To Defeat Congressmen

SIDNEY Hillman's CIO committee plans to spend gobts of money, drawn from hellish union members, to promote the fourth term. It is to be done on the specious ground of furthering education. As a matter of fact, it is to be done to tighten organized labor's grip on the government. The Norfolk Daily News bases the following comment on the committee's reported intention to spend $200,000 in Nebraska to defeat its republican candidates for congress.

"We don't know as to the amount, but there can be little doubt that the CIO will send into this state whatever money it can in the hope of defeating our congressmen. We know this because they haven't done Sidney Hillman's bidding, and that means Sidney Hillman will do what he can to see that they are not returned to Washington. For what Sidney Hillman hopes to accomplish by the use of the millions in his political slush fund is the return to Washington of men who will knuckle to him and his CIO political action committee and his Communist dominated American labor party.

"Nebraskans would do well to remember this when the effects of Hillman's lush spending become apparent in this state. They would do well also to remember that one of the reasons Sidney Hillman is fighting our congressmen is that they voted for the law which sought to outlaw strikes in war plants taken over by the government, the law which Attorney General Biddle is now using to prosecute the Philadelphia strikers who refused to return to work when the government took over the transportation system.

"They should recall that another reason for Hillman's dislike of our congressmen is that they are opposing the scheme to put our highly paid war workers on a pension as high as $35 a week during such time as they choose to remain idle after giving up their profitable war plant jobs.

"Nebraskans, who are certain, are in sympathy with our congressmen on both of these measures. They should not let Sidney Hillman pull the wool over their eyes."

Airport Essential

THROUGH its president, R. G. Fuelberth, the Century Aviation Company has issued a statement defining its attitude with reference to its use of the local airport. Members of the organization express a desire to rent the property if permanency is guaranteed by purchase or by extension of the present lease beyond next May 1, the expiration date. They point out that acknowledgment of the need is not enough, that provision to satisfy it must be made sufficiently early to accommodate the company's plans.

It is mentioned that the present site is wholly satisfactory, less costly and probably more convenient than a new one. The company prefers to continue to headquarters in Wayne, and suggests that most wide-awake citizens realize that due preparation for this latest means of transportation is indispensable to a live and progressive community.

What the company wants is assurance from the city in order to map its future. This seems reasonable. It would appear in order to find out the practical thing that can be done, and then take steps to do it. An airport is vital, and definiteness cannot be postponed long without endangering large and evident advantages.

A late survey by George Gallup reveals that if the election were held today the vote by mid-western farmers would be two to one in favor of Dewey. Typical farmer objections point, as reported, to codding labor unions; too many government controls, too many costly and interfering Washington bureaus and wastefulness in using funds for non-military projects. The farmer recoils from government regimentation, because if he succeeds he must be independent and do his own planning. Gallup merely verifies what has been apparent. If the election were left exclusively to farmers Roosevelt would not receive enough votes to use in waving farewell to White House satellites.

William Hard, author and student of international affairs, writing for a current magazine, cautions against peace agreements that do not include small as well as large nations. This is about the way Gov. Dewey, republican candidate, figures out future international relationships to insure satisfaction and enduring peace. Hard is anxious to see the bungling that followed World war one avoided in coming settlements.

Putting off official action until after election in order to curry popular favor does not fool thinking people. Washington rates the electorate more dumb than it is though it does show some evidence of superficiality by giving Washington credit for more sound statesmanship than it frequently manifests. People are disheartened quite as much as piqued by attempts to befog issues or sidestep an unpleasant course on the eve of the vote harvest.

We have on our desk a leaflet from the so-called "National Citizens' Political Action Committee" designed to beguile voters into perpetuating the Roosevelt regime. This committee is the CIO in disguise, and its presentation reeks with designing bunk. It essays to speak in behalf of all groups, but a safe policy suggests going in the opposite direction from which it attempts to lead.

Respect for the highest office in the land manifestly causes Washington reporters to soft-pedal criticism of the president. How far news writers may go in following such a noble purpose without deceiving the public is a delicate question to decide.

Drew Pearson, columnist, annoys the president. The columnist was the spark that led the president to deny writing a letter to Wilkie, later admitting that he wrote it.

We hope the campaign to save paper extends to government agencies, curtailing the often needless volumes of printed and mimeographed matter sent to newspapers and others.

COURTESY.
The Saturday Evening Post gives editorial emphasis to penalties that will be exacted in postwar days for unnecessary rudeness in handling the public's war-time needs. Goods have not been plentiful and the labor problem has been acute, but they are not valid excuses for failure to keep up the American standard of courtesy in satisfying business wants. Says the Post in conclusion: "Friday day is coming when the war-time both of our ways will be over, and 10 or 12 million servicemen will be demobilized. There will again be competition for jobs, laundries and filling stations will again be seeking customers. There will also be new laundries, new filling stations, new stores, new automobile-repair shops, new paint-pressing establishments, for some of the enterprising young men returning to civilian life will of course be setting up in business on their own. They will be smart enough to know that courtesy is always a winning technique for a new business. They will find an eager clientele among a lot of people who won't easily forget, when peace comes, the unnecessary arrogance, sometimes impudence, which is so often dished out to them during these war years."
