wonderful? No longer need one send word to town by neighbors who were journeying in... no longer need the boy of the family put a bride on old Nelly and gallop over to the neighbor's with a message... no longer need one depend upon mails made uncertain by changeable weather... by a vigorous cranking of the impressive big wall-box, one could communicate with the world!

One can well imagine that the wires were kept right busy these first few days of the telephone's operation... Mother, dad, grandma and granddad, every one of the children would have to try it, and what a thrill to establish connection with someone way on the other side of the town and hear his voice come back, perhaps a bit garbled, perhaps accompanied by a whining and a crackling, but nevertheless a very exciting venture.

Mr. Pritchard's exchange, was first located over the Ahern store and his daughter served as operator. He sold sewing machines, along with his telephone responsibility. One can imagine that calls were not too numerous for only four or five subscribers were se-curd the first week, and this had swelled to 25 the next. Martin Savidge is said to have had the first phone on the Wayne exchange.

The telephones proved entirely satisfactory, according to the Herald, and "one by one the improvements in the city which the Herald has longed to see are being made." Rates were then $1.50 for business phones and $1 for residences... but facilities were very limited and service curtailed.

Toll lines had come to the outskirts of Wayne but no farther—Mr. Pritchard held franchise for the city. So the long distance station was located at J. C. Hostetter's, now home of the William Von Seggerns, and here Miss Blanche Hostetter presided over the exchange and calls from a distance were brought into a tiny booth, to which townspeople were summoned when needed.

Mr. Pritchard retired from the exchange in 1900 and Ray Donnelly succeeded him, his wife and her sister operating the switchboard. Three years later city council granted franchise to the Nebraska Telephone company authorizing use of streets and alleys for telephone purposes.

Then came the advent of farm lines connecting with the Wayne exchange. A. B. Clark had put in the first farm phone—he nailed up two-by-fours along his fence-posts and ran the wire on this, using poles to carry it across roads and driveways. Frank Strahan had the second one at his ranch, building it out into western Nebraska and saw telephone lines running along the fences. It looked all right... it worked all right... he brought it into the house and put it into use. And the fence-post telephone line worked out pretty well most of the time, except when old Bessie would see a tempting clump of green grass just over the fence and poke her neck through, thus crossing the wires. Then Mr. Auker would have to walk the fence-length and find the damage. This unique line was later replaced by high-strung wire... it leads out to Ray Robinson's, Oscar Johnson's, Albin Carlson's, Mrs. C. R. Glenn's and ends at W. H. Racherbaumer's. At first the farm lines ended in Chace and Neely's hardware store and the men there, including H. B. Craven, switched calls over to other farm lines. This lasted several months.

In November of 1903, "15 representative citizens met in the law office of Welch and Stanley for purpose of promoting a rural telephone line. John Liveringhouse was elected chairman and William Fisher, secretary. All were enthusiastically in favor of the enterprise and the only question before the meeting related to the course of procedure to accomplish the desired end. The intention was to form an association, subscribe ample capital and build an independent telephone line including in its circuit all farms whose owners or occupants wish to have its benefits by cooperating... after a general talk, a committee of five, F. M. Griffith, J. M. Ross, F. L. Neely, W. H. Gildersteeve and Henry Kellogg was appointed to investigate ways that may be pursued in furthering the project. Somebody must have worked, and worked hard for by January enough farmers, about 150, signed up to guarantee the building of three rural lines running out from Wayne. Farmers owned their own lines and paid switching fee, thus gaining communication in different parts of the county. The farmer-builders were to do all labor, even reeling off the wire and getting it ready to place on the poles. F. E. Bell had come in 1904 and opened an independent exchange, leasing rooms over the Kass building and Lanes drug store (the Kass building is now known as Gaertner building). However, he sold his interest in the new independent telephone company to Arthur Overshiner, "a Chicago capitalist," and A. J. Ferguson was elected president, and A. N. Matheny, secretary-treasurer.

It was in August of 1904 that Mr. Perdue began his long affiliation with the telephone service in Wayne. D. E. Miller bought out the exchange in 1905, and in December the sold to R. Philles and son, E. E. Philles who operated the project until it was sold to Nebraska Bell Telephone company in 1910. It was still the old magneto system in use... you turned the crank to call central, in town as well as country. The toll lines of the Nebraska company were brought into the Ahern building, then housed in a residence belonging to Grant Mears which stood on site of the Standard-Oil company's station.

R. R. Hartford was the new manager, coming in 1909, and Pingie Hughes followed him in 1910 to remain three years. (Mr. Hughes was a brother of George Hughes of Wayne).

The exchange just abandoned was built in 1911 in the new Bressler building at estimated cost of $16,000 to $20,000... common bathry plant was installed and all equipment brought up to date. It was a great innovation... you just lifted the receiver and this caused an electric flash to central... no more cranking. Julius Lane came in 1913 as manager, J. R. Almond succeeded him in 1915, and R. S. Krause came in 1920. He was followed in 1921 by O. R. Randall, C. L. Pickett's predecessor.

The inauguration of Wayne's attractive new telephone building called for much additional equipment... fully a mile of underground cable and two miles of cable on poles. This was necessary to bring equipment up to par with the new switchboard and building. In several places underground cables have replaced air cables.

Plan for Presbyterian.
Mrs. F. L. Blair and Mrs. C. C. Herndon were in Norfolk Friday to attend meeting of executive board of Niobrara Presbyterian at home of Mrs. O. L. Randall. Mrs. Blair, local Missionary president, is secretary of children's work and Mrs. Herndon is corresponding secretary in Presbyterian. Plans were made for the meeting at Madison April 4 and 5. Mr. Blair took the women to Norfolk.

Margaret Jones, Lindley Koenig, Bud Bornhoff, Durward Soyoy, Gerald Wright and Joe Smolski accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Mortensen and Leona Corryell went to Sioux City Friday morning for the invitational debate tournament at Morningstar college.

The Wayne group competed in E division, made up of schools with smaller equipment, debating Irwin, Towan Johnson, Wakonda S. D., West Point and Yankton. In semi-finals the Wayne debaters lost to Yankton. Yankton won final of class to defeat East high of Sioux City. Lindley Koenig received special mention from the judges. The boys lodged at a fraternity house and private house, and the girls at the Mortensens at a dormitory.

Miss Freda Sund who, Leaches at Tilden, spent the week-end with her folks, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Sund.

Mr. and Mrs. Burt Nunemaker and family of Sioux City, spent Sunday in the Richard Banister home.

First Graders At The Training School Learn Much Not Found In Textbooks

Reporter Find That Phonetics And Good Manners Are Stressed For Very Small Folks; Posture Is Given Special Attention.

A word of advice to parents—if your offspring are numbered among the 17 first graders attending the training school, best look to your phonetics and your manners as well, for these wee citizens to be bit fair to out-strip you, if you aren't sufficiently convinced, just tie yourself up to the first grader's stronghold one of these days, and your argument is won. Ask any first grader and he'll tell you his teacher is Miss Edith Stocking and that he's in A or B group. He'll probably volunteer the information that everybody's getting young this year—a lot younger than usual because several of the boys and girls are only five years old and none over six. Drop in of a later afternoon, say Thursday, and watch Miss Eleanor Kram, college student from Alameda, and Miss Jean Mason of Tekamah, with their young charges. Everyone sitting up straight, alert, thoroughly interested in whatever is the order of business. Loveable youngsters, too—trim bobbed heads topping cunning little printed dresses—the boys practically garbed in brown corduroys and overalls. Blond's, most of them—only Mary Renard and Bob Whitthits verge on the brunette. And Ivan Sublette and Ard Lewis have golden-white hair and matching complexions. It's time for spelling. And now comes an eye-opener in good manners. Group A is ready—pencils all sharpened? asks Miss Stocking. Seventeen pencils are held aloft, everyone with a nice narrow black point—two helpers are chosen. Miss Stocking hands them the papers upon which are written in large, legible hand "Cats are grey." "Thank you, Miss Stocking," say the monitors and therewith proceed to distribute the paper to each of the nine making up group A. "Thank you," say the recipients and "You're welcome" responds the monitor. Ready now—Phoebe Steele, Polly Beckner, Jean Nuss, Marilyn Goetz, Mary Frances Jones, Ard Lewis, Ivan Sublette, Bob Shulteis and John Parke take position, backs very erect, pencil in position, and painstakingly form the words. "Cats are grey." Who's that writing left-handed? Oh, it's John. And who is sitting beside Marilyn but sitting not a word, and not even looking for her pencil? It's Marilyn's great big doll who came to school with her and has a bright red chair right next to her little owner's. Her name, well, she hasn't a name, according to Marilyn. One guesses that a name is not very important. Under each individual desk-seat is a little drawer where are stored one's two rulers, play book and primer, also a box of paper letters and pencil. During class hours these drawers are kept open, giving easy access to all the necessities of a busy first grader. Now group A studies and the B's have reading lesson—all about a boy named Bob who went to the fair and took prizes for riding horseback. Each child reads a line—Marilyn Bressler, Dorothy Chichester, Mary Renard, Rolly Bell James, Louis Kohlmeier, Rolly Bell Steele, Carol Gifford and Donna Rae Owen—one makes a technical error, reads "They should have prizes" but Miss Mason's book says "so the next child in line reads" it correctly. It was a good story because it was about boys and girls that did just the things young first graders love, and then every page has a brand new word or two to add to their rapidly-growing vocabulary and to tell to mother and dad after school. Time for spelling—Miss Stocking writes "Carol may go on the board—Carol is pleased" because that's her very own name and it's fun to see it written big on the board. It's a new word so Miss Stocking sounds it all out with the children—the "a" has its arm down (and promptly each of the eight children put an arm straight down to their sides to show the "a" just how it must act.) Then the "o" has its arm way out straight—(out go eight plump little arms.) "Then," says Miss Stocking, "we leave a little gap and go on and write go. And the 'g' in 'go' has its legs crossed. Quite human and active letters, these. Miss Stocking asks for slow, round fat writing. Now group A has inspection of writing—Miss Stocking comes and looks at each painstakingly-formed copy and tells each what she likes about the page—and she likes practically all of them enough to say: "You may have an 'E.'" All but one lad who accidentally left the tail off part of his 'g's' and so upon questioning, decides he is entitled to a "g" instead. Marilyn pops the end of a golden-yellow curl in the corner of her mouth. Mary Frances has ready smile for everyone. John is lively, active as befits his red-dish-tinted topping. Polly is wearing the blue ribbon she earned in class yesterday and points this out to her classmates. Reading period—each A member stands up straight, shoulders back, chest out, book held firmly and reads a sentence. "P's are properly accented, 't's are ticked out and 's's' almost hissed. Look but mother and dad—these youngsters will be showing you up on pronouncements—they're talking 'pure' English in school-time and it's going to stay with them, you can well believe. Nor will a scoffing Englishman be able to laugh at their pronunciation of 'cattle' which usually comes from mid-western lips as 'catl'." They're reading about horses and this inspires John to remark: "I knew a big work-horse that had been hauling a plow all day and I said 'Good work, Big Jim,' and I gave him a little apple." Which was a nice act, to be sure. There's a new, big word on this page—"balloon"—and each one is to point to it—a minute and a chubby finger has parked on each page. Then all look for "give," that word with the hard frog sound. B side has writing inspection and all but one is awarded a "g."

SYNOPSIS.

Theodore Gallin adopts a baby whom he named "Penelope." But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in divorce. Ten-year-old Penelope is given into the keeping of Mrs. Gallin. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gallin spirits the child to Europe. Gallin will Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when an accident ends his life. Ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt is a young psychiatrist. Dan McNamara, chief of police, brings him Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara obtains Burt's expert testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is won over to Nance's cause. Nance, having a criminal record, is sent to the penitentiary. She persuades Lanny to smuggle out a letter, which a confederate steals from her. Nance escapes and goes to Lanny's apartment. Lanny tells chief McNamara who orders her to bring Nance to his apartment. Detectives Flynn and Angellotti seeking the reward for Nance's apprehension, go to Lanny's apartment in search of Nance. McNamara finds a blank check in Nance's prison cell. From a banker McNamara learns that Nance Belden is Penelope Gallin, heiress to $750,000. Mrs. Gallin is now the wife of a man named Merton.

CHAPTER VI—Continued.

McNamara picked up the fresh card, upon the reverse of which he had fingerprinted the woman who at times drank too much. He placed this card in the typewriter of his secretary, who had gone for the day, and carefully filed it in with Nance Belden's criminal record. Then he passed over the top of this record the three photographs of the dead woman he had taken from the old files, carefully burned all the evidence of substitution, went upstairs and handed the record to the clerk, who replaced it in the files. Promptly at six-thirty a knock sounded on his door, and to his hearty "come," Messrs. P. Flynn and A. Angellotti entered.

"I sent for you two boys to tell you in no uncertain terms to lay off Miss Rebecca Lanning," the chief began. "However, I owe it to you to tell you why. Miss Lanning is a friend of mine of long standing, and I know she is a worthy and dependable woman and absolutely truthful. She isn't interested in this girl, Nance Belden. It happened this way. I regarded that girl as a nut, see—and haven't any confidence in the bone that does our medico-legal work. So I took Nance up to see Dr. Stephen Burt. Miss Lanning is his nurse. She was very kind to the girl—very understanding—and the Belden brat got stuck on her. She has an affection complex, understand."

Flynn and Angellotti nodded languidly. "Apparently," the chief continued, "Nance hasn't any friends. The poor, lonely kid remembered Miss Lanning, so she wrote and asked her to visit her in the pen—and now the warden swears she smuggled out of San Quentin, a letter with Nance's plan of escape. Well, maybe she did, but if she did, Miss Lanning didn't know it. "Now when the Belden girl came to Miss Lanning's home she realized she couldn't harbor her. Within a minute after the girl entered, Miss Lanning had me on the phone.

"I'm inclined to think one of the crew got hit, too." "There's hope for the dogies yet, my boy. You're right, it stands to reason some doctor fixed them up. Now then, what doctor?" "Dr. Stephen Burt," Angellotti decided.

"It stands to reason that if this Doctor Burt dressed their wounds last night he'll call on his patients every day until they're out of danger. If we catch him at his dirty work there ought to be a little something in this on the side, Amadeo." "An hour later they pulled up in front of Stephen's house, and behind a coupe parked at the curb. Flynn, circling around it, noticed a red cross on the radiator. They circled the block and returned, to park at the lower edge of the block. At a quarter past eight they saw Stephen come out, bag in hand, enter his coupe, and drive away. So they followed him and came, in time, to Dan McNamara's house, into which they saw him enter, as they rolled slowly past.

"He had a latch key. He didn't ring the bell. An' no lights in the front of the house," Angellotti cried excitedly. "Drive back, Pat, and I'll get the number." "That house," Flynn informed him dramatically, "is the habitat of His Royal Highness, Daniel McNamara, Chief of Police of San Francisco. I always knew he was a fox, but I never suspected he was fool enough to hide an escaped convict in his own house. That situation is ticklish an' requires calm n' mature deliberation. "Maybe you're right at that, Amadeo. Well, we'll stick round a while."

They struck around half an hour before Doctor Burt came out, and drove away. "Drop off an' watch the house," Flynn suggested to his partner, "an' I'll follow his nibs. I'll be back later."

He trailed Stephen Burt to the latter's home and saw him pull up across the sidewalk, preparatory to opening the door of his garage. So Flynn rolled past, circled, picked up Angellotti at the end of the block.

"After you—an' the doc left, I went up to the corner drug store and phoned the chief's house, but nobody answered," Angellotti confided. "The gang's in there, all right."

"I'm as nervous as an old woman," Flynn confessed. "I wish I had a drink." Angellotti was a resourceful fellow. "Let's call on that Lanning woman, apologize for our rough work last night, an' maybe she'll slip us some of that pre-war Bourbon again."

Flynn nodded, and they drove to Lanny's house. Lanny received them coldly. "Have you come to search my house again?" she demanded irritably. No mule's face could possibly have been longer and sadder than P. Flynn's. "We didn't come to annoy you, Miss Lanning. The chief's give us the inside story. We just called to apologize for even suspectin' you."

"An officer," Angellotti explained, "has got to do a lot of things he don't like to do in the discharge of his duty. The apology goes double, Miss Lanning." "It's accepted," they shook hands. "How about a shot in the arm?" Lanny, the worldling, suggested, much mollified.

Angellotti shrugged expressively. "Well, seein' as how," P. Flynn murmured. So they had three drinks and spent a very pleasant evening with Lanny and she was loath to see them depart. Now, Lanny was aware that Stephen had planned to visit his queer patients after dinner that night. So she telephoned—and Dan McNamara answered. "How's everything, Dan?" "I haven't seen the patients, but my chief of staff was up waiting for me, and reports everything jake." "That's all I wanted to know. Thanks, Dan. Oh, by the way, Flynn and Angellotti called on me again, tonight." (To Be Continued)
