

Marry Saturday At Craven Home
The bride which have been in the family for years and she on the 11th bride to carry a lace and tulle bouquet was of gold and silver chrysanthemums.
Mr. Kingston and Donald Wamburg of Lincoln, who served as man, met the bridal party at the altar.
Refreshments carrying out the yellow and brown colors were served by Miss Peace Kingstons, Miss Josephine Ley, Miss Barbara Ebbin, Miss Mildred Maloney, Miss Margaret Jones and Miss Mary Alice Strahan. Mrs. C. M. Craven and Mrs. R. W. Ley received the guests and invited them to the dining room where the bride and Mrs. E. Ley cut and served the cake which was made by Mrs. Pauline Allen, sister of the bridegroom.
Among those here from out of town for the wedding were Miss Peace Kingstons of Chicago, Miss Josephine Ley, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Gayne and Virginia, Mr. and Mrs. John Austin Reynolds and Mr. and Mrs. Donald Wamburg of Lincoln, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Hahn and Barbara and Miriam of Columbus, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Clover of Pender.

is a graduate of Wayne high school and Wayne college. life insurance had a hard time getting people to talk about it. People know about all other business but this one. The modern funeral home of today is properly conducted is an asset to the community.
The most costly change for the funeral director has been the means of travel with the elaborate vehicles. All methods have been improved to help the families. The funeral director gives up his recreation so that his services may be available the full 24 hours of the 365 days in the year. He will go through storms and will slither his own family to serve others.
All Business Is Selling.
Mr. Frazey pointed out that all men are engaged in selling of some type. It is through this medium that business succeeds. Merchandising is the central force in business. Every sale has a tendency to build up or demoralize a person's business, depending on the merchandise and the way it is sold.

"Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of their party" has a good deal of merit and could be changed to read, "Now is the time for all good sellers to come to the aid of their stores." A good buyer never pays dollars but goods.
The speaker showed that there is a mercantile side to being a funeral director. A varied supply of goods must be kept. The mortician must take into consideration his community. A poor house or a rich one must all have the same consideration. The three classes of caskets are economical, artistic and protective. Bronze is used much for memorial metals because it stands up under weather changes better than most metals.
Nebraska has one of the best "iron clad" laws limiting the number and making the requirements stronger for the men entering the profession. "Man is his own competitor."
C. C. Haynes of Omaha, president of Nebraska state funeral directors' association and member of Omaha Kiwanis club, was a guest of Wm. Beckenhauer.

Third District Officers Meet

ideas on the part of school administrative agencies. The economy of fuel and janitor supplies that may result from a training course for janitors was given as an example of this. He deplored the fact that janitors are no longer offered a short summer term at the University of Nebraska.
Taxes, texts, supplies, teachers' salaries, certification and preparation of teachers, high school accreditation, courses of study and school health are among the subjects discussed by the association. Mr. Overing explained that plans are under way for a valuable program at the January district meeting which will be in Norfolk.
Open forum concluded the main addresses and many valuable ideas were gained.
One Hundred Attend.
More than 100 from about 20 towns of the third district attended the meeting in Wayne. Towns represented were Pender, Ponca, Allen, Wakefield, Emerson, Wynot, Laurel, Neligh, Elgin, Newnam Grove, Tilden, Norfolk, Bancroft, Wayne, Winside, Hoskins and Sholes. Visiting delegations were introduced by Supt. E. W. Smith. Mr. Overing was also introduced by Supt. Smith. Mr. Overing, who has been a school board member for 30 years, was on the Red Cloud board during the eight years Supt. Smith headed the school there. Mr. Overing has also been secretary of the state normal board for several years. "Mr. Overing," stated Supt. Smith, "is one who believes in and practices the philosophy that a good school should be ahead of everything else."
Supt. A. P. Burkhardt of Norfolk, spoke briefly about the insidious propaganda which brewers and liquor manufacturers are attempting to spread through the schools. The Norfolk schools, he explained, are formulating a definite program to combat this propaganda.
Music Is Furnished.
The instrumental ensemble of Wayne city school played selections, and the a capella choir sang. Russell Wideo, Wayne city school music director, had charge and also sang a solo.

Lundberg and Prof. O. R. Bowen were named as the nominating committee to report at the meeting next Monday.
Rev. Henry D. Brewer was appointed as secretary until the first of the year. He is taking G. B. Sanberg's place. Mr. Sanberg is moving to St. Paul, Minn.

THE KNOT-HOLE

Vol. 5 Wayne, Neb., Thurs., Nov. 25, 1937. No. 33

Well, there's one thing certain. Hoover can't be blamed for the present business recession, falling farm prices and increasing unemployment.
You can blame yourself if you buy substitute for PINNACLE COAL and find it unsatisfactory. Insist on PINNACLE. It's always good. Price of nut, $11.00; lump, $12.25.
There seems to be a long hard winter ahead. Storm sash will help make the home more comfortable and will save fuel cost.
Bessie: "That wisecracker I was out with last night certainly tickled my risibilities."
Tessie: "Well, I hope you slapped him!"
Blackhawk furnace coal is a great discovery. Customers discover that it gives off an unusual amount of heat, that it burns freely, does not coke and has a relatively small amount of ash. Price this week from bin, $9.75. We have a car on track at $9.25 per ton.
Four years ago our money was inflated to produce higher prices. Now we're going to have an investigation by congress to find what caused this high cost of living.
Oh, hum!
He: "It says in the paper that a baby fed on elephant's milk gained nearly pounds in two weeks."
She: "I don't believe it. Whose baby was it?"
He: "The elephant's."
All of the floors and corners of the rooms are cozyly warmed by homes heated with automatic stokers. And the cost of heating is greatly reduced.

CONGRESS AS SEEN BY KARL STEFAN

President Gives and Takes.
The president looked in fine physical condition at the National Press Club's dinner. He took good naturedly the usual lampooning on the part of the newspapermen. While the president was the principal speaker and while he had many important things to say, all that he did say, however, was "off the record" and no newspaperman as yet has broken the pledge not to write what the chief executive has to say at these "off the record" meetings.

Bureaucrats Fear Cuts.
Because next year will be election year, more members will be doing a lot of talking for the record and home consumption. This is an old congressional custom. The old timers tell us. Newspapermen say the various press conferences these days are becoming less interesting and many of them are very dull. That is because there is nothing real new to discuss and because there is a serious program for retrenching and economizing. Members who have promised a lot of new things at home and who came here early to start their programs, tell us they are meeting with disappointment because some of the bureau chiefs tell them they fear they won't have as much money to spend this year as they did a year ago. Some of the bureau chiefs are afraid that maybe if the legislators are serious in their talks of balancing the budget, the bureaus may become the victims of efficiency experts and may even be eliminated for the sake of economy.

Washington Hears Pitt. Game.
Judge Fred Neilsen who is an international lawyer and who attended the University of Nebraska at about the turn of the century, was one of the outstanding figures at the National Press Club dinner. Dr. Neilsen was surrounded by a lot of Pittsburgh football fans who "razed" him about the defeat of Nebraska at Pittsburgh that afternoon. Most of the Pittsburgh fans did a lot of crowing after the game, but most of them admit that it was the hardest game Pittsburgh has fought in many years. Most of the radios on the cars and in the stores in Washington were turned on to the Pittsburgh-Nebraska game.

Headache Pills for Congressmen.
The secretary to Congressman Crawford of Michigan wrote the sponsors of Gen. Hugh Johnson for a copy of the general's talk. The sponsors who sell a certain bromide wrote him that they didn't have any more copies of the speech but they sent him a lot of free headache tablets.

Members Against War.
Most of the letters from home contain pleas against anything that would look like involving our country in another war. Many pathetic letters from gold star mothers are on hand urging members to stand firm against any kind of war. All present indications are that so far as members are concerned, they are mostly against war. Most of them talk against war. Most of them say they would vote against any kind of war. On

House Marks Time.
The opening of the special session of congress was not accompanied by any extra features. The president did not come to the house to deliver his message, but it was sent up and read by the clerk. No member knows what's going to come up first. Everything is in a chaotic mess and the leaders are just waiting on the committees to bring something up to work on. The southerners are getting ready to fight against the anti-lynching bill in the senate. The bill has already passed the house. The house is waiting on the committee to bring up a farm bill and every member who is interested in agriculture has a half dozen amendments waiting to introduce at the proper time.

President Lets Up On Business.
There is all kinds of talk here about what's going to happen. Most of the wonder is about the money question — about business and about our gold buying program and war. Members of the house who have been talking against useless spending are starting to put the blame on congress. The executive branch is making some passes about "saving" and balancing the budget, but neither side has yet shown any disposition to trim down some of the big spending items which are listed as "unnecessary."

Celebrates Birthday.
Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Ulrich and family and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Ulrich and family of Winsde, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Puls, Mrs. Ernest Puls and Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Meierhenry and family were guests in the Reuben Puls home Friday evening in honor of Mr. Puls' birthday anniversary.

Project Club Meets.
The H. H. C. club met at the Walter Ohlund home Wednesday evening with Mrs. Reuben Weiler and Mrs. E. E. Potter as hostesses. Mrs. Lloyd Behmer and Mrs. Ed Schellenberg, project leaders of the North Valley club, had charge of the meeting. Plans were made for a Christmas party which will be held next month. Mrs. C. W. Anderson and Mrs. Dale Ziegler will entertain December 9 at the Ziegler home.

Food Affects Teeth

The dental health project being sponsored by the Wayne Dental association has aroused community interest in the work being carried out through the schools.

Miss Louise Kimmel, home economics instructor at the Wayne State Teachers college, has prepared a paper on "Food and Nutrition in Relation to Dental Hygiene." In her report Miss Kimmel specifies that bone building materials are calcium, phosphorus, vitamin D, C and A. These are necessary for the proper nutrition and calcification of the teeth.

"Rickets," according to Miss Kimmel's report, "is a disease characterized by a softness of the bones and will result if any of the essential elements for calcification of bones are lacking."

"Investigators who studied calcium and phosphorus metabolism of children between the ages of 3 and 14 years found that the calcium and phosphorus from milk was utilized to better advantage than that which was found in vegetables." In an experiment made with two groups of children, each group was given 500 grams or a pint of milk and in addition one group had a second pint of milk and the other had carrots and spinach equal to that. The investigators found that the optimum storage of calcium in the growing child required about one quart of milk daily. A liberal use of vegetables in the diet is desirable but the vegetables should be used in addition to the quart of milk per day.

As the child grows older the calcium and phosphorus requirement increases so a full quart of milk per day together with other food suitable to the age of the child will give an optimum intake of calcium and also a liberal amount of phosphorus.

Compares Food Content.

Sherman, in "Chemistry of Food and Nutrition," shows that cheese is high in percentage of calcium and phosphorus; egg yolks are high in phosphorus and low in calcium; dried beans, high in phosphorus and low in calcium; oatmeal and nuts are high in phosphorus and low in calcium. Milk is higher in calcium than in phosphorus but each is a low content. Lean beef and whole grain wheat have a high content of phosphorus.

The calcium and phosphorus requirement for maintenance after growth has ceased is less than that during the periods of growth. "During the periods of pregnancy and lactation, the demand for calcium and phosphorus is greater than that for the most rapid growth. It is reasonable that it should be so because there are two individuals to be considered. If the diet of the mother does not contain enough of these two minerals to supply both demands of rapid growth and maintenance, these minerals are taken from the bones of the mother for the growth of the fetus. The mother's bones and teeth will be decalcified to the degree to which the diet is lacking."

When the calcium and phosphorus content of the mother is low...

Three Types of Rickets.

"According to investigators," Miss Kimmel reports, "there are three types of rickets: Low phosphorus and adequate calcium which is a common type of rickets in children; low calcium and adequate phosphorus may be accompanied by tetany, which is a spasmodic state of muscular tremors; and low calcium and phosphorus supply in the blood, producing a porous condition of the bones and teeth, especially of the shaft of the long bone of the arms and legs. This latter type is often small and bones are more easily broken and take a longer time for healing."

Three Vitamins Needed.

"The chief role of vitamin C in the body is to maintain in health such tissues as the blood vessels and connective tissues in general. Lack of it may cause fragility of the capillary walls which lead to tiny hemorrhages, soreness and bleeding about the joints and in the gums, loosened teeth and fragile bones. Such symptoms are seen in scurvy, the deficiency disease due to lack of vitamin C.

Vitamin D plays an important role in the metabolism of the mineral elements, calcium and phosphorus. Its presence is needed to maintain the proper level of these elements in the blood and to enable them to be deposited in the growing bones. Hence vitamin D is essential for building strong teeth and bones.

The chief functions of vitamin A aside from promoting growth are to do with maintaining in health the skin and other related tissues such as the mucous membranes, linings, respiratory passages and alimentary canal. Lack of it causes damage to these tissues, so that bacteria gain a foothold and secondary infection results. Prolonged lack of vitamin A results in an eye disease called night blindness and finally death.

To Build Best Teeth.

In her paper, Miss Kimmel concluded with the following quotation from Park: "I believe that if pregnant women received ample well balanced diets in which green vegetables were abundantly supplied and cow's milk was regularly taken and kept a sufficient part of their time in the open air and sun, and if their infants were placed in the direct rays of the sun for a part of each day and were fed calcium chlorate for the first two or three years of life, more could be accomplished in regard to the eradication of cavities of the teeth than in all other ways put together and thus rickets would be abolished from the earth."

Thanksgiving

IT'S an old American tradition. This Thursday, at we'll say, about one o'clock, folks all over the nation will find their places at the table for the feast of feasts—that most American of American institutions—the Thanksgiving dinner. In its own sphere it ranks alongside the Fourth of July and the World Series as events unanimously and originally American.

And what a superbly substantial and satisfying banquet it is! Beginning rather humbly in comparison to its modern aspect, the Thanksgiving feast has today almost overshadowed its deeper significance. The Pilgrim fathers little knew what they had started when they set aside that day of thanksgiving during the latter part of the year 1621. It was a day reserved for reverent acknowledgment of favors received during the year. They braved the danger of Indian attack and held a simple church worship as a part of that first Thanksgiving. Their food, garnered by difficult toil from their own lean acres, was simple alongside our sumptuous feasts.

Governor Bradford of Plymouth officially proclaimed the day as an annual expression of gratitude at harvest time. Governors of the states have since set aside Thanksgiving for observance in appropriate ways by the people of the nation.

As traditional as the day itself—in fact a part of it—are the favorites without which no Thanksgiving menu would be complete. The Pilgrims supplied the turkey, the bird which has survived as the symbol of the festive day. Duck and chicken have taken their place alongside the gobbler, and have all but surpassed it in popularity, especially for small families.

Other old-time Thanksgiving dishes which are as much a part of the November holiday as fireworks are complementary with the Fourth of July are cranberries, sweet potatoes and pumpkin pie with whipped cream. Salads have gained in popularity in recent years and now have fairly established themselves as necessary to complete the menu. Of course there is dressing, spuds, apples, celery, olives, pickles, cider, mince pie and the trimmings, all of which find their way onto most tables on Thanksgiving.

One trying to choose an exclusively all-American menu, might start with turkey, duck or chicken from a local farm; the same source for pumpkins, potatoes and dairy products; but he might have to seek sweet potatoes in Louisiana, cranberries in the Great Lakes region, sugar in Colorado, apples and other fruits and vegetables from coast to coast; and he might have to omit some of the spices and perhaps the coffee unless he put in his order early. Coffee from South America and Lingonberries from Norway will be found on many Thanksgiving tables.

The cost of the Thanksgiving dinner should not be any higher than last year despite the slightly higher price of meat because of a smaller supply. The cost of fruits and vegetables, dairy products, eggs, sugar and other common foods are lower. So, unless the 1937 family indulges in too many of the fancy foods and extras, they will be able to keep within their budget very nicely. And they won't have to go farther than their grocer and their butcher to stock up the pantry shelves for Thanksgiving.

But we hope that with all the enjoyment rightfully theirs in satisfying their appetites in the traditional American way on Thanksgiving, that Americans will take time out for a short period of contemplation and acknowledgment of the many good things they enjoy in a land of democracy.

London Letter By ALFRED LARSON, LONDON, ENGLAND.

November 8, 1937. Idlers these days sit under the stately plane trees in Lincoln's Inn Fields, sipping tea as they regard the tennis matches on one hand and the large bed of various flowers on the other. Old timers pause over their cups to remark sagely that not often do English roses begin blooming for the third time in mid-October, as they did this year, and that not for forty years have there been so many flowers in November. Although the approach of winter is not manifest in the flower gardens, there is plenty of evidence elsewhere. Recurring fog and rain are in themselves convincing. The numerous top hats and white ties seen on the streets at night indicate that the London social season is flourishing. A month ago the judges marched about in their crimson and ermine robes and their ten-gallon wigs ("bug catchers"), brought for the Law Courts building to open the Michaelmas term. Two weeks ago the king and queen on their way to open parliament took a 25-minute ride in a huge gold-and-glass coach drawn by eight Windsor grays. They were preceded by an assortment of lords and ladies, ambassadors and their wives, and members of the royal family, most of them in Rolls Royces, Daimlers, or Lanchesters. Hallowe'en passed with scarcely a murmur of recognition. A week ago borough elections created a bit of excitement. Children paraded with placards asking votes for socialist candidates. Socialists strengthened their hold in the city, and now control 17 of the 28 boroughs, a gain of two. While newspapers in general published conflicting reports of the nation-wide results, the conservative Times reported concisely that the socialists were "not so successful in the country, but command none the less, majorities in 43 cities and towns outside the capitol." Friday, November 5, all English children, Oxford and Cambridge undergraduates, and some grown-ups celebrated Guy Fawkes night with bonfires, firecrackers, and vandalism. Every night for three weeks before the celebration children in all sorts of costumes sought money for fireworks by way-laying playgoers with demands of "Penny for the Guy." Only a few Oxford and Cambridge students were arrested this year; but the London celebration seems to have been up to par, since brigades received more than 140 calls to attend fires. Effigies of Guy Fawkes fed some of these fires. Towards midnight on November 4, 1805, Guy Fawkes was arrested in a cellar under the parliament building where he was standing guard over 20 or more barrels of gunpowder covered with iron bars. On the following day King James and his eldest son were to open parliament. Fawkes and a number of others had plotted to blow up the whole assembly and then to seize control of the government. They were found out through an anonymous letter which one of them sent to a friend, Lord Montague, whom he wished to spare. The original letter which is on display in the public record office museum asks Montague to excuse himself from parliament since "They shall receive a terrible blow if this parliament and yet they shall not see who hurts them." It asks Montague to burn the letter, but instead he turned it over to government authorities who uncovered the plot. Since that time it has been the practice to look for gunpowder before the opening of each parliament. This year a busload of yemen of the guard decked out in broad flat-topped hats and knee breeches entered the building and searched the basement an hour before the king and queen arrived. Aid Thursday in the home of Mrs. J. D. Haskell. Mr. Goshorn and Mr. Roe attended the Wakefield pavilion sale. Henry, Gunther of Hastings, came last Wednesday and visited until Sunday in the George Hoffman home. Mr. and Mrs. Amos Echtenkamp and family spent last Wednesday afternoon in the W. H. BLACK FEATHER By Harold Titus. CHAPTER V-Continued. The glow of the fire came abreast. One guard lay prone by the blaze; the other nodded on the opposite side. "Now! Hold the canoe so!" whispered Rodney, and laid his paddle down while Jacques gathered round blades in his hands for anchorage. Shaw was silent as a shadow, lifted one foot overside and felt for bottom. And then, from under his very nose as he swayed outward to stand erect, a stick lifted into the air, flapping and squawking! The sound in the stillness was, by contrast, tremendous. Another took wings to their right, and two more, and, in seconds, a dozen ducks were in alarmed flight, females squawking, drakes uttering their throaty notes of alarm. And the sleeping guard across there was sitting up. His companion was on his feet, rifle in hand. "Sh!" from Rodney. "Hold so. They can't see!" The two boatmen by the fire muttered and then one spoke more loudly. "A think disturbing the fowl," he said. "It's a fox, slipping up for a bite..." He stretched and yawned. "Sacre! But this driving gives weight to a man's lids!" he growled, and, putting his rifle down, began to pace slowly back and forth, rubbing sleep from his eyes. Rodney softly took his place in the canoe. "Let go," he whispered glumly. "The chance has passed."

him, which was the first mound of packages, snug from the rain. Cautiously he drew out the unfolded edge of oilcloth and felt for the cold sides of the oaken casks. The first came out and he carried it quickly to the stream, rolling it in. The slight bump and splash were lost in larger noises. He carried another and surrendered it to the current and another and still another. He warmed to the task. He jacked casks from the pile and let them roll down the slope. One and two and six and a dozen! He searched frantically with his hands for more. That was all! Then, chucking a bit he slipped into the current after them and crossed to the other side and made his way downstream. Jacques, curled like a wolf beneath the stretched cloth, awoke with an alarmed grunt at Shaw's touch. "Come! We march!" "Now! Tonight! In this storm?" "Ay! Now! And in safety! In this storm we pass the camp of the brigade without suspicion!" An hour later he was, indeed, above Rickman's uncomfortable, disastrous resting place. He was cold and drenched and weary. But he kept on until nearly dawn before landing for a snatch of sleep and a handful of food before he resumed his way. On a green and azure and golden morning, Rodney Shaw emerged from the rice-choked stream which drained into the lake of the Pillagers. To his right, which was the northern side of the lake, lay a clearing on a gentle slope and the stockade and buildings of a trading post gleamed against the background of forest, a blockhouse perched above the gaping gate. "Nor wasters," he muttered. "Too elaborate an establishment for an independent. And it's Astor's, by forced purchase. We won't trespass, Jacques!" A mile farther on, tucked behind a sheltering point, he saw the second stockade and outlay of buildings, and headed toward it. The place was all-was more than he could have hoped for. The stockade was of stout pickets ten feet tall, sharpened on the end. Within was a storehouse, trader's quarters with fireplace and wet-packed earthen floor, and a house for the men, all of logs. Once they had been washed with paint made of white clay and water, but the stuff was flaked and dropping, now. Within an hour after he had landed, three canoes approached from as many directions. Hunters, these, came to appraise this new trader and to glaze Rodney his first sight of the Pillagers. He made his visitors milder present and explained that his canoes, laden with goods, were on the way. "But why does the trader take the small fort?" one asked. "A voice like a murmuring wind has come up the Mississippi. It has told us that the company from the island of the Great Turtle will trade in the fort. Is not the trader from the company?" A little stab of apprehension ran through Rodney. "That voice spoke what is true," he said. "The great company does come. It may be that its goods will arrive before mine arrive. But the great company is like a raven, waiting to pick the bones of hunters. I am not of it." An old man granted assent. "Voices have told here that the great company trading alone enslaves the hunters," he said. "The voices spoke truth. I will give you tobacco." He handed small amounts of twist to each. They smoked and talked further and at what he thought a proper time Rodney asked the location of Standing Cloud's camp. "I bear for him a token of brotherhood," he said and was somewhat nettled that the grunts which followed the statement were not more enthusiastic. But they pointed out the way to the chief's lodge and soon Rodney was headed there. A tall gnat Indian, naked to the waist, legs encased in finely tanned buckskin, sat on a rush mat. The chief's face betrayed no emotion, neither animosity nor friendliness. Rodney came to a halt before him, his right hand upraised. "Standing Cloud," he said. "I have come many leagues to have talk with you. I have come to trade with you and your people. But first I have come to bring you words of praise and friendship from my brother, Leslie." The other granted impassively, his eyes busy on Shaw's face. "Leslie hungered to come," Rodney continued. "Leslie waited many days to come with me. But a great sickness of the breast was upon him. He is departed. They poured sand over him at the island of the Great Turtle." Standing Cloud stirred slowly at that. "Your words cast a cloud across the sun," he said. "Leslie was my friend. But for him sand would have been poured over Standing Cloud, many moons ago at the prairie of dogs." "It is so, Leslie spoke of this to me. But he could not come. So he sent me to bear you words of praise as a brother and to return this stone to you." He reached into his pouch and extended the ornament. The man took it, eyed it, turned it over. He looked long at Shaw then and grunted. "Let us smoke," he said briefly, and Rodney drew a sign of vast relief, knowing he had been accepted without further question. He told, then, in detail, the story of events leading up to his arrival there. "So the great company's goods will arrive before mine. Flaming Hair will appear burdened with presents while my hands are empty. But the Pillagers must know what evil comes to hunters when the great company alone is among them. Will my new brothers await the coming of my canoes?" Standing Cloud pondered at length. "My pathway is clear and bright," he said. "My eyes are not clouded. There is but one way for me to travel. That is to help my brother's brother. I go, now to the lodge of Black Beaver. I will come to your place and talk in another sun."

CHAPTER VI

"Who, then, is Black Beaver?" Shaw put this question to the Weasel, a talkative Indian who had appeared early the next day to visit him, taste his liquor, smoke his tobacco, brag for presents. Black Beaver was the medicine man, the jessakid, the Weasel informed him. A mighty worker of magic, Black Beaver. A man of wealth and wisdom, Black Beaver. But not always a man who walked straight and in the light. And the Weasel went on, narrating the misdeeds and evil practices of the jessakid, and Rodney grew sorer and a bit dismayed. Standing Cloud, the principal chief, was respected; Flat Mouth, the war chief, was acknowledged a great man. But Black Beaver, the dominating influence, the black heart, had withheld hunting medicine from those who traded with the independent; he had even deplored Windigo the river of the Laughing Musquash, so that none of these hunters, for whom it was a favorite ground, dared go there. So widely accepted the Indians' adict that not only did the Indians believe in it but they ventured up engages would be the white Laughing Musquash for the white chief with which the buildings had been washed.
