ANSWERING the popular query, "Congress or the Supreme Court—Which Shall Rule America?" is answered by the Nation's Business with one word, "Neither."

The people rule. They elect a man to Congress. He is an agent. The people set forth clearly by their constitution just what the agent can do in their name.

The people have arranged to have their agent's activities checked up to make sure he has not exceeded his authority.

"Careful," the Supreme Court says to him, "your principal has not given you that power."

"Oh," says the Congressional agent, "you deny me the right to do something for my principal?"

"He anticipated that situation," is the reply. "He arranged an orderly method for you to go back to him and ask for this additional power."

"But, see, your nine men are divided." "Good," is the answer. "We know nothing better than majority rule in Anglo-Saxon affairs."

"Well, then, give us, your agents, a better break. Arrange it so we are right if more than two of your judges vote for us."

"No," the people should answer. "You are dealing with something very dear to us—rights, Personal Liberty, Freedom. Rights obtained through a 500-year struggle with rulers like yourselves."

School and CHURCHES have their rightful field and plenty to do in filling it—in trying to inculcate spiritual truths—without endeavoring to exercise denominational preference in electing school board members or in naming persons for teaching positions.

David Lawrence, Washington newspaper correspondent, reports a bill that passed the United States senate without debate, threatening the constitutional guarantee of free speech on the part of employees in talking to employers.

S. Toledo Sherry of South Sioux City, has saved the race for the democratic congressional nomination in this district from limping along without competition by filing against John Havekost of Hooper.

The American people have made mistakes, but they are not slow in correcting them in the light of experience and fully revealed facts, and we believe they have sensed the errors of Washington bureaucracy deeply enough to swing popular decision the other way as soon as they are given an opportunity to express themselves.

The Norfolk Daily News suggests that the war department's acceptance of blame for the arbitrary dismissal of General Johnson Hagood in the hope of drawing criticism away from the president is extremely thin.

An explanation of the talk about a reduction of a billion dollars in federal expenditures is that in figuring over proposed billion-dollar borrowings, announcement was made of an extra curtailed billion which was never intended to be included.

Some fatal and other serious accidents have happened at the narrow bridge on the highway north of town, and we wonder just how great must be the death toll before the bridge will be widened and made safe for travel.

Six million farmers will employ at least six million men under normal conditions—a big help in unemployment problems.

After reading the following, taken from a Kentucky newspaper and reproduced in the Nebraska Farmer, Sam McKelvie, publisher, says he traded his mule colt to a neighbor:

"Over the hill trailed a man behind a mule drawing a Dixie plow. The clodhopper was 'broadcasting.' Said the man to the mule:

"Bill, you are a mule, the son of a jackass, and I am a man, made in the image of God, here we work, hitched up together, year in and year out. I often wonder if you work for me or I work for you. Verily, I think this is a partnership between a mule and a fool, for surely I work as hard as you, if not harder. Plowing or cultivating, we cover the same distance—but you do it on four legs and I on two. I, therefore, mathematically speaking, do twice as much work per leg as you do.

"Soon we'll be preparing for a corn crop. When the crop is harvested, I give one-third to the landlord for being so kind as to let me use this small speck of God's universe. One-third goes to you, and the balance is mine. You consume all of your portion with the exception of a few cobs, while I divide my third among seven children, a dozen hens, two ducks, and a banker. If we both need shoes, you get 'em, Bill; you are getting the best of me and I ask you: Is it fair for a mule, the son of a jackass, to swindle a man, the lord of creation, out of his substance? And come to think of it you merely help plow and cultivate the ground, while I alone must cut, shock and husk the corn while you look over the pasture fence and 'hee-haw' at me.

"All fall and most of the winter the whole family, from Granny to the baby, work from morning to night to help raise money to pay taxes and buy you a new set of harness and pay the interest on the mortgage on you. And, by the way, what do you care about the mortgage? Not a damn! You ornery cuss, I even have to do the worrying about the mortgage on your tough, ungrateful hide!

"About the only time I am your better is on election day, for I can vote, and you can't. And after election I realize that I was fully as great a jackass as your papa. Verily, I am prone to wonder if politics were made for men or jackasses—or to make jackasses out of men.

NEBRASKA. Nebraska was admitted to the union of states sixty-two years ago. It seems an act of admission passed congress in 1868, with it failed to receive the approval of President Andrew Jackson, and so the matter was held up until March 1, 1867, when the executive's veto was overridden and Nebraska joined the galaxy of states.

No More Wars, No More Bonus

The following, written by Mrs. C. A. Orr, department legislative chairman, appeared in the February 27 issue of the Nebraska Legionnaire:

The bonus fight has ended with the enactment into law of the Adjusted Service Compensation to World War veterans on January 27, 1936, bringing to a close the American legislative fight of the

Another fight looms—the fight to write into law a Universal Service Act, to enact honest neutrality laws and to maintain an adequate national defense.

If all the material resources of America and all the man-power of America are made available to the nation's defense in time of war, with special privilege and profit for none; when dollars and men fight on an equal basis at the military front, in the service of supply and on the economic front at home; when soldier and his brothers at home have equally borne the burden and sacrifice of war, then there will be no more bonuses.

Let us ask of the congress adequate defense on land, in the air and at sea. Let us give the nation neutrality laws shaped from the experience of the past, and there will be no more bonuses. Quite likely, so far as America is concerned, there will be no more wars.

The St. Louis convention provided by mandate that the fourth point of the 4-Point program be reaffirmed. That is "that in no event shall widows or dependent children of deceased World War veterans be without government protection."

The National Executive committee placed this mandate in second place on the major legislative program. In presenting this particular matter to the President, Commander Murphy said, "Each year, since 1931, legislation has been presented to the congress to extend this most needed and essential protection to the widows and dependent children of World War veterans. Similar protection has been accorded to the widows and dependent children of veterans of every other war in which the United States has participated. To fail to enact this legislation, which is now again before congress, is to continue unjust discrimination against widows and dependent children of deceased World War veterans. It is an outstanding injustice to a defenseless group. We sincerely beseech your assistance in its correction."

In 1932 such a bill passed the House, providing $20 per month and $6 for each child, an estimated average yearly cost of $29,000,000. Last session a bill was presented to congress, the legislation to carry it into effect following the rates fixed for widows and orphans of Spanish War veterans, $15.00 per month for the widows, $5.00 for the first child and $3.00 for each additional child. It was estimated that this would cost approximately $27,000,000. No hearings have been had on this bill.

Again it must be emphasized that our Auxiliary legislative program is that of the American Legion, and ask that the units refuse to support legislation that is not on the Legion's program.

The national policy of the Auxiliary is formed by the national convention which always takes action identical with that of the Legion's national convention on legislative matters, thus giving them a joint program.

Christian Science Services.
"Man is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all Christian Science churches for Sunday, March 8. The Golden Text is from Psalms 119:65, 73; "Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O Lord, according unto thy word. Thy hands have made and fashioned me." A passage from the Bible in the lesson-sermon is from Isaiah 2:22; "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?" A correlative passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, reads: "Neither anatomy nor theology has ever described man as created by Spirit—as God's man. The former explains the men of men, or the 'children of men,' as created corporeally instead of spiritually and as emerging from its lowest, instead of the highest conception of being." (page 148)."

Omaha Journal - Stockman: "Corn and wheat are especially low in vitality this year on account of poor crop conditions last fall," reads a warning issued by a midwestern experiment station, and other grains are not beyond suspicion. Most if not all the agricultural states maintain seed testing laboratories where a few germination tests will be run for any citizen either free or for a very slight charge. Information regarding such tests is readily available from any state agricultural college or department of agriculture, and as a result there is almost no excuse for sowing seed that is low in germinating power. With snow as deep as at present, it may seem a little early to begin worrying whether seed will grow, but seed testing laboratories commonly become rushed with business toward spring. Should a test be delayed and the results turn out poor, the owner may be put to considerable inconvenience in obtaining a supply of good seed at the proper time. Seeds have a provoking habit of rising sharply in price at planting time particularly when there is a scarcity of desirable kinds, it may be remembered. Farmers may conduct their own tests if they care to go to the trouble, and in many cases that is the most satisfactory method of determining whether seed will grow. Sellers of seed should not forget that a statement of percentage of germination and weed seed content must accompany every package in order to comply with state laws, but these tests also may be run at home if done carefully. The Supreme Court upholds the Constitution strongly and almost weekly. -Lynchburg Advance.

Omaha Journal Stockman: For a decade or more the life of the farmer has not been particularly attractive but for that matter, few other lines of business and few of the professions have been satisfactory to those engaged in them. For this reason the young men starting out in life has found it rather difficult to decide on his life work. Today, in spite of many drawbacks, the farm carries a real appeal to an ambitious youth and in a recent address at the Wisconsin College of Agriculture, Dr. O. E. Baker of the United States Department of Agriculture, declared he would wish nothing better for his own boy than that he should become a farmer. Here are the reasons he advanced: 1. The farmer has more and better food to eat than have most city people, and in times of depression he is more certain of a livelihood—if he has not mortgaged the farm. 2. The farmer has better health than city men and lives longer—about five years longer, according to a recent study of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company. 3. The farmer accumulates more property than the average city person. This may not be true in the south. It is true in the north because of the millions of city people who have almost no property at all—except an automobile. Wealth in cities is probably four or five times more concentrated than in the rural territory. 4. The farmer is more likely to enjoy his work than most city people. Most city work is monotonous—operating a machine in a factory, tending a typewriter, standing behind a counter in a retail store hour after hour. 5. The farmer is more likely to rear a family and do his part to promote the welfare of the nation and the race. The family is becoming smaller and weaker in the cities. Only two-thirds enough children are now being born in our large cities to maintain their population permanently. The condition of living and the philosophy of life in the cities tend toward extinction. The rural philosophy of life, with its recognition of the family as the fundamental economic as well as social institution, tends toward survival. The urban philosophy of life is ephemeral; the rural philosophy of life is eternal—derived from the experience of the race down through the ages. There are many other and perhaps more important and convincing reasons why a boy might profitably adopt farming as his work in life but in these times of doubt and uncertainty it is questionable whether any other avocation can offer more substantial and lasting returns than agriculture. No boy, with any love for the soil or aptitude for rural life need have any hesitancy about taking up farming as his serious life's work. Encourage Soil Conservation. Omaha Journal-Stockman Every student of farming realizes the need of conserving our soil resources. There is a better understanding of its importance now than ever before. Not only that but the ways and means of holding the fertility of our agricultural areas are appreciated as never before by the farmers themselves. In fact, there seems to be no diversity of opinion on the subject. This furnishes no reason, however, for tying up soil conservation with a scheme to preserve and perpetuate many of the objectionable features of the AAA in its measure frankly intended to further the control of agriculture by bureaucrats. There is obvious need to hold onto our wealth of rich farm lands but the need for turning our agricultural operations over to a bureau in the national capital is very doubtful. "There is an abundant need to preserve and maintain soil fertility," admits the Kansas City Weekly Star. "In many instances the reduction in production of such crops as corn, wheat and cotton properly should be considered as an integral part of an erosion program. On lands where good farming practices have been established, erosion may be controlled without any change in methods of crop production. There might be even a greater total production on well managed farms. "But hitching the soil erosion plans up with the former objectives of the AAA would be an attempt to regulate production in a roundabout manner. It is the duty of congress to present a straight-forward plan that is sound in every particular, that conforms to the constitution and that will not cost more than its worth. "It must be assumed that any form of agricultural relief should terminate when conditions confronting the farmer become normal. If production control is associated officially with soil conservation, then the main object of maintaining the national wealth bound up in the soils would cease when the emergency which calls for farm relief had passed. "It must be assumed that farmers themselves will again work out a system of profitable farm operation without aid from the government, either by increasing their own efficiency, reducing production costs, changes in the kind of crops produced or removal of handicaps which place them in an unfair position in competing for a living."

of Nations lifts the embargo here. "Rebellious young army officers killed four Japanese "liberal" statesmen and about 80 others last Thursday in an effort to form a new government. The young military forces had gained control. President Roosevelt "disciplined" Major Gen. Johnson Hagood by removing him from duties for criticizing the New Deal. The general designated WFA funds as "stage money." The president was criticized for taking the general's right of "free speech" away. Wayne Is Winner Over Plainview

Local High School Players
Take Two Contests Here
Thursday Night.

With Ahern, Petersen and Penhollow hitting for 14, 12 and 12 points respectively, and the other boys tossing in a basket now and then, Wayne high had an easy time defeating the Plainview aggregation here last Thursday night. Score at the half was 22 to 7 in favor of Wayne.

The local boys showed the most aggressive form they have shown since the Pierce game early in the season.

The game started with a bang with Ahern's left handed flip, and from then on the outcome was never in doubt. However, high point of the evening seemed to be Carroll Petersen's nifty toss over the entire goal. Fred Gildersleeve had a big night, bagging nine points in the second team game and eight in the main fray.

HERESY AT SOURCE.

(Nation's Business)

Laymen who have timidly ventured the opinion that government by sociologists is government by theorists have an outspoken partisan in Professor Sorokin, head of Harvard's sociology department. It seems there is considerable doctrinaire clay in what so publicly passes for social "science." The professor has the floor:

"Sociologists, historians and the economists down in Washington are all in the same boat. We have not reached the stage where we can apply the teachings of the social sciences without doing much damage. The main problem is to increase our knowledge, not to prescribe what we are not sure of in the manner of an all-wise physician."

"Our total knowledge of society at present is far from sufficient to give a scientific prescription as to what should be done in a given field to alleviate social, political and economic misfortune. Many theories now regarded as knowledge are only shreds in the dark. We have no right to apply them on a large social scale or to urge others to do so."

"Rather than any sort of ruler who is a high-brow social scientist, I would rather have a man of plain common sense from the street. Not until the social scientist is sure that he has something pragmatic and helpful does he deserve his chance."

To paraphrase, all of the people know more than any of the people.

Miss Hilda Neihardt Tells Of Work of Famous Father

"The Song of the Messiah" is completed after 12 years of labor and Miss Hilda Neihardt, daughter of the author, John G. Neihardt, Nebraska's poet laureate, recalls the summers spent with her father, gathering material for the last cycle of four volumes, epics of the middle west.

The poet spent considerable time in the Black Hills country of South Dakota with members of his family, making friends with the Indians of the section, memorizing their folklore, their customs and tribal dances. Dr. Neihardt began collecting material for "The Song of the Messiah" in 1924. He knew many of the "old timers" of the Black Hills district and spent a great deal of time studying government records of early struggles and warfare in the Black Hills country.

The Neihardt family took camping equipment with them into the Black Hills and camped with the Indians near Manderson, S. D., not far from Pine Ridge. Their camp was close to a clear little stream. The Indians often talked with Dr. Neihardt near the camp site, although the poet found that he must know a great deal of the Indian lore before questioning the tribesmen as the red man of today is not so well versed in tribal customs as in days gone by. Miss Neihardt, Dr. Neihardt and another daughter, Miss Enid, often took long rides with the Indians of the camp.

When getting material for his writing, Dr. Neihardt frequently stores away bits of information in his own mind; at other times Miss Enid Neihardt, who acts as her father's private secretary, takes notes for him.

Indian tribes from which Dr. Neihardt collected information, included almost all those of the west well today—I've completed eight lines."

Dr. Neihardt never does more than eight or ten lines a day when he is working on his books; yet these lines are never gone over, or rewritten—they are perfect after four hours of work. While writing on "The Song of the Messiah" he was also writing a column a day for the St. Louis Post Dispatch. Since the completion of the last epic the poet has been working full time for this newspaper.

The Neihardt family has lived at Brandon, Mo., for several years, just at the edge of the beautiful little resort town in the Ozarks. Plans are now being made for the family to move to St. Louis. There are four children in the Neihardt family: Sigurd of Louisville, Ky.; Enid, who is her father's secretary; Hilda, student at the Wayne State Teachers College; Alice, the youngest, who is in school at home. Dr. and Mrs. Neihardt have one grandchild, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sigurd Neihardt.

Dr. Neihardt is planning a horseback trip through the Great Salt Lake Desert country this summer; he plans to take the trail over which Jed Smith traveled in the early days. The poet will be accompanied by a friend and although the journey is said to be impossible by horseback, the two will endeavor to cover Smith's trail as accurately as possible.

CONGRESS As Seen by a Nebraskan

While many of the backers of the Frazier-Lemke reforestation bill voted for the soil conservation act, they started openly that passage of a law designed for permanent recovery for agriculture than any other measure suggested. These representatives were active during the day endeavoring to get more signatures on the discharge petition which still remains at 207. Some of the house leaders say they can get ten more signatures removed from the petition if they get near a majority, and if they really want to. So, some of the Frazier-Lemke workers indicated that they will start another petition asking that the rules of the house be changed and reverted back to the old rule of last year when 145 signatures were needed to discharge a committee. It now requires 218 signatures.

Old timers tell the new members that they have never seen the time when major bills were being rushed through both houses as they are now. When the navy bill and the agriculture bill and the tax bills are out of the way they figure that both houses will be talking adjournment which they predict will come the latter part of April or the first part of May. President Everson of the National Farmers Union arrived in town and called on the Nebraska delegation. He says the Nebraska Union has now voted to reaffiliate with the National Union.

With the government renting about 118 buildings in this town, the real estate sharks are getting busy. One graft is for real estate men to lease buildings and then sublet them to the government. They say that they make plenty of money this way. Apparently these sharks have advance information as to just what buildings the government will be needing.

About one hundred sheriffs and chiefs of police are in town getting some free instruction on how to detect criminals, from Edgar Hoover and the "G" men. Many congressmen visit this department, now one of the most important in our land. While congressmen were there the other day, a telegram came from Canada with a fingerprint of a man who was captured in Canada following a crime. The congressmen followed this fingerprint through millions of files and in ten minutes the fingerprint was identified, matched and a full record of the criminal was telegraphed back. Another case came in at the same time containing a type-written letter and with aid of chemical experts which was matched, and the arrest of the man was made by telegraph while the congressmen were in the office. Automatic machines were used to hunt out certain fingerprints. It is no guesswork with Uncle Sam any more, and criminals have very little chance to beat the law. The department is cooperating with every city, county and state in our country and with the territories and law enforcement officers of other lands.

The cocoon oil industry and the oleomargarine people are starting a campaign in Washington for the repeal of the excise tax on imported cocoon oil, and also against legislation which was passed to increase the tax on oleomargarine. Full pages of advertisements are printed by the national association of margarine manufacturers. These advertisements contain a picture of the dome of the capitol and a picture of a small child with a piece of dry bread in his hands under which are the words, "Do I have to eat it dry, Mother?" And below that is the picture of a slice of bread with the words, "Don't tax the spread on people's bread." The inference is made from these gigantic advertisements that oleomargarine is healthy, and contains just as much food element as country butter.

The neutrality bill was passed without much opposition in the house although some tried to get some amendments in, only to be voted down. Many opposed the bill because it was put through by a gag rule. But many voted for it because they didn't want to be on record against neutrality.

Every congressman and senator has the privilege of having one copy of any government printed document bound. A visit to the government printing office would give the taxpayer just a little hint as to where his money goes and why the government printing office has to ask for huge appropriations. That office is always behind, especially in the bindery work, because all members have an unusual number of documents bound in beautiful book bindings. Orders that were given to the government printing office last November have not yet been completed.

Tourists are very much interested in the stories the guides in the capitol tell them about the paintings of the murals in the senate wing of this beautiful building. The guides tell them that these murals were painted by an Italian artist named Braumidi, who for many years was the artist in the Vatican in Rome. This artist was almost through with the murals in the senate wing, when he fell from his ladder, and was so badly injured that it was impossible for him to continue and complete his work. Some years later, these murals, which tell a story in themselves of the progress of these United States, were continued by another artist, and when you look up at these paintings, you can easily see the point where the Braumidi must have fallen and the point where this other artist took on the work. There is a very distinguishable difference in the work of these two men.

You may be interested to know that the appropriation bill calls for $879,743,905. It is a very interesting bill in that it shows how much money is needed to run the executive office and sundry independent offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937. The executive office will get $437,130. This includes the salary of the president which is $75,000 and the salary of the vice president which is $15,000. Other salaries in the office of the president include the three secretaries who get $9,500 each a year. There is also an item of $50,000 for stationery, telegrams, telephones, books for the library, furniture, carpets, automobiles, garage expense, labor and special service. There is also an item of $25,000 for traveling and official entertainment of the president. Another item of $143,000 for the cleaning, refurnishing, repainting, lighting, heating of the executive mansion. The executive mansion has to be overhauled frequently and when it is considered as many as 10,000 people go through the building in one day you realize the wear and tear on the floors and the necessity of those repairs.

During the Revolutionary period the Dawes family was one of the leading patriotic families in Boston. The most notable member at that time was Wm. "Young America Thinks"

Girls Of Wayne High School Offer Views On Varied List Of Subjects.

Does "Young America" think? How many adults have really taken the trouble to find out what goes on in the minds of the young people, who in a few short years will be called upon to take their places in the community and in the world? The Wayne Herald reporter was privileged to meet with a group of young women of the Wayne high school political science class and hear their quick and intelligent answers to a list of questions dealing with world affairs and community life.

"Is it possible to have world peace?" Ruth Judson's answer to this question was: "I think it is possible to have world peace only for a short time—it is human nature to like fighting, I don't believe any arrangement could be made which would be satisfactory to every country of the world."

Geraldine Gamble's idea was that at some future date it might be possible to have world peace, she suggests: "I believe we should make the study of peace a part of the school program beginning in the grades, rather than the study of war. It seems to me that wars are taught history are too glorified—there is too much heroism put into the accounts and children are too willing to believe that war is wonderful instead of horrible."

The subject was taken up by Zada Gifford who offered the following: "I don't believe it would be possible to have a war now involving just two countries; the nations of the world are too dependent on each other. Any war would have to involve other countries through trade treaties."

"A program for world peace couldn't succeed," Norma Jackson observed, "unless it were under one head—like the United States for instance."

Peace Kingdon, so named because of her birth date, November 11, 1918, commented: "I don't think it is possible to have world peace. There are too many countries in the world to agree on the same things."

The conversation went gradually from the discussion of peace to that there were very few unsightly spots and ramshackle buildings. The old idea that young men and women of high school age have no idea what they wish to do and to make their lives is wrong. These youngsters have worked out problems in their own minds and the answers are probably more sharply and clearly etched than they will be at any other time of their lives. Many will change—some through force of circumstances, and others through glimpses of broader and greener fields, but their paths will never lie quite so straight as in these few brief years of transition into adult life.

"I want to take up stenography and secretarial work," Mary Grone promptly answered, as the question was presented. "I like figures and I like all business courses."

Luella Meyer wants to be a nurse. She enjoys caring for the sick and making them comfortable. Geraldine Gamble has fixed her ambition high—her hope is to be a magazine illustrator, and a good one. Ruth Judson likes to write and enjoys variety so her hope for the future is journalism. Zada Gifford is torn between two desires—to be a director of physical education or to take up secretarial work.

Asked to suggest some one thing they would like, the girls settled on their school. Two wishes they would like added are home economics and some form of physical education for women. They believe that something should be done to awaken the people of the town to the school and its activities; they decided that Dr. Dienst, their superintendent, had done a great deal but that people of Wayne should cooperate and show more interest in the institution. One young lady declared that she believed parents should be persuaded to visit the high school more often. This was met by the remark: "Yes, but people of high school age feel conspicuous if their parent do visit school."

It is a refreshing experience to talk to a group of neatly attired, bright-looking girls. If you don't believe it—try it yourself, Mr. Wayne Citizen!

was confusion and uproar, owing to the diversity of opinions; some were for placing Edgar on the throne, but the clergy carried the determination of offering William the crown.

The romance begins: "It is in vain—it is in vain, my children! This unhappy kingdom is now experiencing the tender mercies of the conqueror; our liberties are trampled under foot, our religion insulted and despised; and our reverend prelates selected one by one for the slaughter. The speaker was a man of stately figure and Herculean proportions.

Volume two is a chronicle of the life of Richard the Second. "On the death of Edward, his grandson, Richard, was crowned without any opposition; though only 11 years of age." The story contained in the book is "The Spaniard's Ransom."

The third volume is on the life of Henry the Seventh, who during "the later years of his reign, being at peace with the world, spent the time in the indulgence of his favorite passion, avarice, and by exactions and imposts amassed immense riches. He died in 1509."

"The White Rose of England" is the historical romance of the book.

Another group of interesting volumes belonging to the J. Q. Owen family includes "The Poetical Works of John Gay" published in 1871 in Boston. John Gay was an English poet, born in 1688.

"The Shepherd of Bethlehem, King of Israel" was printed in New York City in 1863. In the first chapter the author writes as follows: "It is into one curious old house, with red tiled roof and gable-end, and pointed windows with diamond shaped panes, on the which the frost has traced pretty patterns of snow and trees that I will now take my reader." The book is one of a group written "for the young."

In the Owen library is the volume "Children's Trials of the Little Rope Dancer and Other Tales," translated from the German of Auguste Pindon by Trauer Mantel and republished in Boston in 1865. The dedication reads: "I see my Marianne's long lashes droop, and the color flush her cheek, when she finds her name in the beginning of this little book. May my Marianne be spared the trials and her life be as sunny and blessed as could be wished, even

As to the AAA. Albion News: David Lawrence makes a point in his United States Daily News when he suggests that he had the processing tax under the AAA been declared constitutional there would have been nothing to prevent the congress levying a processing tax on all manufactured articles, and ordering the proceeds turned over to the labor organizations to be paid out to laboring men in the form of benefits and higher wages.

Nebraska 4-H Champions

Cora Mae Briggs Seward County
Mollie Svoboda Saunders County
Rex Brown Fillmore County
Avera Jersperson Washington County

That Nebraska farm youths have an opportunity to accomplish a great deal in community activities and fit themselves for life is evidenced in the records of the four 4-H club champions for the past year, just announced by L. L. Friebie, state club leader at the Nebraska college of agriculture.

Cora Mae Briggs, Seward county; Mollie Svoboda, Saunders county; Rex Brown, Fillmore county; and Avera Jersperson, Washington county, are the 4-H champions.

As a reward for their outstanding records, the four will attend the national 4-H camp at Washington next June. There they will join similar youths from all states in the Union.

It is through 4-H work that Avera Jersperson of Blair has built up his own purebred live stock herd. For the past 7 years he has furnished neighbors in surrounding communities with purebred Hampshire stock. Today he has six purebred Guernsey cows and a herd of 60 head of purebred Hampshires developed from his 4-H work.

Rex Brown of Genoa, started his club work in 1929. In 1933 he was member of the state champion 4-H cropteam which later won the national championship. He was the high scoring individual in the latter contest.

Mollie Svoboda of Weston in Saunders county has done all of her own sewing for the past five years. She learned how through her 4-H work. Prize money won on exhibits went a great distance toward paying for her clothes.

Cora Mae Briggs of Seward probably has taken in more worth while community activities than any 4-H club member. In club work for 9 years, she belonged to 51 different clubs and served as local leader of 17 clubs. Her 4-H club projects have been valued at $4,383.32 in the 9 years.

After the Rails Are Abandoned.

Grain and Feed Review: Some eighteen months ago the Omaha Railroad abandoned its branch line from Sioux City, Iowa, to Wynot, Nebraska—a distance of about 49 miles. The line had been operated at a substantial loss for some time prior to its abandonment, and because of the proximity to Sioux City most of the business which it would normally have carried was diverted to trucks, when the petition for abandonment was presented to the Interstate Commission, that body granted a stay for one year to determine whether or not the people living in territory tri-

Owen Family Has Collection Of Old Interesting Books

There is something about an old book which intrigues the imagination and those who love books can readily understand how the collection of rare editions might grow into an obsession. Very few have the means to acquire rare books, yet all may enjoy editions of the last century, the quaint illustrations and stilted style of writing.

"The Romance of History" is a history of England in three volumes, owned by Mrs. J. Q. Owen of Wayne and printed in 1833 or 1834 years ago in London, England. There are 84 illustrations in the book made by T. Landseer. The first volume opens with a historical summary of the contents of the book, and a summary of the life of William the First.

CAUGHT IN THE WILD

SYNOPSIS

As Alan Garth, prospector, is preparing to leave for his mining claim in the Far North, a plane lands at the always emergency station. In it, Burton Ramill, millionaire mining magnate; his daughter, Lilith; and Vivian Huxby, pilot and mining engineer. Being him to be only an ignorant prospector, the men offer to make an air trip to Garth's claim, although they refer to his samples of platinum-bearing ore as nearly worthless. Lilith Ramill, product of the jazz age, plainly shows her contempt for Garth. Through Garth's guidance, the plane soon reaches the claim site. Huxby and Ramill, after making several tests, assure Garth his claim is nearly valueless, but to "encourage" young prospectors they are willing to take a chance in investing a small amount. Sensing that Garth secretly removes a part from the plane's motor, Huxby and Lilith taunt Garth with his "equality," but their tone changes when they try to start the crippled plane. Returning to show they try to force Garth to give up the mining part, Garth sets the monoplane adrift and the current carries it over the falls. He points out to them in their hope in guarding them out of the wilderness. Garth begins preparing for the long journey. He insists that the others help. Ramill and his daughter must be hardened for the hardships ahead in their toilsome trek to the outpost on the Mackenzie. Garth finds the party has been saving for emergencies. He makes no objection, simply pointing out that he is accustomed to a strict meat diet, and that they are burning only themselves. The work of getting ready for the trip continues. Huxby refuses to help, and works on the mining claim. The long journey begins. A climb up the glacier brings them over the summit.

Angeralls. The dimmed glitter of the diamond in her engagement ring failed to hold her gaze. It passed on down to her foxskin leggings and moosehide moccasins.

"Squaw," she murmured. "Dirty squaw! He certainly has put you through the mill. And more to come! We're not out of the woods. Dad, do you still have Vivian's pistol?"

"Why, no. He asked me for it this morning. Said that the less weight I carried, the better for me."

She reached down a hand to help him to his feet.

"Listen, Dad. No matter how much we hate Alan Garth, we'll never get out of the muskies without him. Haven't you noticed Vivian's eyes? You must ask him to give you back the pistol."

"But—his! And to rasp his self-esteem with such an intimation of distrust—"

"What's more important—his feelings or Alan's guidance—if anything happens to Alan—Make some excuse."

Mr. Ramill got to his feet and limped beside her down to the stream bank. Huxby stood with his morose gaze fixed upon Garth, who was tying yellow ribs on the gunwale of his canoe frame with rawhide thongs.

The millionaire spoke in a casual tone: "How long will it take to put on the birch bark?"

"We'll use the moose hides, sir. They weigh more but will be much safer. You might ask Huxby to chop down a birch and cut it into five-foot lengths. We'll have to split the wood to make paddles."

"So?" Mr. Ramill turned to his prospective son-in-law. "You may as well return the pistol to me, Vivian. It will hamper your chopping, and as we're now to be in a canoe, its weight will not bother me."

Huxby sat motionless, taken aback. Before he could think of an excuse to refuse, he met Garth's coolly inquiring gaze. He turned away and drew the pistol from inside his tattered coat, and handed it to Ramill.

Another day saw the canoe complete. The cow and bull hides, gunned and sewn together, formed the cover. Half side in. The result was a craft large enough for the party but shorter and broader than the average canoe.

At Garth's suggestion, Lilith had begun tanning the calfskin. Ramill sent the moosehide. After cutting the birch billets, Huxby had at last sat around brooding. Then Another day saw the canoe complete. The cow and bull hides, gunned and sewn together, formed the cover. Half side in. The result was a craft large enough for the party but shorter and broader than the average canoe.

At Garth's suggestion, Lilith had begun tanning the calfskin. Ramill sent the moosehide. After cutting the birch billets, Huxby had at last sat around brooding. Then suddenly he went off up the brook. He did not come back until after the canoe was finished. But he brought the abandoned blanket.

Garth was beginning to shape into paddles the slabs of wood that he had hived from the birch billets. He glanced from the blanket to the clouds overhead, and from them to Lilith's tattered skirt.

"Not half bad, Huxby. That blanket will soon be needed. Too splendid to a surprise this morning. We're in for a storm. Miss Ramill, that calfskin is cured enough for you to wear. Make a skirt of it."

"How about Vivian's shoes?" she asked. "He's walking on his pup-"

"It's welcome to my old moccasins. They may last out our portage."

Though Huxby's ears reddened, he accepted the castoff footgear of the man from whom he had sought to blot a claim worth at least a million dollars.

When Garth launched the canoe, he fastened it to the bank with a line made from the trimmings of the moose hides. For anchor he used the wolfskin knapsack with its weight of platinum alloy.

"May as well make it useful," he met Huxby's look of moody protest. "You are to have the bow seat, and so can continue to guard my 60 per cent. along with—"

A clap of thunder and the swish of a wind gust through the birch tops checked Garth's thought. He spoke a quick order: "Lean to the blanket on that knoll between the trees, front this way."

A glance at the onrushing black clouds of the thunderstorm sent even Huxby hurrying to help the others. While they tied the upper corners of the blanket with rawhide thongs and weighted the back edge with logs, Garth pulled the canoe ashore and placed it bottom up over the smoke racks.

When, three hours later, the crashing thunderstorm passed over and the heavy downpour of rain ceased, all the party were wet from the drip through the blanket. But the fire still smoldered and the half-smoked meat was dry under the canoe.

"Had you been used to canoeing," Garth said, "you need not have lost all this time. But you'll get enough drenchings later on. Wring out the blanket and fetch the meat."

He launched the canoe again, unaided, and directed the others to their places. All had to kneel, facing the narrower prow of the double-stemmed craft. First came Huxby, with his wolfskin treasure bag for knee-pad. Lilith knelt on the front part of the lengthwise folded blanket. Her father had the bow of the blanket behind her. At the wobble of the unsteady craft, he squatted back on his heels and clutched the gunwales.

The others held to willow branches while Garth loaded in the meat behind his own place. He stepped aboard and began to paddle with a steady stroke that sent the canoe gliding out into the swamp stream.

A paddle lay beside each of the others. Lilith was first to dip hers overboard. At a murmured word from her, Huxby followed suit. Both of them had done a bit of amateur canoeing at the fashionable beaches. They were able to start in at once and help a little. But two days passed before Mr. Ramill gained enough balance and assurance to rise on his knees and try stroking his paddle.

Even after this, Garth had to bear the brunt of the heavy work. Much of the time the others were forced to stop off, to get the cramped out of their knees or rest their arms.

Had work been the only consideration, he would soon have done it all. There were, however, reasons for mere speed that he could make alone with the heavily loaded skin-covered craft. The summer was now far along. The days were rapidly shortening, the nights becoming colder and darker.

LIVESTOCK SITUATION

"It's a long road that has no turning." The livestock market may get better or worse, but it never goes indefinitely in one direction.

The blizzard period has disorganized business and delayed transport causing violent fluctuations. There seems to be considerable uneasiness concerning developments in the last sixty days. We urge holding of all unfinished stock where it is possible. Panicky runs play into the packer's hands.

How long have you been kept away from God's house and its services by weather, bad roads or sickness? Does your heart respond to the psalmist's declaration, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go up to the house of the Lord?"
Minot J. Savage said, "Our to-days make our tomorrows, and our present lives determine the grade on which we enter my next life." And listen to the wise words of John Ruskin: "If you do not wish for Christ's kingdom, don't pray for it. But if you do, you must do more than pray for it, you must work for it."
How glad we will be when weather and roads are such that our long absent people will be in their places in church and Sunday school. We will be looking for you.
Next Sunday will be missionary Sunday in the Sunday school. We had no missionary day in February, so we urge all whose birthdays were in February or March Startling aliveness of once-stubborn motor indicates Red Crown!

Either Standard's new fast-starting gasoline is in that car or Warner (Charlie Chan) Oland is no detective. Anyway, he and Maxine Reiner, his leading lady in 20th Century-Fox' new mystery, "Charlie Chan at the Circus," didn't have to wait long for things to happen when she pressed the starter.

THIS NEW Winter Standard Red Crown does start cold motors with alarm-clock suddenness — as thousands of motorists so pleasantly learned during the last sub-zero spell. You don't have to be a Charlie Chan to detect the difference. That motor of yours will show you!

With the first snap of the spark Standard Red Crown dashes into action, zero weather or no.

What's more, it stays in action, warms up a zero-cold engine fully 35% quicker. That means a very neat and noticeable saving in choke-wasted gasoline, and welcome balm to your pocketbook.

Those are the clues that will solve your winter starting problems. Follow them up — take on a tankful of Standard Red Crown and SEE WHAT HAPPENS next time you step on the starter.

FAIRY AND THE CHICKENS

(By CORAL STODDARD)

This is not a story about a fairy with a cloak of gray who appears suddenly to help someone in trouble. It is not a story about a gauzy-winged, white-robed fairy touching people and things with her magic wand. It is instead a true story about a tiger-striped pet cat named Fairy.

When Fairy first came to live with the Coles family, she was just a nice kitten, playful and friendly. She was quick and graceful but not especially like a fairy, so there must have been some other reason for giving her such an odd name.

When Fairy grew to be a cat, she became the mother of a family of little kittens that did not live. One could not see that she grieved for her lost babies, but it must have been true that she did. Not many weeks after the kittens died, Fairy began to spend a great deal of time with some young chickens in the back yard. They seemed to take the place of the kittens.

The chickens had their own hen-mother who did not like cats in the least. She pecked furiously at Fairy through the slats of the coop in which she had to stay while the chickens ran about. How could she know that Fairy was a friend, not an enemy, to her baby chickens?

In time the old hen became tired of looking after such big things as her chickens grew to be. She clucked with joy when she was taken from the coop and put back into her old home with the other hens in the chicken yard. Now that there was no longer danger from the sharp beak of the watchful old hen, Fairy spent almost all of every day with the chickens until they grew so large and so bothersome that they, too, had to be put with the rest of the flock.

Mrs. Coles had been away during the time that Fairy was mothering the chickens and by the next spring had forgotten that she had ever been told about it. She decided to try raising a few incubator hatched chickens without using hens to take care of them. The coop was not quite ready for the tiny chicks when they arrived, and for a short time they were kept in the house in a large wooden box placed on the floor near a heat register.

Always during the daytime Fairy was allowed to come into the house whenever she pleased, but now Mrs. Coles said, "I've never seen Fairy act snooty about chickens, but I don't quite trust any cat around baby chicks. If Fairy ever caught and ate a little chicken, we could never break her of the habit. I'd hate to have to do it to keep her out of the house while these chickens are around."

At noon Fairy was called and called her to dinner. No Fairy came. "I can't imagine where she can be," said Mrs. Coles. "She's been meowing around the door all morning." Fairy had been very annoying about trying to get in every time the door opened. "Well," said Mrs. Coles when it became certain it was a waste of time to call any more, "she'll probably be here soon. I'll just leave the food in her dish."

A few minutes later Mrs. Coles went to see whether the little chickens were covered and warm. At the first glance she started back in astonishment. "For land sake!" she exclaimed. Angriily she reached down into the box, saying, "I'll teach you, you nasty—" but almost

AN UNUSUAL VISITOR.

By Edgar A. Guest

He dropped into my office with a grin upon his face,
He talked about the weather and the college football race;
He asked about the family and he told me the latest joke,
But he never mentioned anyone who'd suddenly gone broke.

He talked of books and pictures and the play he'd been to see,
A clever quip his boy had made he passed along to me;
He praised the suit of clothes I wore and asked me what it cost,
But he never said a word about the money he had lost.

He was with me twenty minutes, chuckling gaily while he stayed,
O'er the memory of some silly little blunder he had made;
He reminded me that tulips must be planted in the fall,
But calamity and tragedy he mentioned not at all.

I thought it rather curious when he had come and gone,
He must have had some tales of woe, but he didn't pass them on.
For nowadays it seems to me that every man I meet
Has something new in misery and moaning to repeat.

And so I write these lines for him who had his share of woe,
But still could talk of other things and let his troubles go;
I was happier for his visit. In this world that's sick with doubt,
'Twas good to meet a man who wasn't spreading gloom about.

Educators Home From Convention

Wayne School Men Attend Meeting Held Recently At St. Louis, Mo.

Dr. J. T. Anderson, Prof. O. R. Bowen, Dean H. H. Hahn, Miss Arlie Sutherland and Miss Enid Conklyn of the Wayne State Teachers College, and Dr. Chas. F. Dienst, superintendent of the Wayne high school, were in attendance at the National Education Association convention in St. Louis, Mo., the past week. The convention was divided into two major sections, the American Association of Teachers Colleges and the Department of Superintendence. Under each of these two heads were departments covering all phases of work in colleges and secondary schools.

Meetings of the American Association of Teachers Colleges were held February 21 and 22. Sessions for the Department of Superintendence began Sunday, February 23, and continued until last Thursday.

Educators present at the St. Louis convention numbered 10,000. There seemed to be a more than ordinary amount of enthusiasm and interest in discussion of educational problems, according to Dr. Anderson. The solving of economic and social problems played a large part in all meetings.

"One of the difficulties arose over the question of academic freedom," Mr. Anderson stated. "Certain radical leaders have taken exception to the requirement on the part of certain states in demanding that teachers take the oath of allegiance to the United States." The feeling is not so much against taking of the oath itself, but people of the teaching profession feel that they are being singled out as a particular group and that their loyalty is being questioned. They feel that the same procedure should be required in other professions, not confined to the teachers alone if the oath is to accomplish the purpose for which it is intended.

There was a noticeable trend in convention meetings to shift from an emphasis of ideals and character traits to a consideration of social and economic justice, Dr. Anderson observed. The keynote of most of the discussions seemed to be some phase of democracy—each speaker used democracy to gain his point regardless of his political inclination. Teachers of the nation seem to be taking more interest in politics and demand a knowledge of their candidate's position on problems of education. The convention featured many outstanding speakers. Dr. Anderson noted that republicans, dem-crats and socialists were speakers and those in attendance gained a wide knowledge of the separate views on questions of the day.

An interesting entertainment feature was a broadcast from St. Louis radio station Sunday evening, February 23, made by 600 negro students of a city school. Educators watched the stars performing for the evening program, a new experience for many. Several radio stars had flown from New York City that day to appear on the convention entertainment program broadcast over the Columbia network.
