

Trip To Northwest Coast Is Enjoyed

By Mrs. O. R. Bowen
Conditions show a decided improvement in the Pacific northwest, noted Mrs. O. R. Bowen who arrived home Saturday after spending six weeks in Spokane and Portland. Prices are advancing in the northwest, this indicating greater prosperity. Many people have new cars and all seem to be enjoying life.

Though the climate on the coast is more mild than here, Paul Bowen reports this the coldest winter of the five he has spent in Spokane. On one bright Sunday Mrs. Bowen and the Paul Bowen family drove to beautiful Lake Wenatchee for dinner. Much of the time the weather was cloudy and slightly chilly in Washington. Snow fell several times but melted soon.

Mrs. Bowen spent two and a half weeks with Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bowen and son, Paul Wesley, at Spokane and enjoyed the holidays with them. Mrs. Bowen was honored at a number of teas, luncheons and dinners in Spokane, finding true western hospitality everywhere. Mrs. Bowen enjoyed hearing Judge Levy talk to Federated women's clubs on the Townsend old age pension plan, the speaker giving both sides of the question.

Mrs. Bowen went to Portland, Ore., to spend two weeks with her sister, Mrs. F. O. Miller. She was honored at Portland at a number of social affairs. She heard Major Hammond, government official in the Philippines until the islands established their new government, speak on the islands, the people and their government. Mrs. Bowen and her sister spent two days at Seaside and the former had her first experience of seeing an ocean storm, the one in which a ship sank off the coast near Astoria. Mrs. Bowen saw "Midsummer's Night's Dream," one of the finest motion pictures of the season.

Mrs. Bowen went back to Spokane from Portland and remained several days longer with Paul Bowen's family. She reports there well and enjoying the northwest. The trip both ways by train was most enjoyable, Mrs. Bowen found Prof. Bowen met Mrs. Bowen in Fremont Friday and the two went to Lincoln that day to stay with the J. Knox Jones family until Saturday when they returned to Wayne.

Seed Corn Tests Show Better Yield In Smoother Ears

Test for seed corn conducted over a period of years by research laboratories show that long slender ears with horny kernels of medium depth outyield the large rough, soft starch, and somewhat deeper kerneled type. In 200 comparisons of rough and smooth types of seed corn, the smoother types have outyielded the rougher ear types from 10 to 15 per cent.

Smooth and some what more slender seed ears produce plants which are less leafy, earlier ripening, and less inclined to be barren. Strains of the smooth type also produce better stands and are of higher quality than later larger-eared, rough kernel type.

Seed ears with bright luster and good weight are preferred. Luster suggests good maturity, high germination and adaptation. Weight also suggests the above with hard starch composition of the kernels. The shanks of the seed ears should be sufficient size to support the ear under normal conditions. Farmers who use corn picking machines are interested in strong shank corn to reduce the percentage of corn on the ground at husking time.

High shelling per cent for seed ears does not indicate high yield per acre. Deep kerneled ears often have soft starch kernels. There is a common opinion that corn grown in the same locality for a number of years tends to run out but tests fail to indicate that this is true. Properly selected seed corn should tend to improve for its locality. It is not advisable to plant seed corn shipped in from a considerable distance without first growing it on a small scale to determine its adaptability to local conditions. Seed corn may be brought in more safely from the north and west than from the south. In eastern Nebraska, because of low altitude, corn may be brought in from the same latitude to the east with little likelihood of serious inadaptation.

Farm Credit Policy Told By Supervisor

Lincoln, Nebraska—Pointing to a fundamental change in agricultural credit policy, L. A. White, state director of the Resettlement administration said today, loans are being extended to hundreds of impoverished farm families in an effort to enable them to become self-supporting. The plan under which the resettlement administration operates calls for approved farm and home management budgets worked out by the local supervisor or in cooperation with the local county agent. In this way every possible method of making the farm pay and operating the home economically is outlined.

"At the same time the recipient of the loan is given the benefit of the farming knowledge of people thoroughly familiar with agricultural conditions in his own county," said State Director L. A. White. "The county supervisor confers with the farmer applicant on proper cultivation methods and at the same time the housewife is given every assistance in the home making budget. In this way they get both a loan and expert assistance."

Those eligible, the state director said, are farm owners, farm tenants, farm laborers, share croppers or persons who, when last employed, obtained the major portion of their income from farming operations. They must be the heads of destitute or low income farm families who are unable to obtain credit at reasonable terms from other federal or private credit agencies.

Field Selected Corn.

Selecting seed corn in the field previous to a hard freeze has advantages in addition to the assurance of securing seed of good germination. It is possible to select ears from strong, sturdy, sucker-free stalks and at the desired height. Low eared stalks tend to be earlier in maturity than high-eared stalks. The husk covering of the ear can also be observed.

Freezing injury to the seed depends upon moisture content, minimum degree of temperature, and duration of exposure to cold. Seed corn with less than 15 per cent moisture will stand any normal low temperature. At time of ripening, ear corn contains from 40 to 50 per cent moisture and is easily injured. Corn containing over 20 per cent moisture is likely to be injured by moderate freezing temperatures, and entirely killed in case of severe freezing. The longer the exposure to cold, the lower the temperature, and the higher the moisture content, the greater the injury to germination is likely to be. Ears selected for seed should be stored in a dry, well-ventilated place and hung or laid in such a way that they will dry out quickly. Racks or hangers may be used depending on the place the seed corn is stored.

Make Germination Tests.

It is always a good plan to make a germination test of seed corn before planting. If 85 per cent or more of the kernels show strong germination, the seed is usually considered satisfactory for planting. In Nebraska corn ordinarily matures well before cold weather; in some years the state has unusually early cold weather and in that case it is advisable to make a germination test of each individual ear of seed corn. The germination can be improved by discarding all ears which show discolored germs. The rag-doll tester is a cheap, quick and efficient method of testing. By marking off and numbering squares on the cloth this type of tester may be used for individual ear testing. Racks which hold the ears in systematic order while they are being tested assist in quickly locating the ears after the test is completed.

Hybrid Corn Improved.

It has been pointed out that the corn grower can often improve his corn by selecting seed from the field. However, due to cross-pollination, certain characteristics, such as lodging disease susceptibility and barrenness, can not be eliminated entirely by the most careful field selection. Corn breeders, by a system of inbreeding corn for a period of six or more years, until so-called self-fertilized lines or inbreds are secured, are able to eliminate many of the characteristics which retard yield. Corn is inbred by covering the shoots and tassels with paper bags and later hand-pollinating the silks with the pollen from the same plant. Plants produced from inbred lines are usually reduced in vigor, size and yield. After corn has been inbred for a series of years, the plants from each resultant, self-fertilized line become uniform in their inheritance and characteristics. Certain inbred lines which show undesirable characteristics are discarded. The most desirable inbreds are chosen for crossing with each other to produce hybrids, some of which are likely to prove superior to the original variety.

The superiority of the hybrid has been proved only through actual trial in the field. A combination of two inbreds is known as a single cross. Commercial hybrid seed is commonly double crossed seed. Good hybrids, in addition to making a higher yield also may be expected to have a more uniform height of ear, to produce fewer suckers and barren stalks and to lodge less than ordinary varieties.

For Hybrid Seed Corn.

It is expected that farmers will develop hybrids for production of hybrid seed corn. The average increased yield that favorably situated eastern Nebraska farmers may reasonably expect to get from good hybrid seed suited to the locality is about 8 bushels per acre where an ordinary variety produces from 40 to 50 bushels to the acre.

Corn grown from hybrid seed by ordinary field pollination should not be used for planting irregardless of how fine it may look, as its yielding ability will be greatly below that of the original hybrid seed and probably even below that of an ordinary good variety. It is necessary to produce the hybrid seed each year by controlled crossing or else use old seed.

Severe Loss Dealt To Losses Of Corn

Efforts to overcome severe losses dealt to crop improvement during the past two unfavorable crop years are to be doubled this year.

The Nebraska Crop Growers' association announced this week.

Agricultural Agent Walter L. Molier received word of the plans from P. H. Stewart, extension agronomist at the Nebraska college of agriculture and secretary of the crop grower. Certification of small grains and other crops will be carried on in an effort to keep varieties pure and hold gains already made by experimental means.

"The drought caused the shipment of more than 750,000 bushels of spring grain into Nebraska last year," Stewart said. "Some of this was not pure and presented a serious problem to growers. In view of this situation, crop certification is more important than ever before if losses of the past two years are to be wiped off the books."

Testing Campaign To Meet Seed Needs

Nebraska's state-wide seed corn testing campaign, designed to alleviate the serious seed problem facing thousands of farmers in many sections, is under way.

County agricultural agents, farm instructors, vocational agriculture instructors, bankers, civic organizations, the state department of agriculture, and the National Youth administration are cooperating in the movement.

County agricultural agents in the northeastern counties this week completed plans for setting up seed testing stations and will supervise the work done by NYA labor. Similar stations will be set up as rapidly as possible in all other Nebraska counties. Farmers are being urged to bring in their seed for germination tests.

M. K. Young who is directing the state campaign for NYA in cooperation with the Nebraska Agricultural College extension service reported early this week that the seed situation in northeastern Nebraska is rather spottled. Wayne county has some good seed corn.

The smooth type of corn is germinating much better, however, than the rough type. The former matured more rapidly last fall in most communities and is regarded as better seed. Demonstrations are being put up in offices of county agricultural agents showing the difference between the two types.
