Speaking of hand and machine corn husking, the Omaha Journal-Stockman concludes: "The main problem in the west for a few years has not been as to how to do the husking, but how to grow a crop to be husked."

If federal officers are required to suspend business November 23 in observance of the president's Thanksgiving day, the Herald will necessarily issue its edition that week a day earlier instead of on the last Thursday—this year November 30—the traditional time for the holiday and the day set apart by the Nebraska governor and other governors. Making prompt delivery of the edition is the reason. But

Christmas has not been changed, and it will be Monday, December 25, as usual, and despite the president's presumption in hurrying up the Thanksgiving event, the country should cultivate the customary yuletide spirit of good will.

Probably the late October has the distinction of the driest October on record. During the month when the forecast indicated rain, it didn't rain, and when it indicated dry weather, it was dry.

Our High Standards of Living. (Omaha Journal-Stockman) In reference to our boasted modern standards of living which are undoubtedly higher than they have ever been before and higher than they are now in any other country it must be admitted that these high standards largely explain the prolonged depression.

Recalling experience in the last World war, and pointing to its folly and futility, Herbert Hoover, former president, says, in an article in the Saturday Evening Post, participation in another one would fasten the shackles of dictatorship on America and put an end to American liberty.

Yes, our living standards are higher but what have they brought us? Our present theory of living seems to be to "live up to our incomes even if we have to borrow money to do it." This largely explains the long lists of people on relief, the volume of unemployment and the multiplicity of federal, state, county and city relief agencies.

The Language of the Range. (Omaha Journal-Stockman.)

It is really amazing how many of our activities are currently and correctly described in terms of the range country. The cowman has left the impress of his vigor and insight on practically every phase of American life.

If you can picture such a thing as a cowboy selling his saddle, you can see in your mind's eye a man who has given up his whole reason for existence, his one tie with honor.

When a man has "sold his saddle" in Arizona, it means more than that the cowboy has finished a little transaction in saddletry. It means, according to the workers' guide, that the man has accepted a bribe or otherwise strayed from the paths of honesty.

When a man comes to that narrow pass when he has to sell his saddle, he has already given up his honor. That is the Arizona interpretation of the act and the expression. In recent months, in cities of the "effete East," many a man who has never seen a saddle has "sold his saddle." There is no more than a geographical difference between a cowboy and a public servant, whe'er bereft of honor.

Foresters Collect Cottonwood Trees

Two million cottonwood seedling trees are being collected by the forest service in Platte county, according to John I. Emerson, state director. The trees are growing along the drainage areas of the Loup river public power district canals and on the sandbars of the Platte river.

The trees will be used next spring, along with other species of trees, in planting some 800 miles of field windbreaks on Nebraska farms, according to word received here by County Agent Chester Walters. One to three rows of cottonwoods are planted in each of the shelterbelts which the forest service assists the farmers to establish.

Sorghum Pasturing Regarded Hazardous

Pasturing of sorghums, including sudan grass, is particularly hazardous now that the first frosts have occurred. Chester Walters, extension agent, reports.

looked upon as a safe pasture and forage crop. However, in more recent years it was found that under certain weather conditions, such as drought that suddenly checked its growth, sudan developed sufficient amounts of prussic acid to kill livestock feeding on it.

The cutting and thorough curing of this forage makes it reasonably safe as a feed for livestock. Ensiling made from sorghums should be allowed to complete its fermentation before being fed. All plants belonging to the sorghum family should be regarded as sources of prussic acid poisoning when unusual conditions prevail.

Information from Dr. S. W. Alford, extension livestock sanitation specialist at the Nebraska college of agriculture, indicates that horses are less susceptible to prussic acid poisoning than cattle. Part of this may be due to the limited capacity of the horse's stomach as compared to that of a cow.

Dr. Alford points out that prussic acid kills quickly and no time should be lost in treating affected animals. The sodium thiosulfate and nitrate treatment is recognized as effective when administered intravenously early in the attack.

"We do not know of any evidence originating from a competent and yet disinterested source that any other treatment is satisfactory or that any preventive measures are effective," Dr. Alford concludes.

Early Days In Wayne County Early Days from the Wayne Herald for November 1, 1923: Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist churches are combining to conduct evangelistic services at the community hall. Fire did considerable damage to the Barnard grocery store. Insurance will cover all but about $1,000 of the loss.

The village of Emerson has let contract for construction of a waterworks system at a cost of $10,000. . . J. C. Ecker, editor of the Winside Tribune, has gone west for benefit of his health and his wife is in charge of the paper. . . Men interested in building rural telephone lines out of Wayne met at the Welch & Davis office and elected John Livinghouse chairman and Wm. Fisher secretary. On a committee to investigate feasible plans for the telephone system are F. M. Griffith, J. M. Ross, F. L. Neely, W. H. Gildersteeve and Henry Kellogg. . . Miss Lucy Buffington has returned home for a rest after traveling with the Sherman Stock theatre company. . . Henry Goll who bought considerable land in the west, is here for a visit. . . Grading is proceeding at the rate of a mile a day for the new electric railway from Sioux City to Homer by way of South Sioux City and Dakota City. . . Prof. Wilson of Hoskins, will conduct an old-fashioned spelling contest and proceeds will be applied on the Methodist church debt. . . Farmers near Randolph are harvesting a good crop of sugar beets. They average 13 tons to the acre and sell for $4.20 a ton. . . Homes of Frank Dahlheimer, Fred Hefti and Wm. Benning were entered and money, jewelry and clothing taken. . . Rola Compton was found dead on the bank of the Logan south of Wakefield. The lad had gone hunting and a bullet wound was in his chin and a gun in his hand so officials decided the gun discharged accidentally. From Ponca Journal for November 4, 1890: "This is a high old place, several thousand feet above sea level, 40 miles from the Canadian border and way up on the hills with an air so pure and dry that the Indians elevate their defunct relatives one story higher to keep company with cottonwood poles while the spirits go several grades higher," according to a letter from Fort Peck Indian agency in Montana. "At least that is what the Indians say. We have very lively times here for a country reported to be uninhabited. Such reports are slanderous and show the selfish views of one who was so unkind as to class this country as barren and uninhabited save by the hawk and gentle coyote. The fact is we have some 7,500 neighbors who are willing, nay, anxious, that this country should show heavy census returns as that report materially affects their larder. "The women are very kind and always call once a week while in return for their courtesy we pre-

"Nights, they do not forget us but manifest their feelings in an expressive and musical manner by gathering themselves in bands in their numerous and highly ornamented halls, vulgarly called tepees, accompanying their voices, which in their native power and sweetness far outdo scientific training, to the soul inspiring strains of the kettle drum, soothe us to rest and keep us soothed until daylight. Thousands of dogs, unable to express their emotions, join in the chorus until the answering echoes give back the harmonious sounds. No pauses for refreshments are allowed, until day frees them from the sullen, gray of night and sends them tired and exhausted to their homes to rest. They are too chivalrous to allow us lack of amusements while they sleep, however, and the military routine of business is still carried on while the leaders are enjoying their well earned repose. The children who have enjoyed a refreshing night's rest, rise at daybreak and put in the forenoon for our benefit, and each individual waddin has his work carefully laid out. Some of them draw artistic figures of men and animals on the sides of buildings. Others carefully fill up the keyholes to doors, thereby keeping out the raw air, and we are in no danger of catching cold. Again, others go around gathering up such things as we may have been careless enough to leave outside and we have no further trouble in regard to their safety. "I could say much more in vindication of these noble people, but at present time forbids that all their kindness be noted."

Mrs. Robert Nelson, 51, died October 19 at West Point.
