

For Firm to Market Roads Spreading Over State—Story of Church Tyranny—In Residence Sections.

The state-wide movement for farm-to-market roads is encouraging. As pointed out by W. W. Motter, front secretary of the Nebraska Good Roads association, it is as important to facilitate getting food to market as it is to spread food production.

Farmers in the middle west need easier and more certain transportation advantages. They need hard-surfaced roads, free from mud and kept clear of snow.

Old-Time Religion. The story of Christmas observance in ultra-orthodox fashion when churches were often more tyrannical than spiritual, is told in a current magazine.

In the old times, often a misguided preacher, supposedly following in the footsteps of the forgiving Jesus, belittled so much about heavenly wrath that he quite overlooked qualities of mercy and love.

In the story mentioned, the organist, shocked and outraged by a sermon that did not make sense, caused a riot of dissent.

The institution of religion fell victim of terrorizing restraint under Hitler in Germany and Stalin in Russia. Tyrant Nero was death to Christianity in ancient Rome.

The institution of religion fell victim of terrorizing restraint under Hitler in Germany and Stalin in Russia.

We are a long way from the standard lived and expressed by the humble Nazarene. But thanks to the spirit of progress, the modern church has been stripped of its cruel materiality.

Night Parking. We understand the ordinance which prohibited parking at night along residence streets, was repealed some years ago.

The basis for the new program will be the present personnel classification. Every marine has been assigned a primary specification serial number. Under the new procedure there will be no branch or special warrants, and administrative control will be centralized so that the present complexities can be eliminated.

Rank titles have been simplified. There were 34 different rank designations under the branch system. The new method will reduce this number to seven, one for each pay grade. In addition, the "rocket" chevron, now worn by "line" personnel will be adopted for all categories. Taxes and the Budget
SOME members of congress favor a 20 per cent cut in the income tax. Others oppose tax reduction until the national budget has been balanced. It is probable both objectives could be reached if useless costs were abolished.

There are certain indispensable appropriations to facilitate production, like rural electrification, improved roads and harnessing rivers for irrigation and power. Adequate compensation to soldier veterans is deserved and necessary.

But subsidies are generally regarded unnecessary. Getting rid of many bureaus would pile up big savings. Dismissing all non-productive hangers-on would be a big step in the direction of a balanced budget. Shutting off propaganda mills and the huge consumption of paper would help.

There are numerous ways in which savings could be effected without blocking needed improvements or interrupting progress or denying veterans rights to which they are entitled.

People would no doubt first insist on a balanced budget, and then a paring down of the tax burden in harmony with federal revenues. In reporting that Representative Joseph Martin of Massachusetts will be the next speaker of the republican house, Congressman Karl Stefan says Martin is in favor of both balancing the budget and lowering federal taxes. It is believed exercise of due economy will gain the two ends.

To Await New Congress
J. E. Lawrence, editor of the Lincoln Star, writes from Los Angeles where he has been sojourning, that the Pacific coast is experiencing an emotional upset on account of numerous strikes, whereas normally it would be imbibing the spirit of holiday good cheer.

Mr. Lawrence deplors the plight of the innocent and helpless public, but he sees no chance for effective legislation in Washington until the new congress takes over in January. He says in conclusion: "Those most closely related to the present struggle undoubtedly have given due consideration to the fact that in the matter of individual membership and even more in the matter of party control anything attempted before the Eightieth congress moves in either would have to be confirmed by letter for it or done over again. This is one of the aggravating difficulties of America's governmental machinery in which nothing stands still and very little remains fixed in the permanent sense.

"Between now and the first of the year the American people must cast aside their emotions and put on their thinking caps. They must give consideration to the protection not only of labor and management but to the nation. They must express themselves so clearly as to be articulate in the formation of a labor policy eliminating the abuses of an element of labor leadership that has plagued the most productive country in the world. Anything short of this is failure—failure not only of government in the official sense but failure on the part of the public itself.

"It is more blessed to give than to receive." The giver—the one who does for others—is always enriched more than recipients. Making little ones happy with enough but not too much, brings soul buoyancy that cannot otherwise be experienced. A simple gift that brings joy to a child, is most satisfying. Over-indulgence is disheartening. Wisely directed giving—substantials as well as thoughts—puts one in tune with heaven.

We wonder how much trouble is caused employers and employes by "straw" bosses—bosses who have no investment and no personal responsibility—bosses who abuse authority and like to show off. We wonder if closer personal contacts between mine owners and mine workers wouldn't create better understanding and more harmonious relationships.

The world is peopled by different races, different colors, different temperaments. They are so unlike, they quarrel a great deal, usually without reason. Contrary to some indications, none owns the earth and none should try to dominate it. In another thousand years, they should be able to get along in peace separately if not together.

Fewer pictures of John L. Lewis in magazines and newspapers would ease feelings somewhat. In fact, if his face were not allowed in print anywhere and if stories of the strike were played down, the boss' importance might shrink. He seems to relish attention, even if it is unfavorable.

Anything President Truman and his advisers can do to subdue Lewis and hasten end of the coal strike will have the unqualified endorsement of the American people. Anyone who stands in the way of an early settlement invites popular disfavor.

Too bad teachers in Minneapolis have had to resort to a strike. Impressionable children will be glad to note this manifestation of very human qualities. They may be pleased to snatch an excuse to emulate.

An ancient philosopher said in effect that language is frequently used as a vehicle to conceal facts rather than to convey truth. Succeeding generations have not permitted the practice to perish.

A recent magazine article emphasizes the thought that life is too brief and too many things are to be done to allow peace of mind to be upset by trifling personal differences.

GOOD FAITH.
Russia is particularly interested in having atomic bomb secrets disclosed and having the United States join in a movement for disarmament. The soviet union will have to lift its iron curtain, reveal what it is doing in military operations and give more freedom to foreign newspaper correspondents to inquire freely. The United States is not likely to disarm and reduce war equipment and be caught unprepared as it was twenty-five years ago. That costly experience will not be repeated if the American government exercises the sense justified by the light of the past. There is no danger to other nations from the atomic bomb if they will deal fairly and avoid aggression. It is in safest possible hands. Only to a nation seeking ruthless world domination does it offer a threat. Bomb secrets should be kept securely covered, and war preparations should not be reduced to the danger point until every strong nation gives proof of good faith.

flated his boat and set out upon the turbulent stream. With his companions, Fremont navigated the boat over three narrows into succession, and through narrows only three to five feet wide. He wrote in his journal: "We were so delighted with the performance of our boat, and so confident in her powers that we would not have hesitated to leap a fall of ten feet with her." They were a little too confident. A short distance down the river they came to another canyon, narrower and much more formidable than the previous ones. Emboldened by their earlier success, they determined to run it, and despite the rough going, and their many narrow escapes, it looked as though they were going to make it. In fact, they were sure of it. That is where they made their mistake. Let Lt. Fremont tell the story:

"We cleared rock after rock, and shot past fall after fall, our little boat seeming to play with the cataract. We became flushed with success, and familiar with the danger; and, yielding to the excitement of the occasion, broke forth into a Canadian boat song. Singing, or rather shouting, we dashed along; and were, I believe, in the midst of the chorus, when the boat struck a concealed rock immediately at the foot of a fall, which whirled her over in an instant." They salvaged most of their equipment, but the boat was a total wreck and had to be left behind. Fremont was a dogged character, however, and when they got down into Nebraska, below the fork in the river, he determined to have another try at navigating it. His men shot some buffalo, and from the skin of four of them they made a bull boat. This was a good boat, and drew only four inches. Unfortunately, the Platte didn't offer four inches.

So the expedition continued on foot across Nebraska, arriving at Peter Sarpy's trading post at Bellevue on the morning of October 1, 1842. No wonder Fremont wrote that it was "with a feeling of pleasure" that he heard the tinkling of cow bells at the settlements across the Missouri. It's a long walk.

OUT OF OLD NEBRASKA
By James C. Olson
Superintendent, State Historical Society
Probably no state in the union is more closely associated with the homestead movement than Nebraska. The first quarter section taken under the Act of 1862 was located in Gage county—the Freeman Homestead National Monument near Beatrice now marks the site—and more homesteads have been located in Nebraska than in any other state.

In addition, a special kind of homestead law was enacted to cover the sand hills region of western Nebraska. The sand hills were—and are—unexcelled as ranch country, but they simply weren't suitable for the general type of farming carried out on the average 160-acre homestead; and, on the other hand, 160 acres were not enough for cattle raising. As a consequence, the homesteaders avoided the sand hills.

The idea of an enlarged homestead was developed as a means of settling the sand hills region, and on April 28, 1904, largely as a result of the efforts of Congressman Moses P. Kinkaid, the congress passed a law permitting a homestead in western Nebraska of 640 acres instead of the usual 160.

The result was an almost immediate influx of settlers into the area. On June 27, 1904, the day before the Kinkaid law, as it is known, went into effect, 600 homesteaders were in O'Neill preparing to file their claims. The hotels were jammed beyond capacity, and several hundred spent the night in the streets. At Alliance, 3,000 strangers were said to be in town. The Frontier, published at O'Neill, reported that at Broken Bow some of the cattle barons who had been using the free land for grazing their herds sent a number of their cowboys to file on land which they hoped to file on land which they hoped to continue to use. The cowboys created so much disturbance that a National Guard company was called out to preserve order.

The enthusiasm evidenced during the first few days was no mere flash in the pan, but was sustained. In the first year of the Kinkaid act, homestead entries in Nebraska increased from 491,000 acres to 1,310,000 acres, and the next year the total jumped to 4,778,000 acres. Within ten years almost all the remaining government land open to entry had been taken.

The "Kinkaiders," as the early homesteaders of the sand hills called themselves, developed a considerable sense of unity. That spirit was fostered by picnics and fairs, with programs of music, sports, speeches, "experience" meetings at which Kinkaid homesteaders could tell of their trials and tribulations, and exhibits of produce grown on Kinkaid homesteads.

Of one such fair, held at Taylor in September, 1909, The Loup County News said, "The Kinkaid homesteaders' produce exhibited was excellent. In fact most of the pedition was completed at Niobrara, where a military escort was provided. The members of the expedition didn't think much of their military escort, however. The bulk of it consisted of two companies of infantry, made up largely of paroled rebel soldiers—"galvanized yankees" as they were known in the North—and some of the men were surly that a small band of Indians would be able to capture the entire train, soldiers and all.

After six weary months, during which they had more than one encounter with hostile Indians (although not with the dire results predicted), they reached their destination. A second and last expedition was organized the following year, 1866.

The Sawyer Road, as it came to be called, never caught on. It was too near the great Platte Valley route through central Nebraska, and completion of the Union Pacific railroad in 1869 definitely sounded its death knell as a road to the Pacific. The discovery of gold in the Black Hills revived the Nebraska section of the road though, and during the Seventies a number of caravans of gold seekers crossed the northeastern part of the state. These caravans had about them an air of mystery. The Black Hills had been reserved as a hunting ground for the Indians, and whites were forbidden to enter them. When news of the gold got abroad, however, it became well-nigh impossible to keep the whites out.

In order to fool the soldiers, the wagons going across Nebraska would be labelled "O'Neill," with the gold seekers setting themselves up as settlers bound for that area. But once at O'Neill, down would come the signs, and the party would head for the Black Hills.

One of the most famous of these expeditions was the Gordon party, which made the trip across Nebraska in the fall of 1874. Part of its fame rested on the fact that it included the first woman ever to enter the Black Hills, and part on the fact its members were arrested by United States troops for trespassing on Indian hunting grounds.

Even though they had "O'Neill's Colony" tacked on their wagons in large letters, they fooled no one, and the Nebraska newspapers of the time remarked openly that their destination was the Black Hills. The government took action, and in the spring of 1875 soldiers from Fort Robinson were sent to bring the party out of the hills.

The men had to walk, but the woman was provided with a government mule.

produce was as good as, and some much better than was shown at the state fair at Lincoln last week."

Someone even wrote a song about the Kinkaiders. The words were set to the music of "My Maryland," and it lived among an old settlers' reunion. Dr. Louise Pound, professor emerita of English at the University of Nebraska, has included it in her syllabus of folk songs of Nebraska and the central west. A stanza and a chorus will give the general idea:

You ask what place I like the best, The sand hills, oh the old sand hills; The place Kinkaiders make their home And prairie chickens freely roam.

Then let us all with hearts sincere Thank him for what has brought us here, And for the homestead law he made, This noble Moses P. Kinkaid.

OUT OF OLD NEBRASKA
By James C. Olson
Superintendent, State Historical Society
Nebraska, in the course of its long history as the nation's great road west, has furnished temporary haven for many harried and hard pressed people, although probably none so harried or hard-pressed as the band of Mormons who wintered here in 1846-47, just one hundred years ago, on their way to Utah.

Driven out of Nauvoo, Illinois, in the spring of 1846, they made their way across Iowa during the summer to the Missouri river at Kanesville (the old name for Council Bluffs). Crossing the river, they set up "Winter Quarters" at what is now Florence, a residential suburb of Omaha.

It was a rough winter, and over 600 of the emigrant Mormons died before spring came on and Brigham Young could lead them westward. Their hardship and suffering are commemorated by an impressive monument in bronze by Arvid T. Fairbanks, unveiled in 1936 in Mormon Cemetery in Florence.

The population of Winter Quarters in 1846 and for a couple of years afterward has been estimated at from 5,000 to 10,000 people. In any event, it was an important Mormon settlement in Nebraska. It was not the only one of Mormons, an advance party for the main body, spent the winter of 1846-47 at what is now Niobrara Island state park.

There were about 60 families in that little caravan. They had struck westward from the Missouri during the summer, seeking a place where they might live in peace. They were short of supplies, and when they got to Pawnee station, a military outpost on the site of the present city of Columbus, they took a job harvestingly some government grain that had been left standing in the fields by workers who had fled from fear of being raided by the Pawnees.

While working for the government, they got word from Brigham Young that they had better not try to go any farther, but should look for a place to spend the winter. Some Pawnees told them about the spot on the Niobrara. In fact, they took the Mormons up there. (The Niobrara region was the Pawnees' old stamping ground.)

It was an ideal spot, but the winter was unusually severe, and 17 members of the party died. They are memorialized by the Newell Knight monument in the state park, and a centennial celebration of their encampment was held there last month. The next spring those who were still alive joined the main body and went on to Utah.

Still another Mormon settlement in Nebraska was in Nance county, east of the present town of Genoa. This was established in 1857 by 100 families from St. Louis. They took over about 2,000 acres of land and engaged actively in the cultivation of crops. The settlement flourished for a few years but resentment by the Pawnees on whose reservation they were located, and frequent raids by the Sioux led the brethren to abandon the enterprise.

Finally, beginning in 1864, the old river ghost town of Wyoming, seven miles above Nebraska City, served for a number of years as an important outfitting point for the Mormon migration to Utah.

SECURITY.
"How much security can a government provide without spawning parasites?" asks a current magazine article. Getting much for little without sense of responsibility, eats away the foundation of stability and security. The aftermath of flush times, accompanied by a spending spree, is weakening to the point of frequent dependence on government. When the public treasury does something an individual should do for himself, vital human fiber is impaired. When an individual will not work or produce even at extravagant wages, he is not only neglecting an opportunity, but he is grooming himself to become a candidate for federal aid. A too benevolent government must be careful to avoid fashioning a feeble state of society through helping the indigent and thrifless. Self-dependence is what makes people strong. It is what develops sturdy, resourceful character. It is essential in reconstruction as it is in war. The need is for more individualism, more self-reliance.

OUT OF OLD NEBRASKA
By James C. Olson
Superintendent, State Historical Society
Probably no state in the union is more closely associated with the homestead movement than Nebraska. The first quarter section taken under the Act of 1862 was located in Gage county—the Freeman Homestead National Monument near Beatrice now marks the site—and more homesteads have been located in Nebraska than in any other state.

In addition, a special kind of homestead law was enacted to cover the sand hills region of western Nebraska. The sand hills were—and are—unexcelled as ranch country, but they simply weren't suitable for the general type of farming carried out on the average 160-acre homestead; and, on the other hand, 160 acres were not enough for cattle raising. As a consequence, the homesteaders avoided the sand hills.

The idea of an enlarged homestead was developed as a means of settling the sand hills region, and on April 28, 1904, largely as a result of the efforts of Congressman Moses P. Kinkaid, the congress passed a law permitting a homestead in western Nebraska of 640 acres instead of the usual 160.

16-TO-1 HISTORY

In his book, "The American," which is a novelized biography of the late governor of Illinois, John Peter Altgeld, Howard Fast relates a fact that may surprise some of the followers of the Boy Orator of the Platte, in his free silver battle.

It was John Peter Altgeld, according to Fast, who organized the great movement for "sixteen to one" and he did it by enlisting Bathhouse John Coughlin and his beery hoodlums of the lower Chicago districts to provide the hoopla for the early rallies.

"Doc," the author quotes Altgeld as saying to his gambler associate, Joe Martin, "I want you to work on Coughlin. Bathhouse John's been an alderman so long he's prepared to die that way. Well, start him thinking. Talk his own language. Maybe he can even be mayor some day. He'd like to think about that. Let him get out the torchlight parades and beer parties—that'll be along about June. Never mind my name, I want to be out of this, but I want the country to start watching Illinois."

And so they held a silver convention at Springfield, and Bathhouse John Coughlin, "who had staged more torchlight parades and beer parties than he cared to remember, planned the convention from beginning to end," says the author.

It was Bathhouse John who led the demonstration that stormed the Altgeld home, with an ovation such as is seldom seen.

With the help of the scum of the levee, Altgeld got the "sixteen to one" issue before the people, but to his disgust, William Jennings Bryan stood it from him with his cross of gold speech, and the little governor was left in the cold.

He wanted Richard Bland for a candidate, but he accepted Bryan and went down to defeat with him.

WINTER HOG PRICES

Hog raisers, commission men and packers, in fact, all interested in hogs, are studying past records of winter market trends for some indication of what to expect from here on. Owing to upset conditions in the livestock and meat industries resulting from the war and price controls, price and production trends in many instances in recent weeks and months have been abnormal, making past records of little value.

The hog market in November this year is an example. Prices in that month averaged higher than in October. This has happened before, but not very often. In fact, the last time farmers were paid higher prices in November than in October was back in 1922. Other years in recent history when November had a higher hog market than October were 1917, 1908 and 1904.

In other words, only four other times in 46 years of market records has the November average been above the October level. Consequently, of what value a comparison of December prices would be is of some doubt. In the 46 years the December price has been higher than November 17 times, the same once, and lower 28 times.

"IS IT, OR ISN'T IT?"

Five hundred builders all over the United States were asked: Has the Wyatt building program stalled? If so, why?

Some of the answers were funny and grim, according to Pathfinder magazine, which quotes a few. A Lincoln, Neb., contractor fixed a roof for a customer. He spent four hours finding the material. His carpenter did the work in 20 minutes.

Here's one from Chicago: "Before a contractor in this area can finish a house he has to go through 150 operations involving 300 form letters, conferences of contracts. Twenty-eight of these are complicated operations involving the Federal Housing agency, but having actually nothing to do with building a house."

A Lincoln business man, quoted over WJAG, says he needs one hundred homes for his employees. Formerly he could build a nice duplex for $3,700. "Now it would cost him $12,000 to $13,000. If he rented to a G. I. or anyone else, he would have to get $125 a month for it, where he is now getting $35. The building, constructed of poor materials, will be worth very little at the end of twenty years. He wonders what would happen if he should advertise: "Wanted: Half a million dollars to invest in a project that will lose money. In 20 years the investment will be worthless."

Finds Buck Deer After Long Hunt

Bill Falls from Moldy Book Found in Deserted Home

Home was the hunter, Seattle Police Officer Ed. Crippen, after five days and 50 miles hiking in a vain search for deer in eastern Washington. As he prepared to clean a rifle, Officer Crippen raised it to sight through a window and froze. A three-point buck deer in the garden met his gaze. It took willpower but the policeman slowly lowered his gun. His home is in a game preserve.

"I shot an arrow into the air, it fell to earth I do know where," paraphrased Pete Stewart, Vincennes, Ind. Mr. Stewart, treated at a hospital for a scalp wound explained that he had borrowed his son's bow and arrow and shot a shaft upward. It fell straight down.

Ritchie Roberts, a Clinton, Ill., carpenter, got more compensation than he bargained for in doing repair work at a deserted house. He paused in his work to look through a moldy book and out fell a $10 71-year-old federal reserve note.

Parking in Wichita's business district was "on the house" Armistice day. Yet the city collected $730 from parking meters, filled by motorists who didn't know about the free parking on legal holidays. Traffic patrolmen didn't get the word either, until headquarters ordered them to quit issuing pink tickets to parking "violators."

Chicago hunters who went to suburban Deerfield to hunt pheasants have found no pheasants but have been fined for trying. Six of 15 seized for violating a Deerfield law against hunting "or attempting to hunt" within the city limits, were fined $25 and costs each. The other nine will be arraigned later. ## To Open Season In Friday Game

Wayne College Schedule In Basketball Given By Coach Emery.

Wayne State Teachers College basketball team will open the season this Friday evening, December 5, when they meet the high powered Old Home Bread team from Sioux City in the college gym. The Sioux City team has an experienced aggregation composed of former college stars now residing in Sioux City.

Wayne college basketball drills opened with 44 men reporting for the initial practice. The following former lettermen are on the squad: Lawrence Retzlaff, Pioneer; Hi Hanson, Moorhead; Iowa; Fritz Reifert, Hartington; Fred Lethby, Norfolk; Rod Love, Wayne. Athletic Director Don B. Emery will coach the varsity and Gerold Elyson, the B team.

Coach Emery cut the squad into two groups of 20 players each, and will make another cut this week after mid-week scrimmages have been conducted. The squad lacks height but seems to be blessed with speed. If the Wildcats can hit from the floor they may make it tough for the opposition this year. ## Wish to Organize Dairy Association

About 15 Wayne county farmers are interested in organizing a new dairy herd improvement association, according to County Agent Walter R. Herder, who wants to secure names and addresses of dairymen who would like to meet with the group. A number of Wayne county farmers belonged to a dairy herd improvement association prior to drought years.

The dairy sires used in the Norfolk Dairy Breeders association can be proved at an earlier age if the Wayne breeders can furnish records on the cows serviced by the Norfolk association.

The 11 dairy herd associations in Nebraska serve farmers in 31 counties. Represented in the associations are dairy farmers with herds ranging in size from five to 100 or more animals. Dixon, Madison and Cumby are counties in this part of the state having dairy associations.

The state committees of the American Legion appointed by Commander Dick Marvel and approved by the department executive committee list two Wayne Legionnaires. They are William A. Crossland on legislation committee and W. A. Lerner, rehabilitation committee. Mr. Crossland serves a one-year term and Mr. Lerner a three-year term.

Next regular meeting of post is December 11th at 8 p. m. in the Legion rooms. How many times have you attended your post meetings the past year? Each member is requested to bring a fiction book (new or old) to be distributed to the local hospitals for patients during period of convalescence.

How many eligible veterans have you personally contacted concerning joining your post? Our membership goal for 1947 is 300, the largest in District 3.

Doane Holds Top Place for Season

Wayne Wildcats in Sixth Position in Football For This Season.

Doane college came out on top in the first post-war Nebraska collegiate football season. The champions started the season with a dark outlook for a winning football team but proved their strength when the season got under way.

Nebraska Wesleyan sewed up second place by trouncing Chadron Teachers 33-0. They went through conference play undefeated but two tie ball games cost them a chance at the title.

The Wildcats finished in sixth place after winning their first two conference tilts. The failure to produce extra points after touchdowns in the Doane and Kearney games cost them a chance to finish in the league higher than they did. Doane won 7-6 and Kearney won 14-12.

Extension Clubs Have Projects

Extension clubs are conducting several worthwhile projects. One is a Mary Ellen Brown scholarship to help worthy farm boys and girls in their college education, started Mrs. Lloyd Bohmer, county chairman, who spoke on a Norfolk radio program recently. Miss Brown has been very helpful in 4-H work. Last year Nebraska women gave $1,117.53 toward the scholarship. Each member gave one cent for the Penny for Friendship club and this realized the sum of $190.06 for purchase of garden seeds which were sent to England. An optional project is that of raising money to help a Chinese student, Miss Mei Tu Chen, who attends college in this state. Clubs gave $600 for the cause last year.

The Omaha Chamber of Commerce will give recognition to outstanding accomplishments of rural women in the state February 20. Each county makes nominations for honors.

Wayne county has 13 women's clubs working on the project lessons this year. The January 16 lesson will be on family economics.

A party was held in the evening for all members and their dates. Dancing and table games were offered as entertainment.

Students are casting ballots to select the boy and the girl who in their opinion, have the best and most "likeable" personality. The poll is being conducted by the Harbinger staff. Certain qualifications deemed necessary have been listed and they are to be used as a standard in determining candidates worthy of ballots. The titles of Lena the Hyena and Sad Sack will be bestowed upon the winners. The winners will be announced in the December 13 issue of the Harbinger.

THE KNOT-HOLE. Vol. 3 Wayne, Neb., Thurs., Dec. 5, 1946 No. 29. First, you back up to the other end of Australia to get a running start. After that, the 12,000 mile hop in a plane is nothing. You can save many a piece of glass if your storm door is equipped with a Sta-Close door closer. The Sta-Close keeps the door from banging, closes it quietly and effectively. A displaced person is one who gets up out of his chair in a hotel lobby long enough to buy a package of cigarettes. If you have been disappointed about storm windows this year, remember you can still do the next best thing by covering screens and screen doors with Nu-Via glass. A few yards of Nu-Via glass and a few feet of screen moulding will assure you of a much warmer house than you will have without them. Try some, today! It's all very peculiar to us, but when only half the 60,000,000 employed were working, the stores were full of the stuff they made. Still looking for a few sacks of cement? Look no farther for we can furnish. A local driver of a new job with hardwood bumpers, trots a horn at the day dreaming pedestrian and in addition cries, "Timber!" Carhart Lumber Co. Phone 147 Wayne

Most Taverns Do More Than Barely Keep Within the Law

Nebraska has one of the best liquor control laws in the nation. This law, together with rules adopted by the liquor control commission, clearly specifies the rights and duties of all beer licensees.

Too many licensees once seemed mainly interested in knowing, "How far can I go and not get in trouble?"

The situation steadily improves. Now most beer retailers are well informed on the liquor control laws and rules. They seek to obey every one—not simply because they fear penalties but because they know careful law observance is the surest way to win and hold public good will.

This improvement in tavern operations can be partly credited to the Nebraska Committee's program of Self-Regulation. Eight years of this program has helped build in Nebraska one of the beer industry's most valued assets—a good name.
