Theodore GATLIN adopts a baby whom he names "Penelope." But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in divorce. At a baseball game a ball strikes Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin splits the child to Europe. Gatlin writes Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when an accident ends his life. Ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt is a young psychiatrist. Dan McNamara, chief of police, brings him Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara sympathizing with Nance, obtains Burt's expert testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is won over to Nance's cause. Nance having a criminal record is sent to the penitentiary. She escapes and goes to Lanny's apartment. Detectives Flynn and Angelotti, seeking the reward for Nance's apprehension, go to Lanny's apartment in search of the girl, but she has gone. From a banker, McNamara learns that Nance Belden is Penelope Gatlin, heiress to $750,000. Mrs. Gatlin, Penelope's foster mother, is now the wife of a man named Merton. Lanny finds Nance in her apartment. Dr. Burt plans an operation to restore the girl's nose to normality. Through McNamara's connivance, Nance escapes the clutches of Flynn and Angelotti. The girl draws a large sum from the bank, and the chief believes she is intended to leave the country. He is satisfied. Later he learns definitely that Nance (or probably Penelope) is in France. He also discovers he is in love with Lanny. Stephen warns Penelope by cable to leave Paris.

"McNamara knows who she is," Flynn decided. "He's getting his chinks for helping her. I'll bet it's the same girl!" He decided not to take Angelotti into his confidence. For two hundred and fifty dollars, Angelotti had agreed to abandon his interest in Nance Belden; whereas P. Flynn had scorned to quit. He would pick up the trail again alone, and when he had Nance Belden or Penelope Gatlin in his hook—well, she had to pay somebody to keep out of San Quentin, and that somebody should be P. Flynn. He went to San Jose that day an interview with the officials of the bank who, when he flashed his card, gave him all the information they possessed. Dan McNamara had artfully destroyed all the girl's police photographs, but if she had secured a passport, Flynn argued to himself, she had left two of her passport photographs with the passport office, and Flynn knew he could throw one of them. Flynn's shield was an open sesame to the man in charge of the passport office. Two minutes after his arrival he knew Nance Belden had secured a passport. Employing identically the same means McNamara had employed, he traced Penelope Gatlin to Paris within three days. But he had now to prove that Penelope Gatlin and Nance Belden were one and the same person, so he interviewed the United States marshal, who secured for him one of the girl's passport photographs. Armed with this, Flynn crossed the bay to San Quentin. "Is that Nance Belden?" he asked the matron. "That is Nance Belden," was the reply. From the ferry he went at once to the home of Mrs. Rudolph Merton. He stuck the photograph under her nose and asked gruffly: "Is that Penelope Gatlin?" A tremor ran over Mrs. Merton's face. It seemed to Flynn that she sec there ain't much use pumpin' you, Doc," Flynn admitted. "Well, a fellow can't be ruled off for trying." "Why, you called on the captain of detectives and asked him to find your daughter. What do you mean by telling me you've never heard of her?" "I can't remember. I don't know. Oh, please, please don't ask me! Something terrible will happen. I—I—" "You refuse to identify this photo as that of Penelope Gatlin?" Flynn was growing irritated. "Finally she had hysterics and a maid came in and asked P. Flynn to leave the house." "When were you to see a doctor last?" "At the age of twenty-two. Why?" "How old are you?" "Forty-two." "Well, just to prove I'm friendly I'll give you a quick physical examination. It may save you a fee later from some other physician. Mind if I give you a quick look-see?" "Go to it," said Flynn. Stephen tested Flynn's heart action and lungs and took his blood pressure. "You're up thirty-six points," he told him. Flynn was distinctly perturbed. "What does that mean?" "It means that you have a fairly well developed case of hardening of the arteries. If you were to be re-examined physically, for promotion, you might be retired on pension." "I couldn't afford that," cried Flynn. "I've got a wife and five children." "Nevertheless, I would suggest you apply for a six months' leave of absence and have me treat you. How's your eyesight?" "Grand," P. Flynn mumbled. "I doubt it, Sergeant. I'll bet you a hundred dollars you cannot look into this little mirror fifteen minutes without averting your gaze. Want to earn the hundred?" "I can't afford that much of a bet, Doc." "Well, then, we'll not bet, but if you can I'll give you a hundred dollars." Stephen produced a hand mirror and held it two feet in front of Flynn and about six inches above the level of his glance. He took out his watch. "Go," he said. "And remember I'm watching you. If you get through this test successfully there's hope for your arteriosclerosis." P. Flynn grinned and gazed. In three minutes the effort oppressed him. Stephen's voice reached him as from a distance. "You are going to sleep, Sergeant." Then, "You can't stand it, Sergeant. You're going to sleep, I tell you to sleep." "I'm not," Flynn protested drowsily, just as his eyes closed and his head fell forward on his breast. Stephen's soft hands stroked the detective's brow. "Why did you call to see me?" "To get you to identify the photograph," Flynn's voice was faint. "Why was that necessary?" Flynn hesitated, struggled a little, but lay back quietly again as Stephen's facile hands resumed their light massaging. "Are you going to oppose me, Sergeant?" "No, doctor." "Will you answer the questions truthfully?" "Yes, doctor." The tones were dead and lifeless, for Flynn slept a hypnotic sleep. "Why was it necessary that I should identify the photograph?" "I've got to know before I act, doctor." The matron at San Quentin says it's Nance Belden, but the photograph is on the passport of Penelope Gatlin. "Why do you want this girl?" "She's made a fool out of me—and she can pay well to be let alone." "You're not interested in seeing her returned to prison?" "Not a d—n, bit, Doctor. Why should I?" "That name, Penelope Gatlin, is bad luck. Stephen nodded. "Never repeat it to a human soul. If you do it may mean your death. And your-oldest child will be kidnaped, tortured and killed." "Oh, God, no!" Flynn cried out in agony. "You must forget Penelope Gatlin and Nance Belden. Will you?" "Make up your mind now that you will never mention those two names again as long as you live. You promise?" "Yes, Doctor." "Now, what is the name of the girl whose photograph you showed me?" A curious slight spasm of distaste flashed across Flynn's face. He shuddered. "I don't know," he replied. "What is the name of the girl who escaped from San Quentin?" "I don't know." Stephen struck Flynn a smart slap on the top of the head. "Wake up!" he commanded. Flynn came awake instantly and looked extremely foolish. "Well, you didn't stand the test," Stephen assured him. "You were falling asleep, so I awakened you." "Am I pretty bad, Doc?" "You're this bad, that if you do not take treatment you will be in a bad way. I'll give you a prescription. Come and see me again." "Thank you, Doc. You're mighty kind. Good Lord, Doc, am I going crazy? I don't remember why I called on you." "You asked me to identify this passport photograph, and Stephen held out the little photo to Flynn, who thrust it away. "That's bad luck, Doc. Never mind. It's a matter of no importance." He picked up his hat and bade Stephen good night and left. Chapter X. When the cablegram sent to Penelope Gatlin had been delivered for at least three days Dan McNamara telephoned Lanny to ask if the girl had answered. Upon being told she had not, he was so cast down that Lanny felt sorry for him. So, like all women who want a man, she decided to feed him, and invited him for dinner that night. She said Stephen would be there. "That's no inducement," McNamara rumbled, "but I'll come anyhow. Thanks." McNamara's thoughts kept shuttling back to Penelope Gatlin all that busy day. Finally he telephoned Flynn to report to him. "How about that Merton case I sent up to the chief of detectives recently?" he asked, when Flynn appeared. (McNamara hadn't sent the case up at all, but he knew Flynn did not know this.) "Oh, yes," said Flynn. "I did some work on that but didn't get anywhere. I called on the Merton woman and tried to get her to identify the girl's photograph, but she wouldn't or couldn't." "Did you get a line on the girl?" "Sure. Traced her to an address in Paris." "Under what name is she registered with the Paris police?" "Chief, I can't just recall it." "It was Penelope Gatlin, wasn't it?" Flynn flinched a little. "I don't know." "You're as bad as Mrs. Merton. What's the matter with you?" "I don't know, Chief. I think we might as well drop the case." "Very well, then, forget it, Pat. I was mildly curious, that's all." He dismissed Flynn. "By Jupiter, that fellow's getting too hot for me!" he soliloquized. And he telephoned the captain of detectives. "What about that case of the lost Merton brass?" he demanded. "We've dropped it on Flynn's advice." McNamara grunted and, hung up. Lanny, wearing a litchen apron, ceased cooking dinner long enough to let him in that night. "Stephen had not yet arrived, so McNamara went out into the kitchen with Lanny, while he related the news regarding the common nuisance. Lanny gazed upon him very benignly. "You're a good man, Dan McNamara. How come you've never married?" "If I had my mother would have lived with us," he declared. "How come you've never been married?" (To Be Continued.)
