Free AFTER 35 years of writing experience in Washington, Columnist Press David Lawrence, in the course of a review, concludes that an "informed opinion is the best assurance of representative government." That means a free press, and a free press not alone in the United States, but everywhere, is indispensable to human freedom. The Omaha World-Herald comments:

"However hot the argument, Americans can rest assured that it will proceed to a bloodless and mutually agreeable solution, so long as free men retain the right of free and full discussion; with the press and radio privileged not only to record majority opinion, but the isolated views of the lowliest citizen as well."

"But note the current trouble spots around the world, where fighting flares and revolt simmers. Note, too, that almost without exception, the trouble festerers in lands where none but the rulers' opinion is permitted, where none but the official 'news items' are granted circulation."

"Free speech, free press, free people. These three march together. They constitute a close trinity, one in which all sustain injury if one suffers."

Columnist Louis Bromfield expresses the belief that lack of understanding between Russia and the rest of the world is due to inflexible press censorship. He says among other things:

"Censorship, like an iron curtain, has always been the policy of the Russian communist government, both with her own people and with regard to news going to the outside world."

"The communist government has shown a fear, indeed, almost a terror, of having the Russian people discover what freedom and genuine democracy really is."

"Clearly communist officials neither want American officials to discover what was really going on inside Russia nor the people in those areas, and in particular, the people of Russia, to discover what was going on in the world outside. This the Russian people will never discover from the communist press or officials, save in versions colored to suit the purposes" of the small minority which rules Russia with a despotic hand, quite as ruthless in its methods as the hand of fascism."

Despairing of ways to carry on with labor troubles all about, Andrew J. Higgins, New Orleans boat builder, is reported to have scrapped his 25-million-dollar reconversion program. His plan was to make pleasure boats, commercial craft and building blocks. It would appear to an outsider that Higgins, rather than battle with the demands of unioners, simply acquiesced by folding up and quitting. The workers evidently intended merely to force suspension and make going so disagreeable for the manufacturer that he would surrender. He did so by giving up, virtually inviting workers to find jobs elsewhere. Closing plants is hard on the public, but it might keep employing heads from going crazy.

The movement in congress to unify command of the country's fighting forces finds opposition among different groups. Each official leader is naturally partial to his branch. While unbiased observers acknowledge the value of the air, naval and ground forces, they can see the wisdom of more coordination under one head. The terrific atomic bomb will not do away with other means of defense, but it may greatly modify needs from other directions. Its destructive qualities are so far nowhere matched.

President Truman's idea that wages may be raised without raising commodity prices does not make sense to a rural editor, and leads one to conclude he has been influenced by self-seeking groups away from the middle ground he seemed to follow early in his presidency. If he is as mistaken in that as he is in wishing to grant federal pay of $25 per week to idlers for a certain period, he is getting ready to board the political toboggan. He is on the wrong track to gain nation-wide popularity.

Representatives of labor and industry will serve themselves as well as the balance of the public in their conference in Washington this week by disposing of disputed points and uniting wholeheartedly in a movement to restore full production. Will a majority exercise the sense to do that? That is the vital question.

Only six weeks before Christmas, and by that time many more boys and girls who have been engaged in the grim business of war, should be reunited with homes for the festive occasion. Sadly, there will always be some empty chairs. Many will be crippled. All on hand for the holidays will enliven home spirits.

Close police surveillance is necessary to prevent crimes and misdemeanors, and prevention is the best antidote for social disorder. And a policeman must have qualities of courage and wise discrimination to meet the demands of public service.

Lieut. Gen. Yamashita, on trial for Japanese war atrocities, is doubtless too caloused to feel the weight of prosecution or his likely fate. A beast of his low type has no conscience to disturb.

AT FOREIGN PORTS.

"Soldiers are held in foreign ports for want of ships tied up by strikes," says Congressman Karl Stefan, who adds: "These strikes affect British and American ports simultaneously." Soldiers ready to come home are held at foreign ports awaiting transportation. Many are slated for discharge, and they are anxious to get into civilian clothes and into civilian jobs. Instead, they are compelled to loaf away time that could be better spent in civilian employment. The fighting over is over; they are eager to become adjusted to home pursuits. A reasonable suggestion is that naval vessels could be advantageously employed in bringing back soldiers who are ready to come. The boys were hurried to battle fronts. Now they want to be hurried back into private life.

FOR THE LAST TIME AMERICA

The light of Liberty—our Torch of Freedom—shines again through the night, a symbol of the Victory our fighting men have won. How long it will burn will depend on the earnestness with which we live to make another war impossible. Meanwhile—for the last time, America—we are urged to investment in bonds to finance the rehabilitation and hospitalization of those who brought the light of Liberty back to the world. They've finished their job—let's finish ours. Invest in their future and yours now.

Book Week Now International.

CHILDREN'S Book Week, to be held this year from November 11 to November 17, is fast becoming an international celebration according to Frederiek Melcher, editor of Publishers' Weekly and chairman of the Children's Book Council. Last year many countries, including Australia, New Zealand, Brazil, Russia, and England held Book Week celebrations despite wartime handicaps. This year these countries and many more will have extensive Book Week displays and projects.

American children's books play an important part in foreign exhibits. During the war, thousands of our books were sent as gifts through the Women's Council for Post-War Europe 'Treasure Chest' plan. In response to the success of this venture and to the hunger for books in all the liberated countries, thousands of Treasure Chests are being planned as part of this year's Book Week celebrations. They will be sent to China, Belgium, Greece, and other countries where the need for children's books far outweighs the scanty supply.

Also, in this country there are hundreds of thousands of children who have never seen anything but their school books. In view of the constantly increasing attractiveness and importance of American children's books, the Council is applying its slogan "more books in the hands of more children" both at home and abroad this year. Book Week celebrations, with displays of books, speeches, school and library programs and parties, are being planned for communities all over the country.

If we told you how you could keep 100 kids off the street for an evening with just $10 would you be interested? Well, you can do just that by giving $10 to the Wayne public library to buy children's books. The librarian will be glad to help you pick out the good books, the ones the youngsters want. They'll be marked with a bookplate, too, if you wish. Try it, books and children are an investment with good returns. How about suggesting this to your club?

The state meeting of the Library association will be held in Lincoln, November 9 and 10. Mrs. F. A. Mildner, your librarian, will attend the meeting.

Please come into the library next week to see the book display in the children's department. We have been buying for several months with this particular occasion in mind and the children are going to be thrilled with the fine lot of new books for them. As usual it will be a contest to see who gets first chance at them as soon as they are ready to be loaned out.
