By Muriel Arends

Since my initial attempt at "big-time" journalism was accepted, I feel encouraged to try my luck once more. In the meantime I'm just waiting for the fan letters to start rolling in—you know, the kind which say "I don't appreciate your point of view. Will you please remember that such and such are the true facts? Your presentation of them can only be excused on the basis of your none-too-mature mental status." Haven't received even the more favorable sort of comment as yet, but it must be known that I willingly accept the responsibility connected with each and every statement I may make.

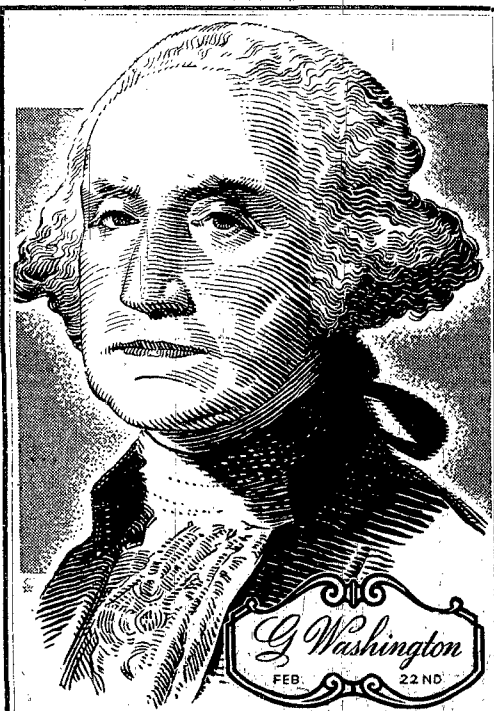

What is there about receiving one's first pay-check that makes him feel as if he had the world by the tail? I managed to keep it from early in the morning until almost time for the bank to close, but just about that time I decided to take the fatal step. I had it cashed! I've been going around in a daze ever since. If only there weren't so many millions of ways to spend money presenting themselves, I should be even more happy.

Weather—an age-old topic of conversation which even today retains interest for us humans. Besides adding a bit to needed precipitation, last week's snow did its share in making the world more beautiful. Personally, I appreciated that fact, and forgot to mind the sub-zero temperatures which accompanied it. By the way, did you notice all the people and more people in town on Saturday? I couldn't help wondering how much trouble they had had in getting over country roads. That curiosity was even more aroused when I saw the tow cars going back and forth so very often.

More weather. It was a joy to behold—the way those ten men with three trucks worked the other morning to remove the snow from the city's streets. They seemed very efficient in spite of the fact that Old Man Winter hasn't afforded them much practice this year.

And still more. The frequency of cold infections apparently has increased this year compared to last, but the death rate shows no increase. Nice that these infections have enough consideration to be milder as long as there are so many of them. Mumps don't seem to measure up in the same degree of thoughtfulness. Both sides or none, say they. Now my thought on all this that our mild winter weather plays a large factor in both instances, or am I wrong?

Each year about this time I start casting about for something excellent in the way of dramatic performance to attend. Because the personal coffee isn't filled to overflowing by any small matter of means, I had almost given up hope of realizing that dream this year. Instead, however, I find that the mountain is coming to Mohammed, and that I am about to be blessed with the privilege of attending the presentation of one of our greatest contemporary

Elderly Cyclist Stops in Wayne After Long Trip

To travel from Klamath Falls, Ore., to Wayne by bicycle in 24 days at the age of nearly 61 is the unusual record of C. A. Chase, who stopped here last Thursday and Friday enroute to Nebraska City that day or Sunday.

It was four years ago that Mr. Chase, his wife and daughter, Edith, went to Oregon. Though conditions had not been the best, Chase had been able to get enough work to provide a comfortable home for his family.

Historic Features of the Old South Are of Special Interest to Davises

The remains of early settlement in the south were most interesting to Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Davis who arrived home last week from a 10-day trip with New Orleans.

Enroute south the Davises went to Kansas City and then to Springfield, Mo., known as the queen city of the Ozarks for there one sees the beautiful Ozark mountains and lakes.

On to the old city of Natchez the Wayne folks saw a mixture of Spanish, French and other architecture and the population seemed to represent quite a mixture of nationalities.

Visit Oldest Church. St. Louis cathedral in the French section is the city's oldest church. Priests who have served the church are buried near the altar.

A drive around Lake Tontcharin showed this to be a huge body of water on which sail large boats and yachts. A canal runs from the lake through the city of New Orleans.

On their return Mr. and Mrs. Davis visited Jackson, Memphis and St. Louis.
