Orange Leaf Rust is Damaging Wheat.

That orange leaf rust is doing appreciable damage to winter wheat in some sections of eastern Nebraska was indicated in a report made public today at the University of Nebraska college of agriculture. Some primary blackstem rust infection has been found in scattered areas but has resulted in no damage as yet.

Dr. W. Goss, agronomist and plant pathologist respectively, issued the statement following an inspection tour of southern Nebraska Saturday and other later observations. Some concern over wheat which has not as yet headed out was expressed.

Conditions last fall were none too favorable for wheat planting. Some wheat was replanted, particularly around the edges of the fields and this has been damaged severely by orange rust. In other instances, planting was delayed awaiting more favorable moisture conditions.

Both Dr. Kiesselbach and Dr. Goss said that wheat heading late will be at a decided disadvantage. Damage is expected to be greater than usual, they added, from leaf rust due to abnormal conditions. The rust in epidemic proportions reduces the total amount of food materially manufactured by the leaf.

to develop in a fairly normal manner in such wheat. In the late heading wheat, fewer heads with somewhat greater sterility and more shrunken grain is expected.

The same situation regarding orange leaf rust is found on wheat at the college of agriculture agronomy farm as in other eastern Nebraska counties. The varieties differ materially as to earliness of heading.

Some indications as to whether wheat would escape injury from orange and stem rust is found in experimental data at the agricultural college. From the time the wheat is in full head, it is usually 28 days until the wheat reaches maturity.

In Saline county Saturday, Dr. Kiesselbach and Dr. Goss found conditions exceedingly spotted. Wheat is headed in some fields and in others it is not. The same variation exists within fields in some areas.

That the late wheat which has not yet headed but may be subject to black-stem rust was also the thought projected by the agricultural college scientists. Primary stem rust infection was first noted at the college on about May 30.

Weather conditions though will determine the damage yet to be done by stem rust, said Dr. Goss. "Warm dry weather would hurry the wheat along and cut down possible damage considerably."

Woman at Wisner Has Lived Long

At 106 years of age Mrs. Lucinda Cline of Wisner, says she "stopped enjoying life a long time ago."

Mrs. Cline would enjoy a visit to her native state of Virginia and says if she could live her life over again she would just work and pass the time away and try to do better.

Mrs. Cline, who weighs 80 pounds and keeps fairly well, is active about her home. She peels potatoes, sets the table, washes dishes and does other duties about home. She doesn't see well enough to sew much any more.

Mrs. Cline was 106 last February 15. She was born in 1822 when Andrew Jackson was president, when there were only 25 states in the union, when railroads were five years old and telegraph had just been discovered.

She was 29 years old at the outbreak of the Civil war. Mrs. Cline has two sons and one daughter.

Mexico Intrigues Traveler

Traveling in the Sunshine special over the "toughest road bed in the world," Mrs. A. B. Carhart with a group of friends, arrived in Mexico with a not too optimistic attitude of the country, but which was soon changed. Mexico provided many interesting and unusual experiences for Mrs. Carhart and she is looking forward to a time when she can enjoy a winter's vacation in the country. Mrs. Carhart arrived home last week after spending six weeks touring Mexico and the southern states.

Mrs. Carhart took a dozen batteries for her car phone with her on her vacation and upon entering Mexico had a great deal of trouble convincing customs officials that they were not bombs. After much persuasive arguing and upon the assurance by friends that she would not bomb any of Mexico she was allowed to enter with them.
The northern part of Mexico is a very poor section. Many of the people live in such squalor that it is hard for an American to realize that such conditions actually do exist. In the particular section in which Mrs. Carhart visited, water is shipped in by the government. Once a week the people have community wash days. All through Mexico one sees women washing on a stone at the side of a stream.
Cactus Grown Everywhere.
Even the poorest farms in Mexico grow cactus, according to Mrs. Carhart. Mexicans laughingly remark that the cactus is one step ahead of the American hog. Every part of the cactus, even to the thorns can be utilized, but the thorn of the pig is useless. The leaves are used for phonograph needles, pulp is used for pancake flour, fiber is woven into cloth and other parts may be used for liquor and rope. When placed in thick rows, cactus is often used for fences as it grows from 8 to 10 feet high. The only thing which can pass through the fence is a snake. When Mrs. Carhart and her friends were in Mexico the cactus were in bloom and presented a riot of color.

Mexicans Polite.

No matter how poor a Mexican is, he is never too poor to own a dog. Some Mexicans have white shows, which are always kept very clean. Every Mexican is very polite from the lowest to the very highest type. Mrs. Carhart commented that she had never seen such politeness and it is something for which Mexico is not noted.

Mexico City with a population of 3,000,000 is a very beautiful spot, impressing Mrs. Carhart in its splendor more than any other scenic place visited. Houses are painted in light blue and salmon pink. The paint is a mixture made by the Mexicans which withstands any type of weather. With the grilled ironwork over the windows and doors, which is very common in Mexican homes, the bright colored paint presents a truly artistic picture.

Hotel Unsurpassed.

The hotel at which the American party stayed is unsurpassed. Oriental rugs and heavily carved Spanish furniture are used in each of the 1,500 rooms. Food, supposedly American, is delicious. With one meal each day Spanish rice and Mexican beans are served even though they are not ordered. The two dishes are as much a part of a Mexican meal, as potatoes to an American. No Mexican vegetables or fruits which cannot be peeled are eaten by Americans for sanitary reasons. Mineral water is served in labeled bottles each meal. There are few places where water cannot be had. Big dinners are served twice a day in seven courses. Imported Holland ham was a specialty served the Americans each morning for breakfast.

feet of space. Everything which cannot be used by the peddlers is offered for sale, exchange or barter. The market place is a hub-dub of people crying their wares. The guide who took the American party through the market place advised that they never pay the original price asked, and also never enter the market alone. Pickpockets are numerous. None of the robbing is done by the peddlers, but rather by professional pickpockets who haunt the markets.

In the one funeral procession which Mrs. Carhart witnessed, the father of the deceased child, carried the casket on his head not using his hands. Other members of the family carried flowers walking behind the father.

Churches Interesting.

All of the churches, monasteries and cathedrals are of paramount interest. The important ones are being reconditioned to preserve the historic beauty. The American party witnessed one wedding in the most beautiful cathedral in the world. Pews in the church were marked off by garlands of gardenias.

Ninety-nine percent of the population in Mexico is Catholic. One very large cathedral has a fence around one-fourth of it which is of sterling silver beaten out of the coins given the church by the peasants.
A guide, who formerly studied his priesthood, took the party through the monastery where he had studied. In the monastery is a confession room in which the monks told confessions to each other. The room was made 14 feet square and has perfect acoustics. The confessor would turn facing the wall and receive his penance from another person facing the opposite wall. Each person spoke in a whisper. The walls are built straight for about five and one half feet and then spread into a fan shape.

The dungeon in this old monastery is very damp and cold. Anyone sentenced to the dungeon for any great length of time always became blind. The individual bedrooms are very small with one small window only two feet square.

Beauty is typical of every old church. Imported stained windows with solid gold leaf in all the domes are slowly being replaced in the united effort to rebuild all of the old churches. Every working man gives to the church even when he has not enough to live on.

Hears Blues Singer.

Mrs. Carhart heard the outstanding Mexican blues singer on her closing program for the season. In comparing the Mexican singer to those of America she noted the Mexican has a more daring and insolent look. She wore black pantaloons, large full skirt and large hat which tied under the chin. The Mexican music does not have the jazz and swing as is popular in this country. For the closing program many ex-celebrities were present and all were called upon to entertain with none refusing.

In speaking to her guide regarding Mexican music, Mrs. Carhart received the remark that a Mexican plays with his heart. She asked him what the American played with and he hesitantly remarked, "No one has been able to find out."
Beautiful flowers and luxuriant vines are a main part of Mexican beauty. Very old and immense trees are common scenery. One complete square in Mexico City is covered by a grape vine which is several hundred years old.

Beggars are frequently seen. They are usually very old and not insistent in their demands. Guides allow them to seek coins from the parties and are sympathetic with them, dismissing them after a few minutes in a kind tone.

Visits Market Places.

Market places were of special interest to Mrs. Carhart. Everything is sold in the acres of markets in which stands are placed, some of them occupying only six for American tourist trade. Courtesy and service are extended in every store. Many stores employ clerks who can speak English in order to better serve the tourist trade from the United States. An effort is being made, however, not to commercialize the country and to keep the Mexican lure from being spoiled by preserving historic places.

Attends Bull Fights.

Great ceremony accompanies the bull fights, one of which was witnessed by Mrs. Carhart. The arena is of sand and is surrounded by two fences. The first one is low enough for the bull to jump but the second is not. Numerous other small fences are in the arena, behind which the matador may escape danger.
A marshal opens the ceremony by entering riding a horse and he and the horse both bow to the audience with great pomp and ask permission to open the bull fight. Music accompanies all of the performance. As he leaves the gate, opens and matadors and assistants appear in double file in their elaborate costume.

Six bulls were killed this particular afternoon. A matador must be very sporty and give the bull a chance, and he in turn must take chances. It is disgraceful, however, not to kill the bull. The matador must stab but once. The arena is dragged clean following each killing, so that there is no danger of a matador risking his life by slipping on blood.

Visits In States.

Preceding her interesting tour of Mexico, Mrs. Carhart toured the southeastern states in this country. Next to Mexico, Mrs. Carhart was intrigued by the beauty of New Orleans where she was particularly fascinated by the old French quarter. One of the homes visited in this city was built by a count many years ago for his daughter. Her initials were carved in the grill work around the windows.

The city is famous for its coffee which is served northern, southern and creole style. Northern coffee is very strong, southern is mixed with chicory and creole is served with hot milk.

Other highlights of her tour in the states included the airport at San Antonio, termed the "West Point of the World," Chattanooga, Tenn., Look Out mountain and Look Out city, and the Smithsonian institute in Washington, D. C.

Williamsburg was very interesting. The city is being reconditioned by Henry Ford and everything being restored to the original, when the city was begun. Private homes, palaces, churches and taverns are all being reconstructed. People appear in pre-revolution costume. The old jail has been rebuilt with the jailors appearing in costume. The only modern atmosphere around the entire city is by students attending William and Mary college.
