

...the greatest tragedy of the depression is not the material loss, it is the increasing surrender of spirit of pride and independence. Waste of a berry crop in Jersey through lack of pickers who preferred to stay on relief is followed generally by reports of scarcity of labor to gather berries for the same reason. In Nebraska and Iowa farm women have been required to go into fields to harvest the harvest. In many instances public relief has been used to force laborable-bodied men to accept proffered jobs. The fact that many persons everywhere have come to consider a hand-to-mouth living without work more desirable than an independent existence supported by useful work is the most discouraging part of the recovery movement.

...The economic revival will come back when the will to incentive to achieve for achievement's sake as well as for a livelihood be brought back. While the depression has stiffened self-reliance and self-expansion in many, it has caused thousands yes, millions - of others to believe the government owes them a living and that they do not have to work to get it.

...Keeping Up the Show. Humming true to the fashion of clever politicians were interviews with Postmaster-General James Farley in Omaha and Assistant Postmaster-General W. W. Howes in St. Louis City last week. Both assumed New Deal's admirers that they were no question about the result of next year's presidential election. It would seem the president is so solidly entrenched in the hearts of the masses that nothing could do in the way of foolish or impractical policies would turn anyone against him. The resonance of his voice and the luster of his smile are just as captivating as ever. If Farley and Howes have been listening for discordant rumblings in the "grass roots" country we suspect they have been listening in the line of serving spots in the long history of the country. It is likely they have been talking to government employees and hopeful commitment and have only received assents to what they want to think it is unobtainable, can pile indebtedness and taxes mountain high with little that is worth while accomplished and still make people like the experience.

...Use for the Five Billions. Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., is leading a movement to stop payment of the soldiers' bonus out of the five-billion-dollar relief fund already appropriated and trusted to the president for the relief fund. Why not? Many wasteful expenditures will be made from the huge sum. Many useless ventures will be undertaken with obligation to the soldiers still pressing. Paying the bonus would meet a legitimate debt better to be paid ahead of time with money that would otherwise be circulated through channels of doubtful worth than to be deferred until another vast appropriation would have to be made for the purpose. And although the debt now would put a considerable part of the relief fund in circulation, it means that could not be employed more beneficially in any other way.

...And why doubt the balance of the five billions be devoted more justly and more helpfully to reimburse depositors in failed national banks covering a reasonable period than in diverting them to a doubtful harbor project in Maine and to other equally wasteful enterprises? Manifestly paying the deferred bonus and reimbursing trusting depositors would seem more reasonable and more efficient than the average than to scatter the same billions in answer to long-forgotten excuses.

...Congress Combed To. To have a normally functioning congress again after two years of servile obedience to the executive's whip, wielded at the suggestion of wild theorists, is really reassuring. Congressmen wanted to be regular wanted to fit into the White House plan, and therefore suspended independent thinking as a certainty against disagreement. Reawakening of members of the law-making body to realize that their duties are clearly separated from those of the president gives one a feeling of confidence that citizens' rights are more securely safeguarded. It would be refreshing to have congress succeed the bureaucrats in running the country during the balance of the present term.

...Just Around the Corner. The time which television will be turned to practical use in this country is not far off, according to the reports of science. It has already great headway in England. Germany has introduced into practical service, radio performers of the future may be seen as well as heard, and then they will have to cultivate looks as well as voice.

SOFT CORN FEAR IS KNOCKED OUT BY JULY RECORD

The fear that a cold spring would be followed by a cool summer and soft corn has been effectively set aside by experience in July. The heat has been equal to the hottest on record, and corn growth is little if any behind the usual stand at this season. Soaked by rains of earlier months, the ground has enabled the corn to resist the torrid waves, though more moisture is needed at this critical tasseling period. The inch of rain that fell here and generally over this county early last week missed some localities in north Nebraska, and these are reported suffering somewhat from the blistering heat. It is said the Wisner area which usually has more than its proportion of moisture, and not share in the rainfall mentioned. A Wisner reporter says thirty-three horses have succumbed to heat in that vicinity.

Actual expenses for operating the city last year totaled $81,526, this being 20.4 mill levy as compared with 26.9 mill for the past three years, no levy was needed for general purposes as light fund took care of those; purchase of a new engine decreases this fund. Missing Co-Ed Is Object Of Search

Relatives Worried Over Disappearance Of Miss Lorena Lee.

Since Miss Lorena Lee packed her suitcase and took silent leave of her father at college hill Friday morning, no trace has been found of the slender, attractive co-ed. Police officials have been enlisted in the search, and description of Miss Lee has been broadcast over Norfolk radio station. Miss Lee's aunt, Mrs. J. H. Montgomery of near Wakefield, and one from Sioux City and an uncle from there, came to Wayne Monday to investigate the disappearance of their niece, having received letters from her mailed from Laurel.

Miss Lee's mother disappeared similarly when her children were small, and her whereabouts are unknown. The father is living. Miss Lee has made her home with her aunt, comprising Sioux City high school this spring and coming to Wayne college for summer term. She took the Iowa state examinations this spring but failed in music, not having had training in it. It is thought, this may be cause of her leaving, as her letters to the aunts stated that she felt they had helped her enough and that she wanted to take care of herself. However, she had opportunity to take the music examinations over again, and had been elected to teach a rural school near Ponca in Dixon, Mo.

College authorities state that Miss Lee was of happy-go-lucky disposition, that nothing seemed to have been worrying her, and that she was a good student.

IMPROVED ROADS SOUGHT BY MEN

Delegation Of Thirty Visits Officials Tuesday In Lincoln.

Grading and graveling for highways in this vicinity were sought by a delegation of about 30 men from Wayne, Wakefield, Pender, Carroll, Winside and Belden, who visited Governor R. L. Cochran and Engineer A. C. Tilley at Lincoln Tuesday. Grading can be accomplished under the federal program, it was explained, but it is doubtful if graveling can be done as this calls for large expense for material unless local gravel pits can be developed to cut transportation costs. The road improvements asked for include work from Wakefield to Pender, north and south through Wakefield, Carroll and Belden and west of Wayne.

Road work will be slow, it was explained by the officials, as government rules must be followed in use of federal funds. The delegation was assured that grading of Wakefield-Pender road can go forward at once. Grading of No. 113 west of Wayne to Pierce will also be pushed to completion. Grading north of Carroll on state highway to Belden is promised for this season. Gravel for all of these projects will be delayed. The delegation asked for gravel at east end of No. 113 and spurs to Carroll and Winside to provide Carroll with gravel outlet, but officials stated that this would require longer time. Wayne delegation was assured building of a hard-surfaced highway through Wayne, joining No. 8 east of Piger and No. 20 east of Laurel but this also will come at later date.

Rep. Aug. Biermann of Wayne county, Rep. L. C. Nurnberger of Dixon county, were in the delegation. Carl Wright and Frank Erleben went from Wayne, Gus Paulson, H. L. Bredemeyer and H. C. Bartels from Carroll, Walter Gaebler, G. A. Mittelstaedt and Fred Wittler from Winside, and C. A. Sax, Wm. Kay, Henry Tarnow and Rev. W. A. Gerdes from Wakefield.

OATS AND BARLEY YIELD TOP OF 70 BUSHELS TO ACRE

THRUSHING small grain is in progress, and yields in some places have fallen rather short and in others exceeded expectations. The highest yield of oats so far reported, to us is that on the farm of Albin Carlson, east of town, where seventy bushels per acre, were threshed. Amos Claycomb, northeast of here, was rewarded with fifty-nine bushels of oats to the acre. Harvey Haas, northwest of town, had a twenty-three-acre oats field that yielded fiftythree bushels to the acre. His barley turned out fifty bushels per acre. Carl Jensen, eight miles west, threshed sixty bushels of oats per acre. Eric Thompson, southeast, realized fifty bushels of barley per acre. John Sievers had a mixed crop of oats and barley that threshed thirtyfive bushels per acre. We have heard of one field of barley that was badly blown down and still going eighteen bushels to the acre. The rye yield will run around twentyfive to thirty bushels to the acre. The small grain harvest is lighter in some spots than in others, but generally it is proving very satisfactory. Now for a big corn crop and we will be safely on the way to better times.

Describes Early Banking Method Helping Pioneer

"How Steve Got Started" is title of an article written by C. D. O'Kieffe and appearing in July 16 issue of the "American Banker." This deals with experiences of the late S. E. Auker of Wayne, and is as follows:

"Back some 45 years ago, a little country bank, way out west, owned by Joe Thomas and Johnnie Jones, did things that probably would not get by in 1935, but they were safe then and very helpful.

"For example, my brother-in-law, Steve Auker, was not doing so well. Everything he laid his hands to seemed to flop. This is not said to belittle Steve, but to set up the fact that he had not as yet made any reputation on which a stern banker could possibly build a credit file.

"At that time Steve had neither health, personality, property nor experience, surely four items that must enter into a banker's consideration of credit extension. But here is what Joe and Johnnie did for Steve.

"Right at his lowest depths of morale they called him in one day when he expected to be in town. They gave him a check book, explained the simple words therein for his start in business and showed him how to sign his first business signature.

"Then they slipped him on the back and started him out across the Sand Hills, buying cattle in his own name for shipment to South Omaha. His total equipment consisted of a two-wheeled cart drawn by a questionable hickskin pony, and his precious check book and a knowledge of cattle and cattle men. Steve's health was such that he could not ride a horse, which slowed up his movements from ranch to ranch very materially.

"The only understanding Steve had with his bank was that he would buy what cattle his judgment dictated, write a check for the amount involved, and drive the cattle away for concentration and shipment to market.

"Then, and then only, when each check was returned to the bank for payment, interest would start off the amount of that check. Old-timers will at once see that in many cases these farmers and ranchmen would not come to town for weeks and even months, after Steve had given any one of them his check for cattle purchased.

"In general this would mean that the stock had been shipped and sold and Steve would be back in the bank to pay up and pocket his profits before any appreciable number of these checks had been turned in for payment. This meant no cost to the bank, hence no interest charge to Steve.

"But here is the big point—these two old-fashioned bankers started Steve on a career by this method when no other way was available. A career that, in a very few years, made him one of the biggest general buyers of live stock in that entire section. A career that brought credit to himself as well as to his sponsors and developed a banking business that ran into many thousands of dollars every year for nearly a third of a century. Money making activity for that bank and many others as well as for Steve.

"This tale out of the past may bring a twinge to the heart of Joe Thomas' splendid son, Fred, efficient and popular vice president of the First National bank in Omaha; but no matter how viewed in the light of present-day methods and policies, there can be no reflection on the character or ability of Joe Thomas and Johnnie Jones who ran their bank along these lines way back in the late eighties. The good accomplished greatly outweighed any harm or loss in opinion of these early bankers."

President Analyzed
WRITING for the current issue of the magazine, Nation's Business, W. M. Kiplinger analyzes President Roosevelt's state of mind and public policies, touching enlighteningly present conditions and prospects. According to Kiplinger, the president keeps himself surrounded by radical advisers, and gives little heed to conservatives of any party or type. "He doesn't like business men because he thinks they are 'shortsighted' and 'selfish,' and he believes business should have less power and government more power.

"He has no deep inherent set of principles," say Kiplinger. "His principles are synthetic, and it is usually easy to detect which set of advisers is responsible for whatever his principles are at the moment." He is said to "feel" things through, not "think" them through.

He believes his reelection would serve the best interests of the masses, and he thinks moving to the "left" is more popular than moving to the "right." While he changes his mind often, he is characterized as stubborn by his critics and courageous by his friends.

Writer Kiplinger looks for moderate recovery during the next year regardless of what the government may or may not do. He believes recovery is due and must come entirely apart from Washington influences. Touching next year's presidential election, campaign for which he says has already started, he makes these closing observations:

"Of course there will be some sort of share-the-wealth third party, frankly socialistic. It will not be very effective, but it can sap votes which Roosevelt needs, and it might even carry a few minor states. It will make political hay out of the 'inadequacy' of Roosevelt reforms. It will pick flaws in the social security program, which by then will be in the early stages of organization. It will scare some wobbling democrats back to Roosevelt.

"Many conservative democrats will desert Roosevelt. There's possibility but not probability of a new 'Constitutional Democrat' party. Republicans aren't likely to nominate an anti-Roosevelt democrat for president, although they might well nominate someone like Lew Douglas for vice president, thereby making sales talk for fusion."

No Reason For Envy
WE do not envy the rich head of a great industry. We could not if we would and would not if we could take his place. Nature fashioned him to handle big plans successfully. He figures out a way to employ a lot of men to make and market a needed commodity. He assumes all risks, and by his capacity to carry a big load—by his ingeniousness in directing details—he enables an army of workers to live without responsibility other than to perform the tasks set apart for them. The employee does not have to bother about costs of operation or struggle to maintain or enlarge markets for products. The directing head takes all chances, shouldering the burden to pay overhead and create dividends for investors. The task is one which few would wish to undertake if they could. And without industrial leadership—without persons willing and able to assume big responsibilities—where would persons needing jobs find them? If we could envy anything in connection with the rich industrial leader, we would envy his ability and willingness.

Citizens of this country where religious freedom is fundamental in our form of government, are profoundly incensed by the religious intolerance shown under European dictatorships, now especially evident in Germany. To persons accustomed to regard thinking and worshipping as one desires an unquestioned privilege, the attempt to force acceptance of one belief and to exterminate rival beliefs seems inconceivable in the light of modern civilization. To try to root out one religion shows lack of any religion and foreshadows ill for future spiritual development.

Persuading congress to pass laws known to be unconstitutional and then blame failure of the New Deal on an out-grown constitution or on a too exacting supreme court, asking the country to change its fundamental document to conform to New Deal vagaries, would seem to be about the only basis left to revive hope and regain support. "New excuses and new pledges will be offered to obscure shortcomings and to recapture popular favor, and the uncertainty and fear will not help if they do not postpone recovery.

Henry Ford has reached another birthday—72 years old—and reports state that he is still busy directing the work of his laboratories and that he is looking ahead to new and greater achievements. He has his mind focused on future possibilities, and he is keenly interested in things yet to be done in the world. His attention to immediate affairs and to contemplation of future plans works powerfully in preserving youth.

We have long felt and at this time feel sure that the poorest literary work is done during hot mid-summer when inertia takes strongest hold and when spirits descend as the mercury goes up. It is in the autumn when a rich harvest brings reward, that one does his best.

We hope symptoms of an unhealthy monetary inflation will disappear, and that the ills of such an extremely may not be added to the burdens of recovery.

Denmark to Iowa.
Christian Science Monitor: In stating the case of Consumer's Co-operation here the Wellesley Institute for Social Progress, Eugene R. Bowen, executive secretary of the Co-operative League, drew a striking parallel between the case of the Iowa farmer of today and the Danish farmer of fifty years ago.

Pointing out that farm tenancy has been increasing at an alarming rate in the American West, Mr. Bowen said that in Iowa more than 50 per cent of the farms are now being worked by tenants. These figures are almost exactly the same as those presented by Denmark fifty years ago.

At that time Denmark imported co-operation from Great Britain. Through co-operative economic action the Danes gradually won back ownership of their farms until today but 2 per cent of the farms are worked by tenants, and the Danish farmer is the most prosperous in the world.

It is interesting to note that as Iowa has reached that same level of farm tenancy consumer's co-operation is beginning to sweep the agrarian West, farmers in most of the western states have begun to organize co-operatively to cut purchasing costs and wipe out the spread between their products and the consumer. At the same time these groups are definitely attacking the evil of farm tenancy.

Because of Denmark's experience with the co-operative method the experiment of the farmers in the American West is well worth watching. For these groups are outspoken in their belief that they can duplicate the Danish achievement. In the midst of economic turmoil, especially among the agrarian population, the note that is being struck is hopeful in its constructive and democratic message.

MEDIOCRITY.
The fact that there is plenty of room at the top suggests that the way to reach there is not easy. We have known the community's best inventor who toiled for hours over labor-saving devices that wouldn't perform well enough to meet any demand. He was also an exceptional artist—in his community. He could make pen drawings that excited the admiration of near neighbors, and if he could have improved his work and developed the habit of generating new ideas, he might have taken a place among top cartoonists. As he turned out, he put in a lot of time that did not count and he remained too commonplace to find a profitable outlet for his product. The best singer in school or in town will not scale the roomy top without almost incessant training and practice. She or he is likely to be content in mediocrity—a superior in a small circle, but a long way from the top. An actor may show off well in amateur performances, but he invites a terribly hard experience if he tries to break into the professional field where critics are biting and merciless. One may use exceptional talent for self-education or for community benefits, but if he expects to build his talent to reach the top, he must pay bitterly in hard and patient toil.

Winside Town Board Sets Tax on Liquor
At special meeting of Winside town board Monday evening, ordinance regulating the sale of liquor was passed, and August 6 was set as date for receiving any protests against granting applications to sell liquor. Applications to sell beer were on file from Alfred Kurrelmeier and W. P. Gabler. Jack Reinbrecht's license does not expire until October.

The ordinance passed provided for $10 annual occupation tax which allows both for on sale and off sale, and $50 occupation tax for sale of hard liquor. Closing hour was set at 11 p. m., which is an hour earlier than the state law requires. Hard liquors must be sold in separate building from that in which beer is sold, or in room with only outside entrances.

Regular meeting of town board comes next Monday evening.

In Justice Court.

TEACHERS.
Writing anonymously, a small-town school teacher of the middle west explains the circumstances and experience required to hold her job. Before she became a teacher she says her life seemed perfectly normal. Then she became subject to the dwarfing whims of the community in which she was elected to teach and especially of members of the school board who, influenced more by prejudice than reason, held her position in their grip. She points out that to maintain her place as teacher she must forfeit the freedom enjoyed in other walks of life. If she expresses an honest opinion, she is going to church, she wears a well-cut dress of town falls impartially to patronize businesses of school board members, or neglects to bestow special favor on children of school board members, she is likely to be forced to look for another job. Associations and amusements are critically supervised, and luck is unusually favorable if objections do not issue from one source or another. The author of this kick-back story would doubtless find some other complaints in lines of which she complains. The town with little or nothing to do but watch for flaws finds the school teacher a handy object for critical analysis. The otherwise idle mind is flattered by winning listeners on account of the importance of the victim. Reform in senseless demands on small-town teachers might well start with a broader attitude on the part of school boards and school superintendents.

Forsee No Change In Local Relief Set-Up
Tentative plans of State FERA Administrator Ernest Witte for eliminating Wayne and 25 other Nebraska counties from the direct relief rolls by August 9, do not greatly affect the local relief set-up, as the county has not had federal aid in its direct relief work for the past 10 months, except in payment of officers' salaries.

All counties are now required to care for their own "unemployables" and employable persons will be put to work on the new works program which will be perfected soon. A local FERA set-up will be necessary to handle this new program.

Wayne Pastor Makes Interesting Contacts With The Indian Folks

When Rev. L. W. Gramley went to a farm home near Verdel last Sunday to hold Indian services in the out-of-doors, this was at the very same place in which he was formally adopted into the Ponca tribe a few years ago. They called him Ma-za-tan, meaning "evergreen tree." The old man who chose it for the missionary-pastor said it meant the red cedar in particular.

Rev. Gramley maintains he can tell whether a white man or an Indian lives in a house he is passing, because an Indian's home always has one or more widow panes broken out. Just why an Indian and a window can't live in harmony, he has never been able to discover.

Give an Indian a bedstead and he'll no doubt park it outside the house and continue to sleep on the floor on a pile of bedding. In the summer he sleeps out-of-doors on blankets. Naturally, pneumonia and tuberculosis increase first among those in the draft. The Poncas are especially inclined to develop tuberculosis, many if they die before they reach 30.

WHITHER Away This Vacation? Take Note of These Recreation Spots, Favorites of Your Townsmen . . .

Have you ever thought of our prairie-land Nebraska as a summer resort? Probably not. Search as you will, 't would be hard to find among the glamorously-colored literature at the depots and hotels which describes the charms of California and of the Canadian woods country, the carefully-preserved historical spots of New England and the crisp, invigorating air of Seattle vicinity, any booklets, however modest, which urges vacationists to spend their two-weeks-to-all-summer holidays in this mid-continent Nebraska or in the territory just over its north-eastern border lines. And yet many Waynettes have discovered favorite picnic and week-end spots in this vicinity which they visit regularly and which they believe have great natural beauty and rest possibilities.

The L. W. Ellises, for instance, have frequently visited northeast Nebraska's well-known Devil's Nest which lies about 12 miles north of Bloomfield, a good 72-mile drive from Wayne. A nice road through Fordyce and Crofton, Approaching the nest from the north, the motorist finds himself upon a high place from which he can see a series of rounded knolls stretching out around him—for all the world like irregular green eggs and in a giant nest. It's rough, hilly country bordering the Missouri river—there are cooling little water-falls and the hills are covered with a slick prairie grass which Mr. Ellis says is so very slick that after walking about on it a while, one can take hold of his heels and slide down hill in fashion resembling a ski-runner. It's a cattle-grazing section and one sees the animals through the hills . . . an occasional farm too. One family there has to ford a creek to get off the place, and when the creek is high, stays home.

J. J. Ahern also appreciates the uniqueness of the nest formation which he knows a road from the west, which leads right down into the tree-thick hollows between the hills, and which is quite passable although by no means a highway. Like the Jackson Hole country in western Wyoming! This used to be a great hide-out for bandits. When they had a regular horse thieving organization in earlier days, the rustlers would run the animals down in here and they were safe from any interference.

Notes for Picnickers.

The Ellises, being great picnickers, are familiar with Niobrara state park where the Niobrara river joins the Missouri . . . it's low ground and likely to be mosquito-ridden. There's fishing in the old Missouri at Homewood park, just north of Wynot, and good camping here. In bitter-sweet time, the Ellis family likes to visit the Elkhorn river anywhere between Wisniewski and Stanton . . . the water is quiet, warm and the wading is good along sandy banks. Furthermore, it's just an easy ride of 22 to 25 miles. At Stanton the Ellises like the picnic ground at the fair grounds . . . it provides well-kept grass, picnic tables and a just-new outdoor swimming pool.

Here's a Grotto.

For a full day of motoring, Mr. Ellis suggests following the Creighton - to - Niobrara road through Bazile Mills and Center . . . a lovely, winding road. You'll register about 85 miles when you reach Niobrara. This Bazile Mills is interesting if used to have a big mill; also a fine estate belonging to a Mr. Brooks, with stocked trout stream and elaborate big home with mahogany wood-work in which he entertained parties of Chicago and eastern friends. The mill burned down, and the house was razed.

J. J. Ahern recalls Bazile Mills as home of a lovely natural grotto some 50 or 60 feet deep from which emerge springs. There's a beaver dam there, and a recreation park.

Lake Is Popular.

A favorite outing spot with the A. T. Cavanaugh William Melhors, the E. F. Straughans and others is Likuwanta beach at Crystal park—just an easy 40-mile drive along No. 20, the Sioux City highway. Long, tree-lined Crystal lake offers swimming, boating, canoeing and fishing . . . there are picnic grounds with tables and benches, and on shore opposite the beach are cottages which may be rented for over-night or longer.

Mrs. A. C. Thompson and her daughters often visit at Homer and enjoy the beauty spots in that vicinity. From a high hill three miles east can be seen Jefferson City, S. D., Sioux City and Salix, Iowa . . . It's a beautiful country of hills and ravines, dotted with scrub oaks and carpeted with thick patches of blue grass. About 40 miles to Homer.

Many Visit Ponca.

Of a Sunday, many local families head for the new state park at Ponca to joll about, picnic and fish in its Colorado-like depths. C. C. boys have cut down the banks to make cool, winding road . . . foot paths invite one to explore . . . natural stone is used to construct rustic little shelters . . . wild flowers are plentiful and the grass is well-kept without sacrificing its rugged beauty. Down on the river bank you'll find a ferry which chug-chugs its way across the muddy Missouri, transporting autos to the South Dakota shore. Your speedometer will register about 45 miles to the park.

Give A. T. Cavanaugh his choice for a few days' holiday and he'll probably head for the Rainey lake country in northern Minnesota. A series of lakes through the Arrowhead section well supplied with northern pike and bass. Only drawback is that it takes two days to go, and two to return. Or he might leave forwarding address of Big Stone lake which is up on the South-Dakota-Minnesota border here. He calls it 258 miles. There are hotels, cabins and plenty of fishing, boating and swimming . . . the lake is about 30 miles long and connects with Traverse lake. This is a good place to rest and "rough it"—none of the "society" atmosphere of Lake Okoboji.

Four or five hours will take you to Lake Okoboji or Spirit lake over in Iowa, and you'll find just about whatever you're looking for—comfortable hotels, furnished cottages or camping grounds . . . boating, swimming, fishing, tennis, horseback riding, golf, dancing, carnival. The John T. Bresslers have an attractive summer home at Okoboji with rustic stone fireplace and Indian rug. Here the Bressler family spends most of the warm season, the related families joining them for brief outings. A short-cut through LeMars and At-gun everywhere he went. History fails to relate actual results, but there was a place in his back yard where he cut occasional notches, one for each victim, and one man told of seeing the vindictive settler shoot two Indians out of a canoe.

The river took much of the river bottoms so the cabin was moved to higher ground. If you take the road north from Dixon to the river, and then inquire for the Wiseman cabin, you'll find it easily. A group of women interested in preserving historical places have formed a memorial association, and erected a protecting fence around the cabin, planted shrubbery and opened it to visitors.

Both John Ahern and J. J. Ahern can tell you about Royal and its fish hatchery two miles to the north. Here you'll find a large gully which is surprising in this flat spot . . . a branch of the Verdigris river is here, fed by springs. A farmer has trout ponds and also does some government hatching. In the clear, sandy-bottomed stream you can catch trout, and there are a few cabins to rent. Follow No. 20 to Plainview and Brunswick, then on to Royal—it's a nice all-day outing.

Mecca of Ancestors.

Mecca of many Wayne folks with historical curiosity is the reconstructed Indian village at St. Helena. Best road is through Hartington, then turn off to right when the road goes on to Fordyce. A big Indian head on Main street of St. Helena directs you to the village. The Schulz family are nice folks. Mrs. Schulz once attended the Nebraska Normal college here. Mr. Schulz or his wife or son will tell you about the village. It was started by a University of Nebraska expedition which did the actual digging, and told the Schulzes how the houses must have looked and how to put them together. Dr. Bell who was in charge, believed this dated back to pre-historic dwellers. The large, round, half-underground houses have sod roofs supported by heavy logs . . . there's a hole in center of roof through which the smoke poured out. Under the floor of these houses were found caches containing corn . . . the soil was thick with bits of pottery, animal bones, etc., which are on exhibition in the largest dwelling. The hill breaks off abruptly and below flows the tricky Missouri . . . authorities believe that at some time this changeable old fellow shifted his course and cut away the Indian's burying ground for this has never been located. To the student of history, this is a treasury of information, and there is so much work yet to be done, so much yet to discover!

In immediate vicinity of Wayne, there is little historical interest. Out at old LaPorte, predecessor of Wayne city, you'll find a weed-grown cemetery which contains mortal remains of Wayne county's trail-blazers . . . nearby you'll see a relic, result of decapitation of the old court house. It is the initial-scarred belfry from the once-imposing little building which represented law and order and civic progress to the little band of hardy prairie-pioneers.

If you want to see the American Indian as he is today, living under white man's civilization, just get out the family model and push eastward to Walthill and Macy, going via Perder. Up at Macy, in rolling country, none too productive you'll find the Indian entrenched. Of a Sunday with a ballgame in progress, the braves and their squaws will be gathered around the central ball diamond. Hot though it may be, the squaws will be wrapped in heavy blankets . . . their hair will be straight and shiny, probably in the usual braids . . . and likely as not you'll spot a papoose strapped on a board. On the highways you'll no doubt see the Indian folks joggling along in wagons, the parents on the seat, and the back box overflowing with bronze-skinned youngsters.

There's a lovely drive between Macy and Decatur, following the ridge above the flat Missouri, according to Rev. Gramly.

If you're in Decatur vicinity, don't miss the proposed Lewis & Clark National park which will include Black Bird hill. If the park project succeeds, it will extend from Decatur to Homer on both Nebraska and Iowa sides of the river. A high, hilly country in natural state, there's a fair road leads from the gravel four miles distant to the hill where old Chief Black Bird is buried. You can reach it through Winnebago, or else go through Bancroft, Lyons and Decatur.

If you can arrange guest privileges, Plainview country club is a pleasant place for picnicking, and there's an artificial lake for swimming and boating. Pretty place, too, says Rev. L. W. Gramly. It's about 55 miles from Wayne.

Lyons has a nice park with swimming pool that'll register about 50 on your speedometer. Or drive 40 miles to Bancroft for picnic in the town park, or nearer still, at Emerson's pretty little park or Wakefield or Winslow shady parks. You'll find play equipment for the kiddies, and good picnicking facilities.

If you head in the opposite direction, stop at Norfolk for a rest in the city park, or go to King's park and swim—picnic—dance—or what you will.

Nor do we want to overlook park advantages in Wayne. Bressler park and East Bressler park provide plenty of shade and playground equipment. Large gatherings each week through the summer testify to popularity of these recreation grounds. Wayne country club also offers cool, shade and entertainment for many.

miles to north of Royal. A comfortable camping spot and picnic grounds with a small swimming pool.

Sportsmen often head for the Sand Hill lakes to south of No. 20, ranging from Atkinson to Valentine. This may vary from 150 to 250 miles from Wayne. Largest of the series is Marsh lake. Bass, croppies, bluegills, bullheads and a few pike are available, says Mr. Hickman.

In Valentine vicinity is a large lake formed by damming up Minnehadusa creek . . . cabins here, nice swimming and some good fishing.

Traveling 15 miles to the south, you hit Snake river which winds through a desolate, treeless sandy waste. It's a homely stream, to be sure, but one of the best trout stocks in Nebraska. Mr. Hickman and other Wayne fishermen go here for brief outings, camping in abandoned shacks or making their own camps along the banks. Trout as large as five pounds will reward the visitor. This means a drive of from 275 to 300 miles from Wayne.

Or The Black Hills.

Many Wayne folks, including the R. W. Leys, the Paul Mines, the Dr. S. A. Lutgens, Mrs. Alina Pollard and the Hickmans have found recreation and change in the Black Hills country. It seems quite a distance to look at the map, but one can easily make the 475 miles to Rapid City or Hot Springs, S. D. in one day, or in a night's drive. Deadwood, Lead, Custer, Sylvan and other lovely man-made lakes, the Iron Mountain trail leading up to Mount Rushmore, and new Roosevelt lake where the old American Legion camp was located are well worth seeing. There's lots of historical interest in this country. Centuries about the Wild Bill Hickok, Calamity Jane and Deadwood Dick and the early mining days. Cool, almost cold nights, pretty warm during the daytime. You'll find the trout in the streams . . . good roads everywhere . . . good mountain water.

If you're after catfish, drive just 65 miles north of O'Neill to Spencer dam it's 165 miles from Wayne.
