

As a Life Work—To Be Good Losers—Letting I Neb St. Hist. Society Oct 1931 nes Rule—Broadcasting...

A recent magazine article explaining the frequent disappointments involved in going into politics to make a living reminds us of a fellow who devoted all his early and middle years to trying to fix political wires in a way that would be favorable to landing him in a political job. He was careful to curry friendship with party leaders, and he was ever on the alert to express no opinion in conflict with popular sentiment.

The magazine article which we made introductory reference, thinks the uncertainty of public office and the so called "pull" required to get and hold one prove serious objections, but still the author would not advise against holding public jobs. For the good of the country everybody should take an interest in politics, and capable persons who are needed in public offices—appointive and elective—should consider acceptance as a duty as well as a privilege.

Real Sportsmanship. Perhaps the biggest value of basketball and other athletic sports is the development of courage on the part of participants and spectators to be good losers. Rival teams are not enemies, and while they are expected to do their best within the rules, they serve high-est purposes of the game by maintaining a friendly atmosphere and by exchanging courtesies due to and from friends.

When Reason Yields. People are often led by their emotions more than by power of reasoning. It is easier to let surface feelings rule than to think a question to the bottom and be governed by facts and sense. To disguise an excess of shortcomings, a fellow is tempted to misrepresent his neighbor. Taking a superficial measurement, he decides his neighbor is a selfish, grasping tightwad, and he is too well satisfied with his conclusions to bother if the facts or consult those who would know. His emotions sidetrack his faculty to find the truth or employ reason, and thus he is swept into a fever of conjecture that must be kept aloof from investigation in order to survive.

Air Restrictions Charged. Chairman Henry P. Fletcher of the republican national committee charges two national broadcasting systems with favoritism for the administration which is in power and which is authorized to issue licenses for use of the air. To what extent, if any, the administration exercises influence over the broadcasting system we do not know. We do know, however, that if that discrimination becomes very evident, a big rumpus will and should ensue.

FEBRUARY SECOND IMPORTANT THOUGH IT IS NO HOLIDAY

GROUND-HOG day which comes on February 2, has not been made a holiday as yet despite growing excuses to take days off and let regular business slide along unattended. According to tradition, the ground-hog comes out of its subterranean abode, and if it doesn't see its shadow, it stays out and mild springtime is assured; if it does see its shadow, it goes back for a six weeks' sojourn in expectation of more and sharper winter weather. February 2 is also Candlemas day which used to be observed with a feast to celebrate the presentation of Christ in the temple. Blessing candles on that day for sacred uses suggested the name. As to whether the ground-hog stays out or goes back, people are not greatly interested because they know they will be lucky if winter lets up and quits by the middle of March.

Prominent Educator Had Been Head Of College Quarter Century.

Dr. U. S. Conn, 70, president of Wayne State Teachers College for 25 years and president emeritus since last September, passed away Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock at Seaside hospital in Long Beach, Calif., where he had been in critical condition since December 5 when he suffered a cerebral hemorrhage. Plans now are to hold the funeral at Long Beach.

Dr. Conn's career was closely linked with development of education. Such work as his, etched deeply in character, lives on and continues to inspire new generations for many years to come.

At conclusion of a quarter century as head of Wayne Teachers College, the school and city honored Dr. Conn last June. He was often characterized as "the builder." Dr. Conn was chosen head of the Wayne college in 1910 when the state bought the private normal school. He visioned the possibilities for the Wayne teacher training college and set about a program of building the training departments and physical plant of the school to be among the best in the middle west. From a school graduating a class of three in 1911 to an institution turning out more than 200 graduates annually, the school realized steady growth. The physical plant has increased apace. Dr. Conn's highest hopes were realized when he retired last September he was chosen by the state normal board as president emeritus of the Wayne school.

Dr. Conn was active in educational organizations, the National Educational association, the Nebraska State Teachers association which he served as president in 1900, the Nebraska School Masters' club and other groups. He was an active worker in teachers' institutes for many years and was recognized as a most able speaker on educational topics.

Dr. Conn was president of Wayne Kiwanis club last year. He was active in Presbyterian church here, was a Master Mason and influential in republican politics of the state.

LOW TEMPERATURE NEEDS ATTENTION TO WARM CLOTHES

WHEN the mercury hovers below zero, it is time for boys and girls to shift consideration of looks to comfort and safety. We recall a boy who was so particular about having his nicely combed hair undisturbed by extra winter wraps that he had the ear with a north exposure frozen as hard as a piece of concrete when he reached school. Before starting off every morning for educational headquarters in which he was wont to minor, he carefully parted and smoothed down his cranial locks and topped off his dome with a little hat suited to the tropics. Ordinarily in cold weather he could get by with-out looking worse than a brief spell in an ice box would suggest, though on the morning in question he seriously underrated the power of the invigorated elements, and it was not until after he had thawed out his ear and made it look and act like it belonged to an African elephant that he resolved to pay more attention to comfort and less to his childish idea of style. Colds and other forms of sickness appropriate to the season are often traceable to failure to take into account one's comfort rather than one's looks, all of which a sensible public caring less for bare looks than suspected, is sickened into thoughts of disgust.

SOIL FERTILITY OBJECT SOUGHT

Committee At Meeting Recommends Ways To Preserve Soil.

An increase of alfalfa acreage, shifting part of the oats-acreage to barley and slight decrease in corn acreage were recommended Monday afternoon when the Wayne County Land Users' committee met at the court house to organize and discuss ways of maintaining and restoring soil fertility. R. A. Spence of Lincoln, was present and led the discussion.

On the Wayne county committee are the following: F. Irving Moses, Brenna; Herman J. Podoll, Hancock; Frank Hanson, Logan; Walter L. Moller, Wayne city; Fred Jensen, Chapin; Lyle Marolt, Hoskins; Lawrence Jenkins, Sherman; A. G. Sydow, Plum Creek; Henry Lage, Deer Creek; Mark I. Swihart, Garfield; Otto Lutt, Hunter; and Charles Jeffrey, Strahan. The group named Mr. Moses temporary chairman and Mr. Moller, secretary.

About a year and a half ago a land use program was started in Wayne county but has been inactive. The object is to learn through research and long time land use policy how to restore and maintain land fertility. The committee also aims to make recommendations as to what crops might be shifted, decreased or increased to realize this object.

At Monday's meeting the committee discussed 1929 farm conditions and then made the recommendations as stated above. The recommendations are in interest of soil preservation only.

The soil preservation program has no connection with the AAA or with any new farm program which may be started. Community meetings may be held later, also gatherings to discuss livestock business.

Problems Taken Up By Committee

Friendly Relation Between Debtors And Creditors Is The Object.

Bringing debtor and creditor together in a friendly atmosphere where they can see each other's problems is the job ahead of Wayne county's debt conciliation committee, which met Tuesday, January 21, Rollie W. Ley presided.

"Through better understandings between debtor and creditor interests," the chairman explained, "similar committees in other counties have often avoided the hardship of foreclosures, saved expensive suits, prevented abandonment of farms, and retained valuable citizens in their communities. We hope to do the same thing here."

Other members of the committee are W. E. Roggenbach, Chester Hansen, Geo. Berres and Martin L. Ringer.

"We invite any depressed farm debtor, or any creditor who wants help in reaching a satisfactory adjustment of mortgages or other debts to call on a member of this committee," Mr. Ley said.

Debt conciliation in Nebraska was begun in 1933 when the governor appointed the first county groups, the chairman explained. Local and district rehabilitation employees will aid the county committees in working out adjustments, and fieldmen from the regional debt conciliation office at Lincoln will, in turn, assist the committees and the rehabilitation staff.

R. R. Leonard, fieldman from the regional office attending the meeting, said, "This committee, like others over the nation, is made up of unselfish and public spirited citizens, working without pay to improve their communities." Federal responsibility for farm debt conciliation aid has been transferred from the Farm Credit Administration to a unit operating under the rural resettlement division of the Resettlement Administration.

Taking Census In Wayne County

M. Weible and F. A. Sturma Named Enumerators For District.

Taking of the 1936 business and industrial census in Wayne county, as part of the nationwide census being made by the federal government, has started in Wayne county, according to Mrs. S. Elizabeth Jenkinson, district supervisor for the Third district of Nebraska.

Wayne is the third county in the district to be organized, enumerators having previously been appointed in Madison and Pierce counties. Mrs. Jenkinson, whose headquarters are in Norfolk, appointed Lloyd M. Weible and Francis A. Sturma, both of Wayne, as enumerators to take the census in this county.

Mr. Weible was given county district No. 90-1, comprising Deer creek election precinct, including Agroll village; Hunter election precinct; Leslie election precinct; Logan election precinct, outside Wakefield city; Plum Creek election precinct; Sherman election precinct, including Sholes village; Mahan election precinct; and Huron election precinct.

Mr. Sturma was assigned county district No. 90-2, comprising Brenson election precinct; Chapin election precinct; Garfield election precinct; Hancock election precinct; Hosking election precinct, including Hosking village; Winside election precinct, co-extensive with Winside village.

After the work in the preceding two districts, District 90-3, which includes Wakefield city, part, and district 90-4, which includes Wayne election precinct, co-extensive with Wayne city, will be assigned in order to complete the canvass of all business establishments in Wayne county.

The scope of the census has been extended considerably beyond the limitations of those taken in 1929 and 1933 as result of business requests that all fields of business be included, according to announcements made by the bureau of census of the U. S. department of commerce.

All retail and wholesale business, hotels, places of amusement, business service companies, insurance agencies, real estate offices, trucking and bus companies, banks, office building managers, and contractors will be canvassed for reports on their operations during the calendar year 1935. The results are to be tabulated in Philadelphia, headquarters of the business census, and become the basic statistics which businesses use in planning their operating policies. Coincident with the business census, a manufacturing census is also being taken, separate reports forms being provided for manufacturing establishments doing a gross business of more than $5,000 a year.

Census employees are bound by a strict oath not to reveal any information contained on business reports and the law makes any violation of the oath, a criminal offense.

Electricity on the Farm. Omaha Journal-Stockman: Although it may not be generally known, this country is far ahead of Europe in the matter of rural electrification. Advocates of government owned and operated electric light plants have been demanding that the farmers be given electric light and power at once if not sooner and the intimation has been that the United States was a laggard in this respect.

This is far from the truth, according to H. S. Bennion of the Edison Electric Institute who has been looking into the matter. He has collected as complete statistics as were obtainable from a long list of foreign countries, including Japan, Great Britain, France and Sweden, all of which, according to critics of the American electric industry, have been making great strides in bringing power to farms as well as to urban homes.

It is true that in some of these countries a larger percentage of farms have power available than in America, due to the smaller size of the average farm, and the relatively greater population density. In France, for example, the bulk of farmers reside in villages, not isolated farm houses, scattered widely across the land, which lessens the expense of running lines. Even so, French farmers use electricity only for an extremely limited amount of lighting. The same thing is true of Japan, where the average electrified farm house uses electricity for but one or two low-power globes. Use of power appliances is virtually unknown.

The superiority of the United States in farm electrification becomes still more apparent when comparisons are made with large population states, such as Ohio and Pennsylvania, where there are a large number of farms per mile of line, and where the problems of electrifying farms are similar to those in European nations. In such areas, close to eighty percent of farm homes are electrified—as contrasted with thirty-nine percent in France—and power is widely used, not only for lighting, but for a multitude of appliances.

Electricity on the farm is coming and perhaps it is just as well that this convenience come gradually and not too precipitously. Costs and taxes must be taken into consideration if rural communities are to be helped instead of being bankrupt.

Shows Improvement. Henry Ludt who is in Rochester, Minn., for treatments, is doing well. He will remain there for a while longer.

Wayne High Is Winner In Games

South Sioux City Teams Are Defeated Tuesday By Local Boys.

Wayne high school first and second basketball teams went to South Sioux City Tuesday night and won both games. The first team stepped away 31-12 and the junior varsity squeezed out with a 15-14 decision over the South Sioux seconds.

In the first team game the first half was ragged, both teams trying to see who could score more touchdowns instead of baskets. In the second half the game settled down to a routine, and at the final whistle Wayne had the lead 31-12. Murray Penhollow was the leading scorer for Wayne and Ahern was next. For South Sioux, Becker led the attack with three fielders for six points.

In the second team ball game Joe George did some good work for the Wayne boys, and his eight points stood for high honors in that line. The final score was Wayne, 15, South Sioux, 14.

Thursday night the Wayne quintet goes to Neligh to engage Pete Farrow's Neligh basket tossers. Last year Wayne was a victim of a defeat at the hands of these Neligh boys, and will be set for revenge.

Smith Talks
ALFRED E. SMITH, former governor of New York and presidential nominee of the democratic party in 1928, excoriated the New Deal in a speech at an American Liberty League dinner and broadcast to the nation Saturday night. New Dealers may question his good taste or assail his motives, but they cannot meet the truths which he uttered, and which are important to understand on the eve of determining the future policies of the nation.

Mr. Smith attacked repudiation of the 1932 platform on which the administration was elected, emphasizing substitution of the socialist platform which the public had not favored. He criticized congress for lack of independence and urged members to look to their duties rather than to the election. Mr. Smith has ample ground to justify the charge that the democratic party has been deserted by the administration rather than by those who have been aroused to resentment by evident violation of a solemnly accepted party trust.

The Omaha World-Herald, a firm champion of the administration until recent months, regards the Smith indictments irrefutable in most respects. That newspaper points out improved business and agriculture to show weakness in Smith's statement that recovery had made no progress in three years, though Smith and others would doubtless contend that better conditions had come despite most recovery policies rather than because of them, and that a huge debt follows in the wake of many unwise experiments.

But the World-Herald endorses Mr. Smith's charge that the administration has been extending its power and trying more and more to shackle the liberties of the people. Plainly, no administration should be given power that any administration could abuse, and it is reasonable to assume that an administration that lightly tosses aside its pledges, and that is charged and surcharged with a select group of leftwingers, could not be trusted to allow popular freedom to stand in the way of impractical experiments.

In supporting Mr. Smith's position, the World-Herald mentions broken promises, an unbalanced budget, multiplied government bureaus, lavish expenditures and mounting taxes without solving unemployment problems, offering these concluding comments:

"With all the direct relief, the public works, the drain on the treasury and the resources of the people, we are just about where we started from. The millions looking for a chance to support themselves are still on the hands of the government, supported by borrowings and taxes.

"This may or may not be the fault of government. It may or may not be the fault of private industry. It may or may not be because government and private industry remain at daggers' points, fearful and hostile. Whatever the reason, the condition exists. The effort to remedy it has met, if not with total failure, then with pitifully disappointing results.

"It is this condition that is the very heart of the problem with which the people and the government are struggling. Put the idle back to work in private enterprises, clear the relief rolls of the helpless, stop the necessity for public employment, and the United States is once more on a firm and secure foundation. Unless and until this is done, the foundation will remain shaky. And with the condition continuing, despite increasingly heavy borrowing, lavish spending, smashed budgets, the menace to the foundation mounts day by day.

"That, as we see it, bluntly stated, is the danger to our free institutions. The danger does not come from Moscow. It is not that our constitution will be thoughtlessly destroyed and the supreme court disbanded. Our people have no inclination either to communism or fascism; they are still good, American republican-democrats. But all these dangers, including that from Moscow or Berlin or Rome, may eventually confront us if the opportunity for all the people to support themselves and live in comfort by honest work and enterprise is not somehow reopened."

New Party Alineations
The example of a storm within democratic ranks over control of party policies by left-wingers would happen in the republican organization if its administration were guilty of kicking aside its platform and borrowing for use the platform of the socialist party. There are plenty of socialists in the republican party, and when they go to the polls next November they will vote for Roosevelt, taking the places of dissenting democrats whose convictions will lead them elsewhere.
If Senator Norris who is nominal republican, is led to Roosevelt by his socialist propensities, is it any wonder that Jeffersonian democrats are driven away from the president for the same reason? Roosevelt expresses eagerness for Norris to stay in the senate in preference to any Nebraska democrat. Then if democrats do not agree with the president, are they less consistent in arraying themselves against him?

The president has taken the lead in breaking down party lines, and as he tries to adjust society to government paternalism and regimentation, he cannot expect those who disagree with him to go to his support. Conviction taking precedence over party will insure new alignments.

U. S. Conn Passes
IT would seem that one should be permitted to enjoy a period of care-free leisure after many years of strenuous endeavor. But inexorable fate frequently rules otherwise. Pressure of accustomed activities removed, collapse too often follows and defeats an earned rest. The passing of U. S. Conn, life-time educator and for quarter of a century head of the Wayne State Teachers college, shows how plans may be rudely broken and how happy anticipations may be turned to naught.

It was no easy job to lead the college from its small beginning to its present large proportions as a state institution. Grave responsibility rested on his shoulders. The problem of developing the school as well as problems of students and teachers weighed heavily through the years.
Impaired vitality as a price for large and gratifying growth in college benefits is not improbable. The school continues a monument to his memory. An appreciative public will sympathize profoundly with his wife and daughter in their great loss.

The defense for a wild spending policy is often the plea that no one should be allowed to starve. As a matter of fact, those opposed to government paternalism, those against hamstringing private business, are usually among the first in movements to relieve hunger or other distress. No one with normal sensibilities will knowingly permit anyone to starve. That does not mean, however, a desire to surrender all the facilities required to do business and create healthy sources of employment.

Automobile manufacturers and public officials are engaged in an intensive campaign to promote safety and reduce tragedies on the road. The need of the time urges greater care in keeping motorists from killing or maiming themselves, and reports indicate that efforts are bringing encouraging results.

Who Owns Our National Wealth?

(Omaha Journal-Stockman)

A favorite complaint of the "share the wealth" and "soak the rich" people is that the wealth of this country has become centered in a few hands and that the rest of us have no show unless we can take it away from the usurpers. A very brief analysis of the situation discloses the falsity, the ridiculousness of the complaint and the Ethyl News turns on the search light.

In statistics and incontrovertible figures the News seems to have broken down the fallacy that the ownership of wealth in the United States was in the hands of a few. Sixty per cent of America's wealth, it often has been said by reformers, is owned by 2 per cent of the people. Some figures have been even more out of proportion, according to the analysis as of today.

The real wealth of the country is owned by the millions of citizens who "possess desirable things." There are 28,000,000 private homes, as one example of real wealth. There are 7,000,000 farms, together with their equipment, all owned by private citizens, few of whom could be accounted rich. The 28,000,000 homes, more than one-half of which are owned by their occupants, have their equipment most of which belongs to the families in them.

In addition there are hundreds of thousands of stores, there are shops and small enterprises. There are more than 1,000,000 corporations, only 2,500 of which are large enough to be listed on any stock exchange. In savings banks there are more than 45,000,000 individual deposits, there are more than 10,000,000 memberships in building and loan associations that have assets in excess of $8,000,000,000. There are 113,000,000 life insurance policies that represent actual assets of more than $21,000,000,000. There are 20,000,000 privately owned motor cars and other assets that run into enormous figures.

The Ethyl News goes farther to analyze the actual wealth and its ownership. It said that the total national income paid out was $203,000,000,000 of which $132,000,000,000 was in wages and salaries and in addition $83,000,000,000 in withdrawals of shopkeepers, tradesmen and farmers who do not differentiate between wages and profits. The Ethyl News says 81.5 per cent of the national income was paid out to millions and widely distributed, that rents and royalties accounted for 2.5 per cent and that dividends and other property income accounted for 15.9 per cent.

Without at all questioning the fact that there are many inordinately swollen fortunes in this country and that gigantic aggregations of wealth have too much influence in financial and political affairs, it is undoubtedly true that the wealth of America is much more equitably distributed than in any other country. The real wealth of the nation cannot be monopolized by any individual or group of individuals.

Wisdom, then, would seem to suggest that we stick to the safe and sane methods by which our national wealth has been acquired than turn to expedients that have never heretofore resulted in anything but the dissipation of wealth.

CHILDHOOD.

Helpless childhood must depend on parental guidance for safety and security. And what a blessing—what a joy—if everybody concerned is normal! An antiquated notion, long since junked, was that children were born in sin. On the contrary, they evidence perfect confidence and nobility when becoming aloof only when a medley of tainted influences falls about their innocent but impressionable lives. If parents manifest the devotion they feel—if they do not carelessly overlook safeguards—if their words and deeds tally with inner consciousness—they may fashion almost insuperable armors of defense against evil temptations and willful disobedience. But contemplate the responsibility resting on parents to do and say the right things! And what a wealth of compensation and satisfaction may be found in childhood's trusting eyes, the approving smile, the warm caress! If the child's confidence is not thoughtlessly violated, it must forever continue a cement to happy relationship. Then as memories troop back, the yearning for earlier experiences is not filled with barbs of regret.

Pheasants Need Feed.

WHERE AND WHAT?

"Where do we go from here?" has been the unsolved problem of the ages. And what we do when we get there is not less incomprehensible. The material body disintegrating into the elements, what could survive out of the spirit? And with only the spirit—the conscious entity—salvaged from an earthly tenement, there can be no need for clothing or food or shelter, for artificial means to keep warm or cool. Then there can be no hatred, as it is based on material desires, though it is conceivable that imperishable thought would have to grow out of the ill effects of hatreds implanted here. The cause of malice gone, nothing should hinder a speedy cure. The animality of antiquity, of the middle ages and of this day may under the aegis of freed spirit, readily yield to the influence of a great central love. Having no need for material gratification, how will we put in time? It will of course take a long time to renew ties and extend acquaintance to an innumerable host, but there must be some things to think about and many things to accomplish as an advanced substitute for earth's pursuit of ways to fill hungry stomachs and otherwise to dodge human misery. For a brief span of years we fight to gain material advantage that can mean nothing to spiritual life beyond its influence for good or bad in proportions determined by good or bad motives. Preparation in ennobling, unselfish thought to be projected into eons ahead is too lightly passed over in an all-absorbing quest for flesh gratification. An ever-recurring campaign to glut human appetites.

Fiftyfive New Students Enroll

Observe Moment of Silence At Chapel Period In Memory Of Dr. Conn.

Fiftyfive new students enrolled at the Wayne State Teachers College Saturday and Monday, registration days for the second semester. This is a slight increase over the 1935 mid-year enrollment. Of the new students 62 per cent have never before attended the Wayne college; 64 per cent are freshmen and 20 per cent are upper classmen. Thirtytwo per cent of the mid-year entrances are young men. It is expected that a few more students will enroll next week; these students will come from other schools whose first semester work was not completed until this week. These young people have made special arrangements for registration at the Wayne college.

At chapel period yesterday morning a moment of silence was observed by the student body in memory of Dr. U. S. Conn who passed away at a Long Beach, Calif., hospital Tuesday evening. The song, "Abide With Me," was sung by students and instructors. A special memorial chapel will be arranged for Wednesday of next week.

Prof. A. G. Carlson and students of the piano department had charge of convocation exercises yesterday. Piano quartet played Rossini's "Overture to William Tell," Miss Vivian Nelson and Miss Eileen Ryan had the duet, "Hark! Hark! The Lark," by Schubert-Liszt; Miss Dorothy Kile and Robert Arter played Granger's "In a Nutshell Suite," Vivian Nelson played a solo, "Balchinnelle (The Clown)" by Rachmaninoff; Robert Arter played Chopin's "Impromptu in A Flat;" Miss Dorothy Kile presented Debussy's "Interrupted Serenade;" Miss Helen Toy and DeWayne Granly played "Dancer in the Patio" and "Rakoczy March" by Berlioz-Hutcheson.

Orpheo club will sponsor a recital of Miss Alice McGregor, mezzo-soprano, and David Sanders, baritone, Monday evening, February 3, at the college auditorium. The public is invited to attend the recital.

years. He came to Wayne, Neb., to head the city school in 1895 and remained until 1901 when he went to Fargo, N. D., to engage in business. He remained in Fargo until 1905 when he was chosen head of mathematics department at the college in Fremont, Neb. In 1907 he went to Columbus to head the city school. He was chosen president of Wayne college in August, 1910.

Dr. Conn took special training at the University of Chicago. He received L. L. D. degree from Nebraska Wesleyan university at Lincoln in 1922.

Ulisses Sylvester Conn was born in Middletown, Ind., March 16, 1865, a son of Charles L. and Mary Conn. He married Miss Cammie Baum of Valparaiso, Ind., August 23, 1893. He is survived by his wife who has been a most faithful and efficient companion of 42 years, and one daughter, Miss Ardath, who went to California with him this fall.

Scores of friends join in extending sympathy to Mrs. Conn and Miss Conn.

At chapel Wednesday morning at the Wayne State Teachers College Prof. O. R. Bowen read the following: "It is with profound regret and deep sorrow that we announce the death of our beloved president emeritus, Dr. U. S. Conn. Shall we stand for a moment in silence in honor of his memory?" The silence following was broken by the choir softly singing the hymn, "Abide With Me."

Why Save Anything?

Saturday Evening Post: It is noticeable that at recent savings-bank conventions speakers have shown solicitude lest the vast Federal project for old-age pensions and unemployment insurance should serve to weaken the incentive to save. One speaker referred to it as a program which promises abundance for all by robbing selective Peter to pay collective Paul, and added:

"Social security, with its alluring promise that someone else will guarantee for the rainy day, can never take the place of the savings program of the traditional banks that a man's future welfare is a matter of individual responsibility."

But close inspection does not disclose anything especially alluring about the Social Security Act. There is nothing in it calculated to prove that the Government is Santa Claus. The benefits to accrue have to be paid for in heavy taxes, not only by employers but in large contributions by employees. This law does not wave any magic wand that is going to remove the specters of old age and unemployment, except as compulsory taxation and contributions build up accumulated reserves to ease these burdens.

It must be kept in mind also that neither agricultural nor domestic workers are covered by the act, and that the farm population alone amounts to 45,000,000. There are several millions in domestic and personal service not included. Nor does the act cover the small merchants and tradesmen, or a large part of the several millions classified as professional. Indeed, its provisions have only a limited application to what might be called the white-collar class.

Furthermore, benefit payments do not begin until a person reaches sixty-five, no matter at what age he or she retires. Also a penalty applies to those who work after they are sixty-five and then, at a later date, take advantage of the benefits. Also, as regards the unemployment-insurance feature, not more than fifteen dollars a week is to be paid in any case, and for not more than sixteen weeks for any annual period.

Thus it will be seen that vast as the scope of the act is, the benefits which it provides are relatively limited, although they should make life easier for millions who become handicapped through either old age or unemployment. But there will remain, on the part of those whose earnings permit, the same opportunity as before to make more adequate provision for the future of themselves and their families.

The next few years will develop many interesting questions in connection with the Social Security Act, but we do not believe that the days of individual thrift are over. A vast field of individual responsibility for future welfare still remains, and is likely to continue for a very long time to come.

SYNOPSIS

When Garth finished his meal, he threaded a needle with a smoked catgut and showed the girl how to sew the thick moosehide. Holes punched with the awl made the work fairly easy. Within a few minutes she caught the knack of handling the awl and needle. Though her stitches were irregular, they promised to hold. He cut out the mate of the first moose skin, and another pair smaller in size.

Mr. Ramill crawled from the lean-to, stiff, hungry and irritable. But sleep and the open air had whetted all appetites. As with the broiled liver, the three cheebacos—mildred, mining engineer and fastidious hellness—went at the hot meat with fingers and teeth. They were down to bedlock—the fundamentals of living. All the elegancies of civilized eating were absent, even the supposed necessities—forks, plates, seasonings. Yet the essentials remained. They were hungry, and here was food. It was neither as tender nor as savory as had been the liver. None the less, it was food.

At the end of the meal, Garth said that the first need was to fetch in the foreleg of moose. Miss Ramill rose with her father and Huxby.

"Sorry," Garth told her. "Your father needs all the walking he can get. Someone must stay to mind the fire. I might mention there's a" sters of the same breed that ruled over the southern Rockies and the Sierras in the early days when Indians still were armed only with bows, and the few white hunters carried only muzzle-loading flintlocks.

The ears of the great she-bear were flattened back. Her little pig eyes glared red. The monstrous jaws gaped to let out a roar of defiance that shook the solid ground. "Good G—d! Mr. Ramill gasped, "A—bear!"

Huxby gripped Garth's shoulder. "Shoot, damn you! Shoot, or give me the flite!"

"Shut up!" Garth ordered him. "That roar is only a warning. She'll not charge if we mind our own affairs. You and Mr. Ramill take hold of that nearest unorn leg and start quietly. Don't hurry and don't run."

The cool certainty of Garth's tone compelled belief and obedience even from Huxby. Mr. Ramill was already reaching up for one of the two moose legs that had not been pulled down by the wolves. The engineer hastily turned to help him. As they started off, Garth took the other unmanagled leg on his shoulder and snarled after them.

Garth's gray eyes twinkled as he glanced back over his shoulder at the huge beast. He could not have asked for a better bugaboo to make his companions behave. Safe out of her sight, he told the two to halt and get the moose leg on a tote-pole. Huxby at once started to curse him for not shooting.

"Go try it yourself," Garth replied, and when Huxby drew away from the offered rifle, he nodded approval. "You are wise not to attack a she-grizzly with cut-throat."

Spurred on no doubt by the knowledge of that gray monster behind him, Mr. Ramill managed to hold up his end of the tote-pole all the way to camp. Then he sank down purple-faced, wheezing that the exertion had killed him.

His daughter sat by the fire brooding. Though refreshed by her bath in the warm pool, she had begun to feel the craving for drink and tobacco. She had done little slithering on the moose skin. But she lived to horrified alertness when Huxby told about the grizzly.

Garth forestalled an outburst of hysterics. "Keep cool. The old lady will let us alone if we keep clear of her cubs. Keep up the fire, and she will shy clear of you. She doesn't fancy fire. Burnt her paws trying to rob me of a roasting porcupine."

A look at the gold pan showed Garth that the moose muffer had begun to dissolve. He cooled some of the gelatinous broth in the small pot. Mr. Ramill not only gipped down the drink. He smacked his lips and asked for more. At that, both Huxby and the girl were stirred to try the rich drink.

The three were accustomed to the free drinking of their kind. They had already begun to feel the lack of the usual socialities, meetings, wines and between-meals whiffly. This was aggravated by the lack of tobacco. To ease them as much as possible, he broiled lynx meat on a grating of willow stems, baiting it with moose fat. The tepid meat kept them occupied until the muffer broth soothed their jagged nerves.

There was a limit, however, to eating, and once the effect began to pass, their craving returned. More means than before. First, Miss Ramill, then Huxby, and last of all Mr. Ramill began to make frontal remarks aimed at Garth. He ignored them for some time. The remarks became more offensively witty and sarcastic. He dropped the moose skin upon which he had been sitting, and picked up his rifle.

"I've had enough bitters and sour berries, thank you all. Feed them yourself for a while. I'll go get the steep I missed last night while acting as guardian angel of your aching slumbers."

In the flyweight John Hooper of Hooper, was given decision over Charles Russell of Wayne, and in lightweight class Steve Wilson of Bloomfield, over Ernie Barnell of Wayne. In the bantamweight class Bob Blakeman of Norfolk, was given decision over Karl Katz of Windsor. Merle Cherry of Laurel, knocked out Don J. Henderson of Wayne, was 1935 champion in tournament sponsored by the Norfolk Daily News and the Norfolk American Legion chapter. When just starting out for Norfolk Wednesday evening the boys from Wayne had a narrow escape when brakes on the car refused to hold and the machine slid about 40 feet into a westbound, slow-moving passenger train. Frank Beckner was driving the car and applied the brakes near the Central garage when he first noticed the train coming in from the east. The impact with the train caused the car to turn completely around but no damage was done except for a headlight, front fender and slight damage to a front wheel. After repairs had been made the boys went on to Norfolk for the boxing competition.

FIFTY-FIFTH YEAR

Children Watch Hansel And Gretel Puppets Saturday

One hundred wide-eyed children listened and watched breathlessly Saturday afternoon at the Wayne city library while "Hansel and Gretel" puppets entertained them from a miniature stage. Children of the third grade of the training school read the lines from behind curtains while the puppets acted out the parts of Hansel, Gretel, the mother and father, the good fairies and the old witch.

Puppets for the show were dressed by children of the third grade under direction of Mrs. Clara Heylman, third grade supervisor, and Miss Lorraine Baker, student teacher. Stage scenery was made by the children and Miss Baker. Hansel in his blue suit and Gretel in stiff pink frock and sun-bonnet are sent to the woods for berries. Hansel in his greediness catches the berries as fast as they can be picked. Darkness overtakes the children in their search for more berries so they lie down in the woods to sleep. A tiny puppet fairy in black watches over the children as they rest. In the morning when the children wake they find themselves before a candy house; nibbling on the peppermint fence brings the old witch in tail pointed hat on the scene. Hansel and Gretel are captured by the witch, but outwit her and are found again by their parents.

Children used a great deal of expression in reading the parts and the puppets responded well to the slightest movements of the children's hands. Youngsters who took part in the puppet show were: Jack Kohlmeier, Eunice Hopmann, Joanne Gifford, Joan Ahern, Jean Jacobs, Rhea Kai, Marilyn Midler, June Dawson, Joyce Johnson, and Elizabeth Renard. Margaret Costerisan had practiced the show with the group but was unable to take part because of illness.

After the puppet show Miss Maybelle Petersen told stories to the children.

Congressman Stefan Files For Re-election

Karl Stefan of Norfolk, now serving his first term as Congressman from the Third Nebraska District, filed today as a candidate for re-election to that office. From Washington, where he is attending the second session of the 74th Congress, Congressman Stefan gave out the following statement:

"In 1934, when I first became a candidate for office, I told my friends in northeast Nebraska that if elected, I would give them vigorous and honest representation; that I would work and vote for those things which seemed of vital importance to our agricultural district, without any regard to partisan politics.

"In asking for re-election, I can only say that I have done my best to carry out that promise. I have tried to keep the people of the district informed about what was going on here in Washington, and what I was trying to do. The press and radio have helped wonderfully in giving out this information and I want to express now my deep gratitude for their many courtesies.

"Right now I am terribly busy. We from the farm districts are trying to get the Frazier bill for lower farm interest rate before the house. We are preparing for a battle with the powerful lobby which wants to take the three cent duty off of coconut oil and thus furnish worse competition for American dairy farmers. Then there must be some program to take the place of the AAA and we are studying that closely.

"Next summer I hope to visit around the district, meet old friends and talk things over. In the meantime, let us hope for better crops, improved conditions, and that everything is going to be all right."

Students Receive Scholarship Funds From Business Firm

Salesmanship and the grim determination to make a way to college where there at first seemed to be none, has earned scholarships to the Wayne State Teachers College for three young people, Miss Mary Inness of Meadow Grove, Miss Lila Jones of Carroll, and William Pfister of Newadstje. The three have received funds from a nationally known business firm which has enabled them to enter college here or in any accredited college in the United States.

The business firm from which the scholarships were received has 875 students throughout the country who have earned funds for college work by securing new customers for their manufacturers. Banks are sent students after they have been accepted by the company as candidates for the scholarship; these blanks are complete with the names of the students and are given to potential customers. For the first $500 worth of orders secured by the student, he receives a check for $75 for entrance fees and other registration expenses, room rent, etc. For all orders sent in by the student after the first $500, 10 per cent is credited to his account; orders must be for $2 or more.

Scholarships may be used for any course in any accredited school. The company is no longer giving new scholarships but those already started will be continued. If a student is out of school for a period of six months from the time the scholarship has been awarded, it is automatically cancelled. A student may work on his sales at any time through the year or through the summer months.

The company is much interested in its students and requires reports on student work and on the way in which funds are expended. The checks are sent from the company to Miss Mildred Piper, accountant, at the Wayne college. When a student wishes to draw on his account he must state exactly how the money is to be spent and this report is sent to the company for criticism. The company keeps in close contact with the 875 students scattered over the United States and always responds to favorable reports with letters of friendly interest.

Thomas Johnson brought an armadillo shell for the fifth grade to study in connection with their work on descriptions of animals. Fifth graders made color charts using the snowflake designs which they cut last week. In the spelling contest the Yale group is ahead of the Washington group. Third graders who had perfect spelling grades for the past week are: Marcela Brugger, LaVerta Doring and Hattie Thompson. The third grade is arranging a table for shoes of the different countries in connection with their shoe project. Dr. Chas. F. Dienst loaned the room a pair of decorated wooden sandals which he brought from Brest, France, while overseas. Fred Ellis brought a pair of wooden shoes which came from Holland. The children are writing a little play about shoes, personifying the parts of the shoe and dramatizing the play as a whole. An outline of a shoe will be made of plaster board as background for the play. The rhythm band is working with minuets now and will learn to dance to the music. Pupils Make Igloo. The second grade made an igloo from packing boxes covering it with print paper blocked off to resemble ice. Jack Fitch and Floyd Kingston made a picture of the northern lights for the background of the igloo. For the sand table the children arranged the scenery to represent the north pole at one end with an Eskimo igloo, seals and other native animals; in the middle is a tropical jungle with palm trees and at the other end is the south pole with a miniature replica of Admiral Byrd's ship and the location of Little America. First graders who had perfect attendance for the semester are: Dorothy Asay, David Carhart, Yvonne Dunn, Joanne Foster, Billy Heine, Billy Kugler, Ralph Shelton, Donna Mae Sorenson and Stanley Stratton. Roberta Hancock and Betty Ann Petersen are the first pupils in the grade to finish their work books and primers. Children of the grade are enjoying Eskimo tobbies. The igloo was made from match boxes covered with white paper. Stanley Stratton made penguins for the table and drew the northern lights for the background. The little folks are enjoying the two Milne books, "Winnie, the Pooh," and "The House at Pooh Corner." In Business College. Miss Hilda Brudigam is in Sioux City attending business college. FIRST GRADE IN TRAINING SCHOOL IN CREAMERY WORK

Little Folks Build And Paint Fixtures For New Project — Paper Money Made For Sale Exchange In Room.

"Can anyone tell me the meaning of the term, 'Pasteurized milk?'" asked a practice teacher in the first grade of the training school Friday morning, to a group of 16 eagerly waiting youngsters.

"You get the milk hot to kill the germs in it," Doris answered, the words fairly tumbling out, "and it's good for you because it makes your teeth come in where there isn't any."

The following a discussion of foods good for everyone with the following comment from a small boy in an orange sweater and brown corduroy overalls: "In summer when we had a garden I used to go out and eat peas out of their shells and carrots, too, after I washed the dirt off them."

Work in the first grade has centered around a creamery project for several weeks and everything the children do correlates with it. In keeping with the new ideas in child training, the children are encouraged to use their own initiative in planning their work and are only guided in the right directions by their supervisor and practice teachers.

Directly following discussion of foods the children divided into assigned groups for their "jobs" in completing furnishings for the creamery. Four boys set to work on making the ice box; a group of girls experimented with hinges for the cheese box and one dimpled little girl proceeded to put on her overalls for a very workmanlike job of painting a dasher churn.

Because they believe a creamery should be very clean, the little folks long ago decided that everything must be spotlessly white. The children are very careful to put on their overalls when tackling a painting job. Brushes are carefully cleaned in turpentine after each time they are used and little folks have learned the value of the same liquid in cleaning spatters of paint from hands and arms.

In the workroom boys who were on the ice box job, were having an animated discussion on how the door was to be fastened without any hinges. After several trial and error attempts one of the youngsters gave up in despair, declaring: "Well, I know my daddy'll buy us some hinges."

Hearing the remark, the practice teacher walked over to the boys and said calmly: "Did you know that sometimes people can make hinges out of nails and a piece of rope?"

The young gentleman so busily engaged with the saw was making a dasher for one of the churns. The wood might have been pretty tough because his earnest little face was twisted into mask of determination. "How will we fix those rough edges, Johnny?" asked the instructor. Johnny rested on the saw for a moment his face puckered in thought, which cleared as he said, "Guess we'll have to sand-paper 'em," and went back to his sawing.

The little folks are very original in their drawings relating to the creamery. Posters lining the walls reflect a good deal of the thought processes of the youngsters. Color, loved by children the world over, runs riot in flowers, cows and golden utensils. On one poster a milk sun is shining through blue raindrops on a red cow with blue legs. Another depicts a rotund milkman stooping to smell a purple flower which is much smaller than its stem. Amazing is one child's use of perspective in drawing a butter carton—children are not instructed in perspective yet the lines in the drawing shows the accuracy with which the child saw the object.

the training school are: Doris Elaine Granquist, John Neely, Juanita Walters, Melvin Schroeder, Donna Schroeder, Delores Meyers, Jennibelle Briggs, Janice Johnson, Mary Ann March, Gilbert Chichester, John Addison, Bobby Penn, Lloyd Russell, Annabelle Korff, Dickie Banister and Darrell Hart.

Teachers Meet For Open Discussion

A teachers' meeting was held at the Winside school last week Tuesday morning at 7:30 with Supt. E. D. Clason and Miss Gladys Mettlen in charge. Methods of teaching were discussed.

Miss Alice Garwood discussed the "Question and Answer Method." Miss Margaret Leffler, the "Project Method." Miss Theola Nuss, "Supervised Study." Frank Lee, "The Dalton Plan." Charles Metz, "The Winnetka Plan," and Miss Ruth Schindler, "Problem Method and the Unit Method."

Miss Garwood in discussing the "Question and Answer Method" brought out the fact that questions are for the purpose of developing nine kinds of responses: Memory facts, recall comparison and reasoning, analysis, judgment, organization of material, appreciation, directed study, and further questions. Miss Garwood stated that in her opinion, the questions which cause the pupil to evaluate and judge are the best.

Miss Leffler discussed the project method. The following were facts brought out: A selection of a major project is made as the basis of the work for the year; minor projects are developed under each major project; the amount of subject matter which is used is about the same as in any other method; projects can be carried out with either new or old material; a worth while project will lead into change of thought and action; projects are life-like problems; poster, sandtables, and supplementary reading are valuable for this kind of work.

Miss Nuss discussed supervised study. She brought out the fact that there are two kinds of supervised study. In this one type the teacher gives directions which must be followed implicitly. This type allows the pupil to give self expression. In the other type of supervised study, the pupil is given a task, and is allowed to proceed in his own way with the teacher helping only when the pupil strikes difficulties or the teacher sees a chance for improvement.

According to Mr. Lee's report the main characteristics of the Dalton plan are: Freedom to work without interruption, cooperative effort and progress proportional to the amount of effort. He pupil is given his school work in a series of related jobs. The rooms are equipped and used as laboratories. The student devotes an entire day to one subject. The work day is divided as follows: A short period for instruction, two or three hours of laboratory work to work on projects which are assigned in units requiring about four weeks' work, a thirty or forty minute period to answer questions which were not settled in the laboratory.

Mr. Montzingo reported on the Winnetka plan which provides for one-half of each morning to be spent on essentials and one half creative work. This is repeated in the afternoon. There are no recitations. The work is in units. When a pupil completes a unit he takes a practice test. If he passes he asks for the real test. He must make a perfect score. Each part must be mastered before he proceeds. The teacher checks the tests and supervises the work.

In her discussion of the problem method of teaching Miss Schindler brought out these points: It is easy to find problems for the method as problems arise everywhere. The teacher must put herself in the problem attitude; must work to give the pupils problems and must keep her mind open to all possible correct solutions. The problem method lends itself readily to use in combination with other methods to gain the advantages of other methods. Problems must go from the concrete to those pertaining to life situations and should stress the favorable solutions. Pupils learn best under the stimuli of their own interests. These interests are best developed by allowing them to suggest and choose problems which they need to solve.

The preparation of fair work was discussed and the teachers decided to again show the school work at the county fair.

Miss Leffler and Mr. Montzingo are the leaders for the February meeting.

Tugwell On Advertising.

Omaha Journal-Stockman: Since he dropped the remark that advertising is a sinful waste of money, Rex Tugwell has been getting a pretty general, albeit good-natured panning, in the nation's press. Not that the newspapers and magazines are worried about the loss of business they might suffer through Mr. Tugwell's knocking. Their columns are comfortably full of ads these days, placed there by hard-headed business men who don't believe in spending money wastefully. But they are surprised at the willful misinformation which the statement implies.

"There are two kinds of values—that which is inherent in the article and the mind value," comments the Janesville (Wis.) Gazette on the subject. "That is peculiar to the customer. Mind value is the thing that makes two women argue over the respective merits of cheese, fur coats or flowers. Advertising impresses on the mind the certain things in life that may please. There would be no national distribution of a thousand items of merchandise if it were not for advertising—that is if those things that one thinks about once in a while were not continually impressed upon one by the repetition of the advertising. Dr. Tugwell says advertising adds to consumer cost. It is exactly the other way around. One might summon ten thousand witnesses in the form of advertising products to disprove a statement so absurd.

"Long before Christ preached His Sermon on the Mount on the hillsides to go out into the world and tell everyone about the new plan of salvation, the Chinese were putting printed placards on the walls and movable types were used to advertise the ukases of Chinese rulers.

"Tugwell does actually believe in advertising. Let all the newspapers of the nation, all the magazines and all the publications—radio and all channels for the dissemination of information—be closed against Mr. Tugwell and he would last as long as the more or less celebrated feather in hell.

"Tugwell lives on publicity. It took him out of his natural obscurity and gave him a place in the sun. Otherwise he would have been neither asset nor liability—a nonentity. That is advertising. He would die like any other microbe if there was nothing on which to feed. His feed is the beating of the tom-toms advertising his exploits. He believes in his own attitude in advertising."

New Plans.

Lincoln Journal: The new dealers, with the coming election in mind, seem determined to enact a stop-gap agricultural relief bill immediately even though it is of a character that makes supreme court disapproval certain. The advantage of re-enacting a farm bill along the lines of the AAA is that the farmers, knowing how the AAA worked, will be satisfied with another AAA, even though it is certain to be discarded sooner or later, and will be with the new deal through the election.

A comprehensive agricultural plan, a permanent plan, might require a long time to become effective. Even the most hopeful planner cannot promise results for a long range scheme, a permanent policy, by November. That explains the stop-gap character of legislation proposed.

A bill which has been introduced in both houses and apparently enjoys administration support, confers virtually unlimited powers upon the secretary of agriculture to pay growers out of a 440 million dollar fund to be provided later for voluntary production control. The supreme court said plainly, in the AAA decision:

The congress cannot invade state jurisdiction to compel individual action; no more can it purchase such action.

Further, it states: There is an obvious difference between a statute which the conditions upon which monies shall be expended and one effective only upon assumption of contractual obligation to submit to a regulation by the federal government.

The court view of matters of this kind should be quite plain to everyone. It also seems quite plain that the new dealers are intent upon forcing upon the country further legislation of the character of the AAA, knowing that it is certain to be found unconstitutional. They, apparently, will be content to circumvent the constitution for the extended period that will be required to carry a case through the courts to the supreme court. Meanwhile election time will have passed and those soothing payments to the farmers can be made at a time when the farm vote is of consequence.

Calling the Doctor.

Aburn Herald: If you or a member of your family is taken ill suddenly and the condition becomes serious, you can call a doctor by telephone and he will get in his auto and reach your home in a very short time. Even if you live far out in the country the speeding car, rushing over paved or gravelled roads, on dirt roads that are easily passable most of the time, will bring him to you promptly. We recently talked with a man who has lived in Nemaha county since the early days and he told us of the great difficulty in procuring medical aid when sickness visited the home of the pioneer. When there were no telephones, no automobiles and no good roads, getting a doctor was often a difficult matter and lack of easily available medical skill was one of the chief hardships of the early days.

Modern conveniences cost money but if you were taken sick suddenly and thought you were going to die you would be mighty glad that you live in an advanced age and not in times when those about you might wonder whether to send for the doctor or wait a little while and send for the undertaker.

And while the physician or surgeon of today can reach his patients more promptly, he can also bring to them the benefit of greater knowledge and more expert service. Still, he finds his duties more complex and exacting than did the pioneer practitioner one of the chief reasons for which is the automobile itself. A surgeon told us recently that the automobile has developed injuries seldom encountered in the times preceding the motor vehicle age and he spoke particularly of pelvic fractures. Such injury though not unknown was comparatively rare until they were made more or less common by automobile accidents. A man might be badly hurt by a runaway team but his condition would be nothing like that of a man lifted from the wreck of an automobile. We should be thankful that it is easy to get a doctor these days because we are much more likely to need him.

CONGRESS As Seen by a Nebraskan

The 1935 corn hog checks will be paid somehow notwithstanding the decision of the supreme court on the AAA. This was indicated yesterday when the house committee on agriculture voted out a bill for $296,000,000 to take care of the 1935 payments. This will go to the appropriations committee. The bill does not suggest "how" this money is to be secured and the appropriations committee and congress will have to work out this. This indicates general feeling among congressmen that the government took on an obligation and must pay for it.

There are many married couples in Washington today, each holding a good government job, and a terrific fight is being waged in the House right now on a bill to allow married couples to hold government jobs. With over 11,000,000 people out of jobs in the country, many Congressmen feel that one government job for the breadwinner of a family should be enough, especially if he receives enough money to keep that family in comfort. However, the Washington City organization is making an unusually hard fight to save those jobs for these husbands and wives of one family. The lobby of these jobholders is so strong that prediction is that their bill will carry in spite of the efforts of those who are trying to spread those jobs out to a greater number of breadwinners.

The sub-committee of the prairie farm group on investigation of imports and reciprocal trade agreements held a busy meeting and decided to hear from doctors.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

By ROBERT AMES BENNET WNU Service Copyright by Robert Ames Bennet

SYNOPSIS As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the far North, a plane lands at the advance surveying station. It is the Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith, and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Believing him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to his samples of platinum-bearing ore as nearly "worthless." Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows her contempt for Garth. Through Garth's guidance the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to let him invest a small amount. Sensing treachery, Garth secretly removes a part from the plane's motor. Huxby and Lilith taunt Garth with his "gullibility," but their tone changes when they try to start the crippled plane. Returning to shore they try to force Garth to give up the missing part. Garth sets the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls. He points out to the enraged trio that he is their only hope in guiding them out of their predicament and to kill him would be fatal to all. Garth begins preparing for the long journey. He insists that the others help him in his endeavor. He is hardened for the hardships ahead in their toilsome trek to the outpost on the Starvation. Garth disarms them by when he becomes threatening.

She met Garth's cool gaze and fell silent. He added, "You'll begin by rebuilding that fire. After that you'll cook the other liver for your father and yourself. You will then start graining the hair off the moosehide while Huxby and your father go back for more meat." "I will do no such thing!" "Very well. That means you get no necessities to replace your boots when those flimsy soles wear through on the rocks." She flared: "Gallant Sir Galahad!" "Leave her be, Garth," her father interposed. "I'll tend the fire and scrape the skins." "No. Lie down. Whenever you work, it's to be on your feet. We must build up both your wind and your muscle. Huxby, I'll ask you to fetch that pot and the gold pan." The mining engineer rose and started up towards the trough without a word of inquiry or protest. Miss Ramill's eyes widened. She gazed wonderingly from him to her father. Mr. Ramill had no less obediently laid down as ordered. Garth ignored the girl. He chopped deep notches in the trunks of the jeep crotch birch trees, about seven feet high. He then cut saplings to span across from tree to tree, with ends wedged in the notches. The next move was to fetch a number of slender poles.

When he returned, smoke was blowing up to drive the flies from the moose tongues and muffs. Miss Ramill had rebuilt the snudge-fire and taken down the liver, ready for slicing. She gazed up at him, ready to flare if he had shown the slightest flicker of amusement or gloating. Instead, he gave her a curt nod of acknowledgment, laid his knife beside the liver, and turned to space the poles across the sapling framework to make a grill above the snudge. Upon this he laid the moose leg and the pieces of lynx meat. Huxby came back from the discovery stake with the gold pan and little aluminum pot. He stared in surprise at sight of Miss Ramill cooking the liver. She shrugged her slim shoulders and drew back from the fire to give one spit to her father. After that she silently offered the other to Garth. "Thank you," he said. "Let me suggest that you now fill the gold pan with water and slice into it one of the muffs. They don't look promising. But if simmered for a day or two, a single moose muffle will give us several delicious meals of what might be called spiced jelly." This was no sign of interest from the girl. She was no longer hungry. Garth ignored her sullen dish, you may cook as much more of the liver as you can eat. He will keep resting while Huxby and I go for another load of moose meat. The sooner we pack all to camp, the surer we will be that other mouths do not get away with it. He unbuckled his pack, slung the pack-board on his back, and picked up his rifle and belt-ax. Huxby trailed after him out of camp. They walked in Indian file all the way around to the muskeg swamp, Huxby with his gaze fixed coldly upon the back of his leader. At the swamp Garth cut a tote-pole and passed it through the tendons of two hindquarters of moose. The remaining quarter he strapped to his pack-board. He folded the second lynx skin for Huxby to use as a shoulder pad. Upon the mining engineer rested his end of the tote-pole. Though Garth had no pad, he stood up with the moose quarter on his back and lifted his end of the pole to his shoulder. But he was accustomed to packing. He bore the meat on his pack-board and his half of the two quarters on the pole with as little difficulty as Huxby toted the other end of the pole.

When he reached the camp Miss Ramill and her father were out gathering wood. At one end of the fire, thick smoke was rising from green sticks and leaves; at the other end, the pan of sliced muffle was boiling hard. After the meal Garth glanced at the feet of Lilith and Vivian. "Mr. Ramill, the leanto and blanket are for you and your daughter. Huxby can take the lee side of the fire. I'll keep it going. Turn in whenever you please." A yawn surprised Lilith Ramill into a mocking laugh. She turned to her swollen-faced father. "What a howling farce, Vivian! Can you imagine me going to roost at sunset, instead of sunrise?" A particularly sly smile and felt at Lilith's feet. "Mr. Ramill, cast a wistful glance towards the leanto. "I presume, Lilith, you will prefer not to share the hut with me. Perhaps I can manage out here beside the fire, like Vivian." "No," Garth differed. "You'll sleep under that blanket until you have hardened into shape, and you'll turn in now. It's been a big day!" The girl bridled. "How about my wishes—and the properties?" "We'll leave that to you," Garth replied. "If you consider it improper to share the blanket with your father, you're welcome to sit up and help me grain these moose-blades." Lilith Ramill was no less completely outmaneuvered than the engineer. "Yes, I must say. Dad, if you're letting him order you around, I refuse to stay up and slave all night. Come on." He crept after her into the brush leanto. Garth at once set to making more catgut. Huxby had gathered a thin padding of spruce tips and moss at the far side of the fire and lay down. Lilith sat up and her father, he fell asleep.

In The City

"Here it comes! Here it comes," shouted Dick.

"Really?" asked Lois.

Lois and Dick, the city twins were jumping up and down on the station platform.

The train stopped. The people came hurrying off. Lois and Dick stretched their necks but could see no Betty or Bob.

Lois ran to her mother and father with tears in her eyes. "What do you think happened to Betty and Bob? Wasn't that their train?"

"Just be patient," answered mother. "Here comes another train. Maybe they are on this one." Sure enough there was another train coming down the track.

Lois and Dick's faces were all smiles. This time they weren't disappointed.

Lois was the first to spy the farm relatives. What a happy meeting it was.

"How is Pepper?" asked Dick. "And how's the old setting hen?" questioned Lois.

"as we won't have time to go home for lunch."

"That will be fun," said Betty. Bob, who had been all eyes, asked, "Where are all these people going? Why are they in such a hurry? It makes me dizzy watching them."

"Everyone always seems to be in a hurry in the city," answered Dick.

"Here, young fellow what do you mean by crossing the street now?" called a policeman to Bob. "Don't you know you should watch the lights the same as the cars do?"

"What lights?" asked Bob, who was so interested in seeing all the sights that he had walked ahead of the rest.

The policeman showed Bob the lights on the street corners and explained, "When that light is red you must stop. When it is yellow get ready to go; and when it is green, go."

"I guess you had better stay a little closer to your cousins, Bob," said father, "until you learn more about the city."

"We will have to take the elevator up to the lunch room," said Lois as they entered a large store. Lois showed Betty and Bob two buttons near the elevator. One said "up" and the other said, "Down."

"Betty, you push the one that says, 'Up' and the other that says, 'Down' and soon the elevator door opened and took them up. As the elevator started Betty said, "Oh!" She grabbed her mother. Bob was surprised too, "Oh boy! That gives you a funny feeling."

"After a good lunch Bob pushed the button that said, "Down," and again the elevator stopped for them. As they came out Bob said, "Oh I don't believe I could ever get used to one of these things. Coming down is worse than going up. It gives me the funniest feeling in my tummy."

"Let's go see a picture show before we go home," suggested Dick. "There's a dandy cowboy show at the Rialto."

The parents agreed that a show would be a good way to finish up the day. In the show when two men on horses were chasing each other, Bob forgot where he was and yelled, "Ride 'em, Cowboy, you can get him." Everyone around him laughed. Bob felt ashamed and was more careful after that. Betty ducked down under the seat once when the men were shooting in the picture. Lois asked, "What's the matter, Betty? Did you see something?" "No," answered Betty, "I just don't like to have them point those guns at me."

To reach Lois and Dick's home, they had to ride on a crowded street car. Betty and Lois and their mothers found seats but the men and boys had to stand. Every time the street car stopped, Bob felt against someone or someone stepped on his toes. It seemed like all the car did was start and stop and it made so much noise you couldn't talk.

"I feel sort of like a punching bag," said Bob, when they finally got off the street car.

"You would get used to being pushed and crowded around if you lived in a city very long," said Dick.

Betty and Bob didn't sleep much that first night. They would jump out of bed and rush to a window every few minutes to see what some new noise was.

The next afternoon the four cousins went to a recreation park right on the edge of a lake. There were all sorts of things to ride such as merry-go-rounds, ferris wheel, little trains and roller coaster. Then there were stands where you could buy candy and balloons and whips and lots of things that children like.

"This makes me think of our county fair," said Betty. "Yes," answered Bob, "but sure, only our fair has only four days. Just think how lucky you are to have a fair here every year."

The children rode on the merry-go-round, ferris wheel, little train and roller coaster. Then they came to the roller coaster. "Well, shall we try this?" asked Dick. "I'll try anything once," answered Bob.

The children climbed into the roller coaster car, Betty and Lois in one seat and Bob and Dick right behind them. The car went up a little hill on the tracks. Then it seemed like the seats were dropping right out from under them and they went speeding down. They could hardly get their breath before they would go zooming down another dip. It was just one dip after another. Betty and Bob screamed every time they could catch their breath.

"Whew!" exclaimed Bob, when the ride was over. "I'm sure glad to get off of that thing. One ride on that will do me a long time."

"Me too," added Betty. "I don't think I ever want to go on one of those again."

"You both do look sort of pale," said Lois. "I'm getting even with you for giving me that bumpy ride on Pepper," said Dick.

The mothers of the children came to find them. Dick's and Lois' mother asked, "Don't you think we had better go home now?"

"Just let us have a ride on one of the boats. Then we will be ready," answered Dick.

"All right," replied mother, "but you must hurry. It is getting late." The children ran down to the lake. "As long as you are company, we will let you choose the boat," said Dick. "Would you rather go on the steam boat or the speed boat?"

"I choose the speed boat," said Betty. "Me too," agreed Bob.

There were three seats in the speed boat. "Let's get in the back seat," suggested Dick. "You can feel the waves better there." The driver took them over the waves made by the steam boat.

"It feels like the water is splanking the boat," said Betty. "This is keen," added Bob. As the speed boat went farther out on the lake it went faster and faster. Soon the children began to feel sprays of water. They called to the driver but he couldn't hear them as the engine made too much noise. The water came in almost like rain and the twins got wetter and wetter.

"I guess we shouldn't have sat in the back seat," said Dick as the four huddled together.

Their mothers met them as the boat landed. "You look like four drowned rats," they remarked. "We feel like four drowned rats, too," answered Lois.

"We had so much fun it was worth the soaking," added Bob. "We must hurry home now," said Lois and Dick's mother, "so we can get on some dry clothes."

Betty and Bob and their mother and father spent two busy, happy weeks in the city. Then they had another nice train ride home.

As they were driving into their farm yard Bob said, "Oh, it seems good to breath this nice, fresh air and hear the birds sing again, and not be pushed and crowded around in a lot of clanging and banging."

"Pepper is glad to see us, too," remarked Betty. "Look at him stretch his neck over the fence."

As soon as the car stopped Betty and Bob jumped out and both ran to Pepper to give him some love pats.

"Oh, boy, we are glad to be back too," said Betty as she put her head against Pepper's neck.

"Do you see what I see?" questioned Bob, pointing out into the field.

"Oh, goody," said Betty. "The men cut the hay today. We can help stack it tomorrow."
