A Job Well Done. Omaha Journal - Stockman: Speaking of flood heroes, speak a word of credit in passing, for the news reporters, the photographers, and the radio announcers who are making possible the graphic, up-to-the-minute stories and pictures which the rest of the country is reading so avidly these days. In the majority of cases, these newsmen have left comparative safety and comfort in other sections to risk their lives in obtaining the eye-witness accounts of the flood disaster which they are giving their readers and listeners. Like any workers left in the terror-stricken area from which most of the resident populations have been evacuated, they are taking their chances every hour of the day with accident and disease. Many of them, no doubt, already have succumbed to one or the other, only to have their places quietly taken by fresh recruits. As on the stage, the show must go on in newspaper offices and broadcast studios, and the newsmen, who furnish the gist for both, are not given to recounting their own hardships and casualties. No, the press boys who are there walking the quaking, wave-lapped levees, riding the swollen flood waters in flimsy boats, working day-and-night shifts if necessary, aren't asking any particular recognition for their efforts. It's all in a day's work with them. But they deserve a cheering word of appreciation just the same. They are doing their job well.

Death and Destruction Result In Historical Flood at Johnstown

With radio broadcasts and newspaper reports of the recent floods in the eastern states, one still cannot visualize the horrors and distress wrought by the torrential waters. Even to a Wayne resident who had the experience of being in the Johnstown flood in Pennsylvania, it is hard to imagine the depth of the water and the destruction caused by it.

Johnstown, recalls Dr. T. T. Jones, who was in the flood of 1889, is a city built like Pittsburgh and is situated between Stoney Creek and the Conemaugh rivers. The city proper is on one side of the river and three large hills surround it. On that May afternoon in '89 the city was already partially under water before the dam broke, and many people had moved to the hills. The dam was situated off the Conemaugh river and the territory around was used as a temporary resort. The dam was full of water and a cloudburst in the mountains caused the dam to overflow and burst, throwing water in the air as high as 20 feet.

At the junction of the two rivers was a stone arch bridge which did not give away at the time of the flood and many buildings lodged against it. Later, however, a fire of unknown origin destroyed all of the buildings and debris which had gathered there.

It was known to Johnstown residents that the dam was weak and people were to be warned of the break by the blowing of a factory whistle, so they could get to the hills. When the whistle was blown the first time, however, the dam had not yet broken, and it was believed to have been a hoax. The second time they did not heed the whistle and the third time when the dam was really broken no attention was paid to it and no one fled. A man on horseback rode through the town shouting, "To the hills, the dam's broke" and many people heard the roar of the water but it was too late for them to get to the hills before the town was flooded. Three thousand persons were drowned.

Money was raised for the refugees by public subscription as there was no Red Cross to take care of them at that time. First supplies were received from Philadelphia by the Pennsylvania railroad company. National Guards took complete charge of the situation and established canteens for the homeless. "For three days we had no water for drinking," remarked the doctor. The supplies of the people who had moved to the hills were soon gone, but when food was sent in everyone was too excited to eat, he continued.

"To one who has never seen or experienced a flood, he cannot realize the horrors of it," commented the doctor. "People screaming whistles blowing, water roaring—the noise was more terrific than the noise of a New York New Year's eve celebration."

The horror of seeing people

CONGRESS AS SEEN BY KARL STEFAN

The finest word that we have had since coming to Washington came this week when the Heston-temple Administration announced that the limitations on livestock feed loans from it were being extended from 12 to 18 units. This office has been fighting for an increase since January 3 and we sincerely hope that the extension granted will prove of great benefit to farmers in the Third district.

Your representative along with others of the Farm Group is having to fight to convince Washington authorities that there is no prosperity in the farm belt, that conditions there are desperate and that government assistance should be granted now.

Inauguration Sidelights.

Mrs. Woodrow Wilson spoke to the Third district member. The wife of the war president left her chair in the President's box several times to go inside the capitol building to get warm.

The Third district member stood only a few feet from John Roosevelt near the president's platform during the inauguration. The Third district umbrella protected the silk hat of Charles West, the president's go-between. He keeps in contact with house members and keeps his chief informed. He will have as his assistant James Roosevelt, according to present plans. John Roosevelt, a tall young man about twenty, stood directly in front of a Pennsylvania member. "Say, John," this member called, "move over a little, I can't see your dad, and you see plenty of him, don't you?"

Several newspapermen who sat in the open press box across from the president most of the day were drenched to the skin and changed clothes twice. Some of these news hounds attended the president's conference and have a lot of "inside dope." Their story is that the president was "all against the open door inauguration." He wanted to take his oath "inside" and hold the big inauguration next summer, but the merchants here wanted the business now and so they got their say. But they didn't make the money they expected.

The rain held the crowd down and hundreds of people who came in on trains stayed in the Union Station and went back home again without leaving the station. The rain, just before the president started speaking, was of cloud burst proportions.

The Maine delegation got the "broch cheer" in the parade. But the Maine people held a big celebration. Many people went. Nebraskans met Eddie Conway, an old baseball umpire who knew Johnny Gonding and lots of Nebraska ball players. Eddie lives in Maine but admits he is here trying to get a break with the patronage.

The parade was one in which the military and naval forces were featured. Chandler Lewis of Fremont, Robert Hunter of Albion and Virgil Schwab of Hooper were among the West Pointers who called at the congressional office just before the parade. These splendid young Nebraskans are making good in their school work and looked fine in the great inaugural parade. Among the Third district naval students who were in the parade, were Wilber S. Wills of Neligh; Merlin Paddock of Wayne and Robert Mason of Leigh. Another Third district student will be sent to the naval school this year. His appointment and the appointment of alternates from the recent Third district examination will be announced in the near future. The entire membership of both schools was represented in the parade and both attracted much attention from the great throng.

Judge George Eberly of Stanton came to Washington on call from the United Spanish War Veterans who were holding a meeting here. The judge who was a colonel in the world war and also a commissioned officer in the Spanish-American war, was ordered to be in uniform while in Washington, and he became one of the guard of honor to the president during the inaugural parade. His first "inaugural orders" were to report with other high former war officers at the state-war and navy building. Judge Eberly had a visit with Governor Cochran of Nebraska and with people in Third district congressional office. The popular Nebraska judge had the unique pleasure of sitting very close to Jim Farley, the postmaster-general, during breakfast one morning.

The count is fifty girls to every boy in Washington. The girls have a pretty hard time getting "dates." But even that gets into the Washington racket. There are five or six organizations here who charge plenty of money to get the "right girl acquainted with the right boy." Because the unattached boys are at a premium, these "organizations" always have a list of unattached young men who are glad to get an invitation to a "tea" or a "party" or a "cocktail party" or dance. Parents of some of the more wealthy classes here who want their daughters to have a real coming out party or to make a proper "debut" pay from $500 to $1,000 to these organizations to "take care of everything." The "everything" includes the bringing together the "right kind of boys and girls." It takes care of the dances, luncheons, tea parties, etc., and more especially it takes care of getting the girls' picture in the papers and stories about her on the society pages. Sometimes the right girl and the right boy don't get together and there are a lot of heartaches, but the "organizations" don't take the blame for that. One lady who admits she runs such a pretty successful business she won't invite any boys to her "debutante" parties unless they have the recommendations from the "right people." A lot of girls who don't have parents here to take care of them sometimes go wrong because of lonesome hearts but thousands of them just forget about it and go to work and usually in the natural course of events meet the "real and right kind of a boy" who feels about the same way about this dizzy social business as the ordinary sane girl. The gigolo racket is a big one in this town.

The mail to the congressional office is heavier than it was a year ago. Much of it comes from friends over the district reporting on conditions at home and asking questions. On the congressional desk today there are seven important questions from home. They follow:

1. What is the total national indebtedness?
2. What is the excess of government expenditures over receipts?
3. What is the total of relief expenditures?
4. What is the administrative expenses of administering relief?
5. How many Social Security buildings are rented in Baltimore?
6. How many Social Security buildings are rented in Baltimore?
7. How many government employees in Washington?
8. How many government employees in Washington?
9. How many government employees in Washington?
10. How many government employees in Washington?

Rains which caused the recent floods in the south and east are the heaviest ever recorded, in so short a time. Johnsonville, Tenn., had the highest precipitation, 23.11 inches in January.

A gigantic plan to move out 500,000 persons within 50 miles of the Mississippi river from Cairo, Ill., to New Orleans, a distance of 1,000 miles, was organized for use if flood waters made this necessary. Last week's floods would pour three million cubic feet over the levees which are built to handle only two and a half million. Floods have already resulted in 400 known deaths. A million homeless and $400,000,000 in property loss in 11 states.

Utility of Physical Defects.

Obedience.

Perhaps there is no mental quality more necessary to the happiness, health, prosperity, peace of mind, and success of the human race than obedience. Harmony is the proof of obedience to God's law, while discord is the result of disobedience to His law. The happiest homes are those wherein the Golden Rule is obeyed, where children are taught to be obedient through love, and where the elders set an example of obedience to divine Principle, God, God.

A little child who has been rightly taught to obey God, will obey his parents and his school teachers, and will have little trouble later in life in observing the rules or regulations of his college or university. This habit of obedience will be of inestimable value to him in his business career, and he will seldom be found disregarding the traffic laws or the civil laws of his city, state, or country.

In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mary Baker Eddy writes (p. 183): "Divine Mind rightly demands man's entire obedience, affection, and strength. No reservation is made for any lesser loyalty. Obedience to Truth gives man power and strength." If we observe closely, we shall find that the great and good characters in history, and all who have achieved true success, have been obedient to their highest sense of good, and have prospered; for, as the Bible declares (Isiah 1:19), "If ye will be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land."

Humility and obedience go hand in hand. The latter often serves as a protection from subtle evils. An example of this is shown in the following incident. A little girl, who from the cradle had been taught, through love, to obey her parents instantly, was romping with a dog in a field through which ran the main line of one of the transcontinental railroads. The father, who was on the opposite side of the track, called to her to come to him, which she started to do. Just as she was reaching the track, he suddenly discovered the fact approaching limit, which was hidden from her view by a building. There was no time for words, so he raised his right hand in a gesture to stop, which she obeyed instantly, without knowing the reason for the signal. The child's obedience saved her from being struck by the train. Her parents, who witnessed the incident, gave thanks to the Father of us all for His law of love.

The Scriptures are rich in promises of blessings to those obedient to the voice of God. Jeremiah records God as saying (7:23), "This thing commanded I them saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people; and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you."

Habit tends to govern our acts. If we have formed habits of obedience to God's laws they lead us aright, while lawlessness leads to trouble. In "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy tells us (p. 117), "God is the fountain of light, and

City Sliding

Betty and Bob had been waiting all week for Saturday to come. And now that the longest day had finally arrived the twins were peering out of the window anxiously watching for their dad to give them the signal that he was ready to start.

Betty and Bob had been invited to spend the Saturday in a nearby town with the Fisher family. The twins had had many happy times with the Fisher children. The Fisher children had asked them to bring their sleds this time. Betty and Bob had never slid over city streets, so they were bubbling over with the thoughts of all the fun they were going to have.

The Fishers had three children, John, 12, Marjorie, 10 and little Anne, 5.

"Here comes daddy," called Betty.

Daddy was taking the children to town in the bobbed.

"Well, I guess we're off," said Bob.

The two children gave mother the usual kisses and hugs. As they started out the door mother said, "Now don't forget your manners. I want to be proud of my twins and remembering you must be careful in sliding on those city streets. Mother will be watching for the bobbed to come over the hill bringing home her good, thoughtful twins."

"Goodbye, goodbye." Mother stood on the porch waving her hand.

It was lots of fun sliding through the dog white tunnels of snow to town.

"Let's play we're in the snow giant's city and tell stories about these high drifts," suggested Betty.

"Look at that drift over there," said Bob. "It is so flat on the top. I'll bet that's the snow giant's table."

The children continued to imagine all sorts of things about the snow, and so the time went fast.

"Where do you think we are?" asked Daddy saying, "Whoa, whoa" and pulling on the reins.

Betty and Bob popped up in the sled.

"Why, we are at the Fisher's," said Bob.

The door of the house banged and the three Fisher children with their mother came out on the porch to greet the twins.

"O, I'm glad you're here," said Marjorie as she took hold of Betty's hand.

"I'm glad too," said Anne, taking Betty's other hand.

John was showing Bob his new sled and saying, "As soon as you get warmed up we'll go out and try it. It sure is keen and does it ever so fast!"

Soon the twins, the Fisher children and other children in the neighborhood were off to slide.

"Some of the streets are blocked off for sliding," said Marjorie. "Let's go to the one in the west part of town."

"Oh slucks," said John. "That's not steep enough. Let's try the school house hill even if it isn't closed off. We'll go lots faster." "I think it would be safer to stay on the regular sliding streets," said Marjorie. "But I guess I won't hurt to try the school house hill one."

"John, you and Bob can go first," added Marjorie. "I'll lie down and guide. Bob you shove off and jump on."

"Ready, go!" shouted Anne. "Oh, look how fast they are going."

"Oh, there comes a car," yelled Marjorie. All the children screamed. The brakes of the car screeched. John turned the sled into a snow bank, throwing Bob over his head into a tree. Luckily he had missed the car by inches but what had happened to Bob?

The children came running down the hill to see Bob lying still and white by the tree.

"Is he hurt? Is he hurt?" cried Betty.

The man in the car came rushing over. "I'll take the boy to the hospital," he said. "You run and tell your mother!"

It was a pretty sad, worried and unhappy group of children that ran to the Fisher home. Breathless and crying they came bursting into the house.

"Oh, mother, it's all my fault," cried John. "I never should have taken them on that hill that wasn't blocked off."

"What's all the trouble?" asked mother. "Why all the tears?"

The children told Mrs. Fisher the whole story. She went quickly to the phone and called Mr. Fisher, telling him to find Bob's father who was waiting down town to take the children home. "Take him to the hospital immediately," she was saying, "and phone us just as soon as you know how badly Bob is hurt."

Mrs. Fisher had decorated the table with pretty valentines and candies. But somehow the children didn't feel hungry. They were sorry they hadn't gone on the right street and had not been more careful.

"Ting-a-ling, ting-a-ling," the phone rang.

"Hello," answered Mrs. Fisher. The children stood breathless, all ears and eyes.

"Yes," said Mrs. Fisher. "Oh, I'm so glad. Thanks for calling. That's fine."

As Mrs. Fisher turned from the phone she said, "You can all smile again. Bob wasn't hurt badly this time—just a hard bump on his head made him unconscious for a while. He will be all right soon and is coming over to join our party again. But let this be a warning for you to be more careful and thoughtful. We wouldn't want any of you to have a serious accident and be crippled so you couldn't play with your friends."

As the bobbed was going over the last hill towards home Betty said, "I'm glad you weren't hurt much, Bob. Wouldn't mother feel bad to see the sled coming over the hill with one of its passengers missing?"

Early Days In Wayne County

Early Day from the Wayne Herald for February 3, 1921:

Projects to improve social conditions and reduce crime were proposed by Dr. Frank Wilcox who conducted a welfare campaign in Wayne. Dr. Wilcox showed that 75 percent of the criminals come from broken homes. "The world does not owe everyone a living but it does owe each one an opportunity to earn a living. And that is what young folks need," Dr. Wilcox stated.

The state normal board has bought some original paintings to be hung in the buildings.

Mrs. James Stanton of Carroll, died February 1, 1921, at the age of 55 years. Mrs. Stanton was a sister of James Finn and a cousin of Mrs. Tim Collins. Her husband, three sons and two daughters survive.

Mrs. Aug. Bronzinski of Winside, underwent an operation.

From Ponca Journal for February 3, 1921: The Ponca train is the only one running into Sioux City which has not been snow-bound. The attempt to recover the drill which was lost in the coal mine shaft has been abandoned after several unsuccessful attempts. The trouble seemed to be that the rods have become rotten from remaining under ground and they break when a pull is made on them. It is decided to wait until weather moderates before the four-foot vein of coal will be opened. One advantage of having a wife was demonstrated when Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Price and a gentleman friend were driving in a bobbed near Ponca. A piece of the front runner fell off and Mr. Price spilled out of the sled. The other man tried to grab the reins and in doing so fell over the dashboard. The team began to run toward home. Mrs. Price grabbed the lines and got control of the team. She drove back and picked up the men who were trying to dig themselves out of the snow.

Floods Menace Cities In South Every Season

Floods, seldom a menace in this section of the country, are an ever-present threat to the low lands along the Mississippi river and adjoining the Gulf of Mexico. R. H. Jacques, who spent a considerable part of his life in cities near the river and Gulf, recalls that such floods are caused either when rains in the upper river valley make the waters swell or when storms on the Gulf bring flood waters in from that body.

Leaves, which hold the water in its channel, and radio communication, which gives warning of gulf storms, have greatly reduced the loss of life and property in recent years.

Why, many ask, do families continue to inhabit land which they know will be flooded? This bottom land which has been flooded is the richest in the world, Mr. Jacques explains. Those who make their living with truck gardens are always anxious to establish homes on these fertile plots.

Mr. Jacques recalls that in 1888, when his father had a store and his brother taught school across the street from the store in Cameron Parish, La., a destructive gulf storm visited the city and resulted in much loss. A little French boy, one of Mrs. Jacques' pupils, saw a fork-tail bird and excitedly told Mrs. Jacques that a bad storm was coming. Mrs. Jacques looked and did see a fierce cloud over the Gulf. Soon Mr. Jacques came to warn his wife and the two began to take the children to safety in the second story of the store building. Before they finished the water was so high that Mr. Jacques had to stretch a rope across the street and guide them across by holding to this.

The fork-tail bird, which the lad saw, has always been a gulf storm warning in the south. The feather creature, with forked tail and wing spread of two feet, is seldom seen. Its habit seems to be to fly in the wind ahead of storm clouds.

Another storm sign which seems to hold good in the south is three successive frosts. After Mr. and Mrs. Jacques returned from their recent visit with the former's aunt in Shreveport, La., they received word from the last named that three frosts had arrived and heavy rains followed for two weeks.

Mr. Jacques remembers that when this section of the country experienced the severe blizzard of January, 1888, heavy rains followed frosts in Louisiana. The St. Francis river flooded the territory and loss was heavy. It was so cold in that state that two feather beds were comfortable at night.

"Of the storms which Mr. Jacques experienced the ones from the Gulf were more severe than the river floods as he was usually a distance from the river. In Victoria, Miss., he remembers that a flood cleaned out a town of 500. A stand-pipe which rose from the ground was twisted like ribbon by the swirling water. At another time he rode 12 miles by buggy near Hornersville, Mo., and did not see a foot of land in the distance. In a trip from Houston to San Antonio and at another time between Shreveport, La., and Amarillo, Texas, he had to retrace a trip, travel many extra miles and experience several days' delay in reaching his destination. Another time when Mr. Jacques left Galveston and went to St. Louis, on arriving at the latter city he saw a newsboard bulletin which stated that thousands had been drowned in one of the worst floods to visit Galveston.

Dreams and Realities.

Lincoln Journal: George Creel, who is so close to the president as to be of the opinion that he can speak for him with respect to his plans and purposes, says that no one need doubt what will be the program of the administration for the next four years. How Soft We've Become!
(Monticello (Ia.) Express)

We had what we consider a bad spell of weather last week which left us in rather a helpless condition. It was no worse than the winters of several generations ago, but with all of our boasted progress we were less able to take care of ourselves and overcome the difficulties of travel. Our so-called improvements have left us weak, where once we were strong. The automobile gives us the speed of a railroad train when the roads are open. But when we get the snow and ice such as we had last week it is almost a helpless means of conveyance. A span of oxen and a strong sled in the old days were sure where automobiles stalled last week. And so we had less travel and much growling. This has been one of the occasions when nature defeated our improvements.

Hardships and Losses Are Result Of Unusual California Weather

Unusual weather in southern California has resulted in death and hardships for residents and loss of millions of dollars worth of citrus fruit...

Complete estimates were impossible, but some growers believed that damage would total more than 30 millions of dollars...

And last night 50,000 men, weary and begrimed with smoke, returned to the dogged battle to salvage what they could of southern California's 112 million dollar citrus crop...

Wayne county farmers thinking about pump irrigation this summer to insure a crop were advised this week by Ivan D. Wood, noted extension engineer at the Nebraska college of agriculture, that good pumps must be used if great quantities of water are to be lifted economically from irrigation wells.

For pumping from streams, lakes or wells with a shallow water table, the horizontal centrifugal is quite commonly used. It is suitable for low heads and can be purchased quite cheaply. The vertical centrifugal is a popular type where it is desirable to have the pump submerged in water with the drive pulley at the surface of the ground...

Wood says irrigation pumps are driven with about every type of power imaginable from electric motors to old discarded steam engines. It is probable that electric motors and diesel engines will be popular in regions where water must be lifted from 50 to 100 feet...

Trailers Furnish New Park Problem

Trailer nomads in Nebraska next summer may find its largest state park, six miles south of Chadron, prepared to offer them the kind of hospitality they want.

Changes in the design of the 800-acre park to meet the needs of the modern tourist are being incorporated in a master plan now under preparation by technicians of the National Park Service, supervising agency of the work camp at Chadron.

The plan will make provisions for the immediate accommodation of 40 trailers, with the opportunity to enlarge the camp site as needed.

The Nebraska state park system is being confronted by the same problem facing park officials in the remainder of the second region of the National Park Service, which comprises fourteen states in the midwestern group.

Similar to this in the live stock field is the campaign to promote the use and sale of lamb inaugurated this month by growers, feeders, packers and retailers under the general management of the National Live Stock and Meat Board.

A Wise Change In Plan. True friends of agriculture everywhere will cheer the decision of the department of agriculture to remove, for a year at least, all crop production restraints in the hope that some of the country's empty elevators, bins, cribs and granaries may be filled again with the normal reserves of grain that the nation always before has carried.

Connections for electrical current to operate the numerous electrical appliances contained in the up-to-date trailer also will be provided from a power line through the park. Ample water is available.

The trailer owner will have to pay for these conveniences, but the fee system has not been worked out. Two alternatives face park officials, the installation of meters, or fees on a flat rate basis, sufficient to cover the cost of the utility.

Chadron state park has thirty cabins for campers desiring this type of accommodation and a fee is charged for their use. More than 5,000 automobile travelers visited the park last summer. This park is the only one in Nebraska in which the National Park Service has supervision where accommodations are being provided for trailers.

A Joint Responsibility. vice at reasonable rates, and authorities, both state and federal, have enforced the observance of such obligations. Hence it is not unreasonable to suppose that out of the present wave of strikes may come a greater conception of the responsibility of labor, not only to its employers but, to the general public welfare.

In short, the question which arises is this: Are large corporations, which represent hundreds of even thousands of investors, more liable for the public welfare than unions, which are the agents of thousands of employees? Common sense would answer that the responsibility is a joint one for which both parties should be held accountable.

Producers Learning To Advertise. Omaha Journal-Stockman: In normal crop years, one of the biggest problems that farmers have is the profitable disposition of their products. Hence it is especially interesting to note that producers are receiving a lot of help on this knotty question these days from processors, distributors and others interested in the handling of crops on a basis profitable for all concerned, and incidentally learning worthwhile lessons as to the value of advertising.

Among the latest efforts of this kind is the campaign being put on through food chain stores in every state in the union to help dispose of the burdensome supply of grapefruit now on the market. The crop, grown chiefly in the states of Florida, Texas, California and Arizona, is estimated at 29,000,000 boxes, or 10,000,000 boxes in excess of normal. Co-operating, of course, in the effort to move this big supply of the fruit are other merchants, the producers' organizations, the United States Department of Agriculture, and the press.

Since this mode of travel has become so popular, a large number of designs for camp sites, all of which entail some reconstruction work, have been originated. The Chadron plan will include drive-ways that have "drive out" loops, barricaded by pine trees and permitting easy ingress and egress. The site will be what is known as a "naturalized" rather than a "formalized," with the natural beauty of the area as little disturbed as possible.
