THANKSGIVING. Can we imagine the inhos-pitable conditions found by the Pilgrims when they started at Plymouth, Mass, in 1680? They beheld nature in the raw-for-ests everywhere-land to clear -savages to contend with. The prospect was anything but in-viting, But they had escaped the religious intolerance of the old world, and when they had over-come a measure of numerous handicaps, they were ready to rejoice and offer thanks. In time, a day each year, following the aulumn harvest, was set aside for asknowledgment of blessings. In a strange länd, handicapped by lack of con-veniences, the Pilgrims made progress slowly, but they were content with meagre rewards and profoundly grateful for as-surances of freedom. It is a most unfortunate chapter in col-THANKSGIVING. and profoundly grateful for as-surances of freedom. It is a most unfortunate chapter in col-onial history that reveals prac-tice of tyrannies — notably witchcraft outrages—which the settlers had left Europe to avoid. They showed the often evident human weakness to im-pose injustices and even cruei-tus if in accord with a narrow view. With marvels of material development, the world still lags in the direction of the rather advanced altruism of lags in the direction of the rather advanced altruism of conceding equal rights to the other fellow.
