

Rural Publisher Pastes — Loss of Sight Not Allowed to Interfere with Late F. O. Edgcombe's Worthy Achievements — Whole-some Sport.

The death of Frank O. Edgcombe, 83, for 53 years editor and publisher of the Geneva Signal, marks the passing of the state's most remarkable country editor. Though blinded by a shotgun accident in 1892, he kept up his courage and activity and became prominent and influential in state and national newspaper circles.

Mr. Edgcombe was venture-some notwithstanding his handicap. At one time he owned the Nebraska Farmer, selling it to its present publisher, Samuel R. McKelvie. Then he bought the Beatrice Daily Express while he was running it as a corporation.

Mr. Edgcombe was a dynamo of nervous energy. His aims were high, his judgment sound. He will be remembered with deepest affection by his home community and his state.

In an article on the passing of its long-time publisher and editor, the Signal presented his newspaper ideals included in an address to the school of journalism of the University of Nebraska in February, 1925, as follows: "The highest achievement of an editor is to make plain and desirable the high things of life, to inform those needing information, to cheer the downcast, to refresh the weary, to inspire the discouraged, to shame the timid, to thwart the oppressor, to enable labor, to beautify the drab, to make right-essence readable. Fashion your editorial page after that manner, back it with sound business discretion, bolster it with unflinching zeal, make of your labor a thing of joy, and all will be well."

For Recreation. Baseball is a healthful sport comparatively free from dangers. Wayne is developing young players to succeed to adult teams in due time. Young boys are benefited as they learn to develop sound muscles, but they learn to be good losers. Proper lighting to permit night playing has been introduced this season and is proving an advantage. A minimum charge for lighting for Midget players would seem a highly desirable source of encouragement.

Wayne should, as it doubtless will, keep on strengthening recreation centers with the youth especially in mind. A combination of useful work with highly satisfying leisure and play is a reasonable assurance of freedom from bad habits and child delinquency. Let Wayne keep on the track of recreational needs and see that they are adequately provided.

Cherokees Adopt Three in Wayne

Indians with Mills Circus Have Secret Pow-wow Here Thursday.

Led by Chief White Eagle and his mother, Princess White Cloud, the Cherokee Indians with Mills Brothers circus, showing here last Thursday at the Swinney acreage under sponsorship of the Legion post, held a secret pow-wow, voting and adopting Eugene W. Huse, editor and publisher of the Wayne Herald, Walter Savidge, sr., former carnival owner, and his showman son, Walter Savidge, jr., the last of Omaha, as members of the Cherokee Nation. Editor Huse was given the title and name of "Chief Pens of Truth," the senior Mr. Savidge "Chief Prays for Health" and Mr. Savidge, jr., "Chief Knows Showdown and Real Estate."

Fair crowds attended the circus performances both afternoon and evening. All were convinced that Mills brothers—Jack, Jake, Paul and Harry—have an outstanding show and one of the largest motorized circuses on tour. Teresa Marjess proved the feature extraordinary. Every second of her high trapeze acts presented death-defying thrills. The circus came when at full swing, she dropped into space from the trapeze, catching on her heels with no net to protect her.

Attractive women performers divulged their recipes for keeping shapely, healthy and happy. It is that they stand for 15 minutes after each meal. The young women eat grapefruit and milk for breakfast. After hourishing noon and evening meals, they also stand 15 minutes. They drink plenty of fresh, pure water, walk much, breathe deeply and read worthwhile literature.

Among champion performers with the circus are the Accvedos, the Silverlakes, Riding Conleys and Jimmie O'Neill. Burma, the largest performing female elephant on earth, clowns, Liberty horses, educated ponies, dogs and monkeys are attractions.

In the wild west Jack Hoxie is tops and he appeared here. Supporting him are Buffalo Ben, aged 84, last of the American scouts; Chief White Eagle, and his mother, Princess White Cloud, first cousin of the late Will Rogers, and their Cherokee Indians, and cowboys and cowgirls.

Mills Brothers have a "canvass" church for their 350 people with the globe trotting evangelist pastor. Here as elsewhere Waddell held his daily week-day Sunday school for the 25 children of performers. Children do not put pennies into the collection plate but Doc gives each a penny for attending and all come. While here the evangelist conducted remembrance service for deceased Wayne circus friends and for all show folks buried here.

Of interest will be the fact that in Sioux City August 9 the crowd attending the Mills show witnessed the marriage of Beatrice (Betty) Aetevdo of Los Angeles, premier wife walker, and James Warren O'Neill of Carlisle, Ill., champion sommarsault diver and acrobat in the center ring. Prof. Geo. Bell's circus band played "Here Comes the Bride," and the great crowd sang it. The entire circus personnel attended the couple. Doc Waddell, the evangelist pastor, performed the ceremony. Gifts and telegrams poured in from all the world's circuses and shows to the happy couple. This is thought to be the first marriage ever in a sawdust ring since the days of the first circuses in the old Roman amphitheatres and coliseums.

An outstanding idea of the Mills circus is an advance ticket sale which provides free attendance for underprivileged children who might not otherwise be able to see a circus. The Mills circus never shows on Sundays, and expects soon to revive the pre-show circus parade.

Anticipating the circus and following its appearances, young folks hereabouts staged their own backyard circuses.

TEACHERS SECURED FOR MOST SCHOOLS. Teachers have been reported to Miss Marie Wright for all Wayne county schools excepting about 12.

PREPARE FOR BIG SHOWING AT FAIR IN WAYNE COUNTY

PREMIUM list is being prepared for Wayne county fair which is dated for September 11, 12 and 13. It is anticipated that the showing in all departments will be outstanding this season—a display of exceptional quality livestock, produce and handicraft in which this region ranks high. Schools and 4-H clubs contribute liberally to the festival. A fair not only presents accomplishments but it also provides inspiration for greater attainment. And it furnishes relaxation between harvest of small grain and corn. The county fair is a fine American institution that deserves the support of all.

Post Office and Store Destroyed

Blaze Early Friday Takes Waterbury's Only Firm Supplying Foods.

Fire of undetermined origin early Friday morning destroyed the Waterbury post office and the town's only store. Postmaster R. P. Walsh, who also owns and operates the store, estimated the loss at $5,300 on the frame building and $2,500 on the contents.

The blaze was discovered about 5 Friday morning and had gained such headway that nothing could be saved. Allen and Ponca departments responded and kept the fire from spreading to other property.

No first class mail was lost in the fire. All had been dispatched at 6 p.m. and another was not due until 8 a.m. Mr. Walsh stated that all 105 families on the rural route and the 45 families in the town of 125 had received their mail Thursday.

The fire left Waterbury without a store temporarily but Mr. Walsh set up the business to supply groceries and household necessities in the brick structure which he had been using for store space. The only other building in town is a tavern.

W. A. Lerner moved from Wayne to Waterbury a few days ago to serve as head of the school.

Heat and Drouth Broken by Rain

Prospects for Corn Crop Are Brightened Tuesday By Showers Here.

Scattered showers and cloudy skies Tuesday morning broke the intense heat and drouth which had gripped this area since July 26. Corn prospects are improved. More showers and cooler weather will keep corn from firing during this critical period and will give assurance of a fair crop. County Agent Walter R. Harder reports that corn has fired some on top leaves but most stalks are still in good condition. The crop will not be normal but ears are forming and cooler atmosphere will help much.

Rainfall Tuesday morning registered .45 of an inch in Wayne, .54 at Randolph, .1 at Norfolk, about .5 at Altona. No rain fell at Carroll and Laurel and only a sprinkler at Winside that morning. Sandstedt Holds Local Nine To Four Scattered Hits In 4-0 Win Sunday.

The Wayne Pioneer Nite League team rejoined the ranks of the losers Sunday evening when they dropped a 4-0 shut-out game to David City.

The locals had trouble solving the offerings of Pitcher Sandstedt, whose mound work was the feature of the evening. He faced only 32 Wayne batters, allowing four singles and issuing two free passes while striking out nine.

Bud Harder started on the mound for Wayne because of the late arrival of Kimmel, regular pitcher, and set down the first three men in a row. Kimmel, going in in the 2nd, immediately got into trouble when the first two men up, Kreizinger and Hafemeister, rapped out successive doubles for the first score of the game. The next three men went down in order and so did the next three, in the bottom of the 3rd.

The 4th inning, however, proved to be the big one for David City. Sharpe, first up, singled. Kreizinger whiffed, and Hafemeister singled, moving Sharpe to second. Armogast connected for a hard line drive which was too hot for Harder who had been moved to third, the ball rolling out to left field and Sharpe and Hafemeister scoring on the play. Gilmore, next up, singled, scoring Armogast for the last tally of the game.

With the fateful 4th out of the way, Kimmel settled down and pitched effectively the rest of the way, allowing only three singles in the remaining four innings.

Sharpe, David City second sacker, was the hitting star of the evening with his double and three singles in four trips to the plate. Hafemeister and Gilmore, each with two singles, aided materially in their team's victory. Moyer led the Wayne batsmen with two hits, half of the team's total.

Both teams played clean, errorless ball throughout the game.

The box score:

Standings of Teams.	W	L	Pct
Wakefield	10	4	.714
Emerson	7	5	.581
Ponca	7	5	.581
Stanton	7	6	.538

OUT OF OLD NEBRASKA

One of those almost legendary figures in the story of old Nebraska is Lt. Colonel Don Pedro de Villazur, the doughty Spanish soldier who in the summer of 1720 led an ill-fated expedition from Santa Fe to the river Jesus San Maria, the river which we know, more prosaically, as the Platte. The Spaniards, by virtue of Coronado's expedition into the Nebraska country almost two centuries earlier, claimed all of the west looked favorably on the prospect of becoming the seat of the national government. In 1874 a national capitol removal convention was held at Louisville, Ky. Governor Robert W. Furnas appointed Mr. Sydenham as Nebraska's official delegate. The convention stirred up a lot of smoke, and even got the matter brought up in congress, but there it was quickly and permanently squelched.

It was in order to reassert the Spanish claim that Lt. Colonel Villazur was sent northeast from Santa Fe in the summer of 1720. (A year earlier, the governor in Santa Fe had started on such a trip, but as he got to thinking about the dreaded Pawnee Indians to the north, he suddenly changed his mind someplace in western Kansas and scurried back to Santa Fe.)

We cannot be absolutely sure just what Colonel Villazur was to accomplish when he reached his destination, but his certainly was no mere scouting party. Among other things, so the ancient record has it, his equipment on that long and arduous journey included farming implements, construction tools, domestic animals, and goods to be traded for furs.

During the first week in August, the expedition arrived at the valley of the Platte. The exact location is not known, but it may have been in the vicinity of the present city of Columbus. They made first attempt and then another to council with the Pawnees. The Pawnees, however, probably under impetus from the French were hostile and determined a war.

Colonel Villazur then exercised what appears to have been very unskillful military judgment. Failing to get a council with the Pawnees, he moved his command and camped in the tall grass of the Platte valley, near the river's edge. Here the Indians, in a pre-dawn attack, wiped out the entire company, except four or five who were able to escape, and who ultimately found their way back to Santa Fe.

And once again the Spanish failed to establish themselves on the great plains of the Nebraska country.

OUT OF OLD NEBRASKA

Believe it or not, back in the early 70's there was a movement on foot to remove the national capitol from Washington to Fort Kearney, Nebraska.

Fort Kearney, guardian of the Oregon trail and protector of the settlers of central Nebraska during the 50's and early 60's, had been abandoned as a military post in 1871. Into the discussion over what should be done with the reservation, Moses H. Sydenham, noted Nebraska pioneer and editor of the Central Star at Fort Kearney, injected the idea that it be made the national capital.

He advanced his proposition in the editorial columns of his paper, sending copies to members of congress, and to influential people all over the country. The reasoning behind his idea sounded good, at least to the residents of central Nebraska.

He argued that the transfer would promote settlement of the west, with immigrants coming not only from the crowded states of the east, but also from abroad. Ambassadors, business men, and others from foreign countries would have an opportunity they did not have with the capital located at Washington. Then, too, in case of a foreign war, a capital located at Fort Kearney would be immune from attack. (This was before the development of the atomic bomb, it will be remembered.) Further, Fort Kearney was the ideal site because like the District of Columbia it was just ten miles square.

Such a transfer, it goes without through contact with dogs or cats. Ringworm is caused by a fungus of a sort of cough to the fungus of athlete's foot. Another variety of ringworm that infects cattle, especially calves, also readily affects the skin of humans. In dogs and cattle, ringworm infection is usually recognized by the veterinarian's trained eye. But in cats the external signs of the disease may be hard to detect, especially in lightly-affected animals.

Any symptoms of ringworm in children should be called to the attention of a physician, and any animals with ringworm that children have had contact should be examined by a veterinarian.

Fortunately, most of the varieties of lice and mites affecting livestock and birds do not like the taste of human and therefore do not make a permanent home of the human skin. In the livestock industry, however, these parasites take a tremendous toll by damaging the health and checking the growth of meat animals, and the farmer who ignores them when they develop in his herd is dissipating a great deal of potential profit.

HEALTH HINTS for LIVESTOCK

AMERICAN FOUNDATION FOR ANIMAL HEALTH

TUBERCULOSIS IS NEVER WHIPPED

Although veterinary science has gained the upper hand in its 26 years fight against tuberculosis of farm animals, livestock raisers more than one case of infection in each 200 cattle. Yet, the disease is not completely eradicated, and periodic testing of herds must be continued for many years more. To help win the final battle against purebred cattle on a single mid-west farm were found to be reactors when the veterinarian gave them the tuberculin test. When slaughtered, quite a number of these animals were found to have generalized tuberculosis—this in a locality that has been considered "tuberculosis-free" for years. Swine tuberculosis affects from three to five million market hogs each year according to packing house records. Swine more frequently contract the disease from poultry, and records show that more than 20 per cent of all poultry flocks in many sections of the country are actively infected with tuberculosis. For the protection of human as well as animal health, every person should do all within his power to help win the final battle against the "great white plague," whether it exists in humans, in barnyard animals or in poultry. Constant vigilance on the part of every farmer will help.

HEALTH HINTS for LIVESTOCK

ANIMAL RINGWORM HITS HUMANS, TOO

Ringworm and mange are two good examples of animal ailments often contracted by human beings. At least one type of cattle mange, a disease due to a tiny mite similar to the one causing human itch, sometimes infects the hands and arms of persons working around dairy barns. Every year also brings many reports of children contracting ringworm infection of the skin or scalp.

HEALTH HINTS for LIVESTOCK

AMERICAN FOUNDATION FOR ANIMAL HEALTH

ANIMAL RINGWORM HITS HUMANS, TOO

Ringworm is caused by a fungus of a sort of cough to the fungus of athlete's foot. Another variety of ringworm that infects cattle, especially calves, also readily affects the skin of humans. In dogs and cattle, ringworm infection is usually recognized by the veterinarian's trained eye. But in cats the external signs of the disease may be hard to detect, especially in lightly-affected animals. Any symptoms of ringworm in children should be called to the attention of a physician, and any animals with ringworm that children have had contact should be examined by a veterinarian. Fortunately, most of the varieties of lice and mites affecting livestock and birds do not like the taste of human and therefore do not make a permanent home of the human skin. In the livestock industry, however, these parasites take a tremendous toll by damaging the health and checking the growth of meat animals, and the farmer who ignores them when they develop in his herd is dissipating a great deal of potential profit.

Society off the Track

SO FAR, this year has had one of unusual disasters. Many fatal accidents have occurred on highways and in the air. Explosions and fires have taken a sickeningly large toll of life.

Rivals in high places, especially abroad, have kept the world in turmoil and fear. Reconstruction following the war has been seriously hindered by bold self-seeking.

Stories of crime appear daily. Many offenders are teenagers. They show lack of parental guidance, lack of parental responsibility. Parents must be aroused to understanding and courageous leadership, so they may impart knowledge of life's vicissitudes to their children.

In the midwest's corn belt, drouth has gripped a promising corn crop. Extent of damage depends on how long rain is held back. Many farmers may have to turn to use of silage in more feeding.

Small grain crops everywhere are reported exceptionally large and of exceptionally good quality. These results are highly gratifying, but they do not adequately compensate for a threatened corn crop.

We join others in the hope for a favorable turn soon in the wheel of fortune. We hope the desirability of peace, the need for mental poise and sense will be expressed in the right direction. The world needs a re-baptism of the spirit of fellowship. It needs to be evangelized.

Cong. Stefan Back Home

CONGRESSMAN Karl Stefan is back in his Norfolk headquarters after a long, strenuous session in Washington. His official burdens were increased by being a member of the important appropriations committee. He has toiled hard and earnestly to pare down government expenses. A bill to cut income taxes was vetoed by President Truman.

In a speech at the Dixon county old settlers' picnic at Allen recently, the congressman said: "It is amazing that those early settlers accomplished so much with so little. And it is equally amazing that the world today is accomplishing so little with so much."

A congressman has had an especially difficult task the past year. Looking after duties from home headquarters is not complete relief, but it is a welcome change. We are reminded that an extension of the congressional term beyond two years would be proper and desirable.

Useless Advice

GRATUITOUS and wholly unnecessary advice to farmers relative to their habits of eating is said to have been issued by the government. Farmers are asked to include in breakfast, "the right kind of foods in the right amounts." Don't farmers know that? And where are better or more nourishing meals served than on farms? Touching the subject, the Lincoln Journal comments:

The real point is, as the New York Sun dug up, the fact that the department of agriculture spends two million dollars a year on booklets, documents and leaflets. Some of these are useful. Many represent arrant waste of taxpayers'

Congress

As Seen By KARL STEFAN

"The mace" of the house of representatives is, aside from the flag, the only visible symbol of federal government authority. It has no counterpart in the senate, none in the Supreme court.

This standard creates considerable attention among gallery spectators attending house sessions. It appears to be more like a drum major's baton topped with Colorado eagle. It is placed on a green marble base while the presiding officer of the house—the speaker—is in the chair. When the house is sitting in committee, of the whole, the mace is lowered from its marble stand.

Having been provided in a resolution adopted by the house during the first congress in 1789, the mace is as old as the government itself. Since that time, it has served as the active symbol of authority of the Sergeant-at-Arms, who is charged with preserving order on the house floor.

Although the mace has been provided for maintaining harmony during house debate, there are a few recorded instances in which the sergeant-at-arms has been called upon to use it. Whenever, as has seldom happened an individual member becomes turbulent and seems beyond the speaker's control, the sergeant-at-arms, on order of the speaker, lifts the mace from its pedestal and presents it before the offending person. Order has always been promptly restored, so great is the respect for the mace as a symbol of legislative authority.

For example, a public document says: "In 1880 the Speaker undertook to quell an incipient fight between two representatives, William A. Sparks of Illinois and J. B. Weaver of Iowa; when they used such menacing words and threatening actions toward each other that many members rose to separate them. Whereupon the sergeant-at-arms moved about the house with his mace of office and order was restored."

Another incident "occurred in the house on February 17, 1885. Rep. John D. White of Kentucky who was a thorn in the side of Speaker Carlisle and frequently used abusive language, was called to order by the speaker and commanded to take his seat. Mr. White disregarded the order and refused to sit down. When confronted by the sergeant-at-arms bearing the mace he promptly took his seat. Mr. White was said to be as unpopular as Carlisle was popular."

On another occasion, "Rep. George Southwick of New York money and aggravation of the paper shortage. Telling farmers to eat good breakfasts could be nothing but "busy work" contrived by some bureau chief for his simpler minded employes. So let's remember this, urges the Sun, when we hear howls that cutting agriculture department expense will ruin the farmer. Shuckins!

Former President Herbert Hoover offered some sage advice on the occasion of his 73rd birthday. He urged peace with other nations with Russia included if possible, without Russia if necessary. He urged cooperation with nations that would cooperate. Then he recommended help to struggling countries while they were forming a democratic and self-supporting order. He believes the course he has outlined would insure a peaceful world.

The irrepressible candidate, George W. Olson, has filed for the democratic nomination for United States senator, subject to next year's primaries. Olson was the democratic nominee for governor in 1944. He was in the senatorial race in 1946. He apparently likes to run for office even with assurance of defeat. But the democratic state convention may discourage him when it meets to endorse candidates.

Weather forecasters have had a tough task during the hot spell. They wanted to promise relief, but couldn't. Sometimes symptoms of a change for the better appeared, only to be frustrated by sudden switches in atmospheric conditions.

The mere fact that increased liberty is to be granted in installment buying should not encourage buyers to abuse that privilege. A minimum of investments through part payment plans will strengthen credit and safeguard the future.

We have heard travelers ask: "Where is Wayne's trailer camp?" Local enterprise should find due profit in providing sufficient cabins and camping grounds to rent to strangers coming this way.

Economists seem to agree that a serious business slump is highly improbable as long as the world demand for supplies exists, and such demand is reasonably certain to last for a long time.

Time for Restraint.

(Norfolk Daily News)

One of the things that congress tried to do during the late session was to snip the bonds with which government had fettered both individuals and business during the last fourteen years.

It was one of the ground theories of the New Dealers that all phases of production and distribution of wealth should be under the control of Washington. It was their belief that if individuals and private business were allowed freedom of action, they would mess things up again.

The present congress is in revolt against that theory. Its purpose has been to free the people from as many of these hindrances as possible.

That's the explanation given for the measure to end restrictions on installment buying November 1, which President Truman has just signed. After that date credit will be a matter between customer and merchant.

Bankers and credit men are properly warning business that there will be need of restraint in granting installment credit. The depression of the twenties and later of the thirties was deepened by the fact that so many persons, when their incomes were cut, found themselves deeply in debt. Lowered incomes wouldn't cover both debt and living costs. Both the individual and business suffered.

The return of freedom to the people makes it necessary to use restraint. The individual must take the responsibility of keeping himself solvent, instead of yielding to the temptation to buy himself poor because he can get what he wants for one dollar down and the rest in "easy" payments which aren't usually so easy. And the merchant should curb the temptation to extend shaky credit merely to help sell more goods.

Keeping the public solvent is of first importance if we are to avoid another depression, and it is a responsibility of both the individual consumer and the merchant.

WINNING AGAINST ODDS.

The Saturday Evening Post has come to the defense of American Negroes as useful and substantial citizens. It attributes to the colored race its self major credit for improvement. Under every possible handicap—facing innumerable obstructions—Negroes have succeeded in all businesses and professions, and are winning popular respect. The Post observes in conclusion: "The bewildered freedman of 1865, looking for his forty acres and a mule, swindled by carpetbaggers, helpless and homeless on the highways of the ruined south, has transformed himself into a solid citizen. Legend pictured him as improvident, lazy, shiftless and happy-go-lucky, but legend neglects to account for the stores, hotels, banks and insurance companies he has founded and managed for himself. It fails to explain his 200 magazines and newspapers, of the $10,000,000,000 spent every year by Negro consumers. As Roland Hayes put it, he's a national resource."

knife, but was intercepted in the main aisle by a number of members. The sergeant-at-arms appeared on the scene with the mace and order was restored.

Before the 80th congress, first session, closed its books, various state delegations served as a "chamber of commerce" and urged members to vacation in their respective districts. A congressman from Minnesota distributed maps, which pointed to the best fishing spots within his state.

Speaker Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R-Mass) will become the nation's thirty-third president should Harry Truman die. Truman recently signed a congressional measure, introduced by Senator Wherry (R-Neb), which provides that the speaker of the house and then the president of the senate shall succeed to the presidency after the vice president.

The foreign affairs committee of the house will journey to Europe and Asia during the summer months to view first hand the international situation. Members of this committee and a subcommittee of the house appropriations committee were asked to take the trip by Secretary of State Marshall who termed the present world situation as "grave."

F. B. Lee, deputy administrator of the civil aeronautics administration, believes it is vital to the nation's air safety to keep our control towers on a 24-hour basis. In a recent letter to a member of the house appropriations committee, Lee defended CAA's policy of keeping the towers open during the evening hours.

"If there were any general curtailment of flights during the night hours," Mr. Lee declared, "because of facility closures, there would be a corresponding increase in daytime traffic, and already one of the great air traffic control problems is the high concentration of traffic at certain points during the peak periods. If aircraft normally operated at night, were forced to operate in the daytime in order to fly safely, additional hazardous traffic conditions would be created and additional personnel and equipment would be required to handle the daytime load."

Mr. Lee contends the government would be saving money and lives in the long run if all air safety devices are used night and day. He said:

"Control towers should be operated on a 24-hour basis for the same reason the entire federal airways system of lighting and radio navigational aids is in operation continuously. All aircraft do not stop flying during the night and at any time one may have to land in an emergency because of the unexpected weather conditions, mechanical failure, etc. In such cases, control tower personnel are needed primarily for operation of the airport lights and issuance of information and advice as to obstructions, field conditions, etc., to the pilot who may be landing at an unfamiliar airport. The tower operator is in the best position to furnish assistance during emergencies by alerting crash equipment, directing traffic away from the crash and providing other essential services."

"A single airplane saved with its crew and passengers would more than compensate for the dollars saved by closing all control towers for a period of time each day."

It is doubtful whether any action will be taken to close control towers for a period each day in the light of Mr. Lee's communication. Members of Congress are trying to find ways and means of preventing aircraft accidents such as have occurred the past three months.

At the present time, however, a move is underway in congress to combine CAA's air landing facilities—ground control approach and instrument landing service—to bring about greater safety for American citizens who fly.

Nebraska and midwest flood problems will be investigated the next few weeks by Michigan's able Albert J. Engel, chairman of the house appropriations subcommittee on war department civil functions. Mr. Engel plans to go from Fort Peck, Mont., down the Missouri and Mississippi rivers to the Gulf of Mexico.

There was little if any new information discovered about the life of Abraham Lincoln from the pages of 18,350 yellowing letters opened last month to the public at the congressional library.

The information contained in the collection of Robert Todd Lincoln, the late president's only son, will be helpful to historians; but the correspondence won't change the course of history, according to Carl Sandburg, one of Lincoln's biographers.

The collection contains nearly 1,000 papers, including official documents, penned by Lincoln himself. About 1,100 of the letters are from members of his cabinet. More than 1,200 letters are from his generals and over 100 from influential editors and literary figures of the period.

In the collection, there is an almost endless abundance of letters to and from Lincoln, letters on statecraft and the loss of a pet goat, reprimands to military officers and an appeal from a government job-seeker, threats of assassination (nearly 40) and letters of mercy for traitors to the Union.

When Robert Todd Lincoln deeded the manuscripts to the Library of Congress, he stipulated that the documents should remain sealed until 21 years after his death.

George Truman (no kin to the president) of Washington, D. C., and Cliff Evans of New Orleans, left late last month when they called "a 30 or 45 days" trip around the world in two flying, single engine, pipe cub airplanes. They expect to fly 22,436 miles.

MORON DRIVING.

The Norfolk Daily News says "moron driving" is one big motor danger. A careless fellow may not really be a moron, but he acts like one when most of his mind is occupied with other things while he is at the wheel. The News quotes the Northwestern National Life Insurance company. The News says: "Thus, the writer says, when a driver puts from a quarter to one-half of his mind on his driving and devotes one-half to three-quarters of his brain to conversation, scolding the children, listening to a quiz program, or admiring the scenery, the hazards are about the same as if a moron were at the wheel. And an average mind fogged by alcohol may have its driving capabilities actually at the imbecile level. A highly intelligent mind won't do you much good when you're at the wheel unless it is giving its full attention to the problems of driving."

Without a doubt one of the most colorful and probably one of the most important figures in old Nebraska was Colonel Peter A. Sarpy...

Colonel Sarpy (the military title is of uncertain origin—probably something like a Nebraska admiral) was born in St. Louis in 1805. His family was associated by blood and occupation with those wealthy adventuresome St. Louis families—the Chouteaus and others—who dominated the fur trade of the upper Missouri for so many years...

The name of the village was changed to Lincoln in honor of the martyred president. As soon as possible work was started on the capitol building itself and by December, 1868, the new capitol was ready for occupancy...

Business men had not been particularly enthusiastic about investing in the new capitol city until the capitol itself actually was completed. They were afraid the legislature might change its mind. With the capitol well under way, however, men and money began to flow into the little town...

SWINE ERYSIPELAS IS VERY CONFUSING
Swine erysipelas is one of the most difficult of all livestock diseases to control, but there are several steps that can help to check the heavy toll it is now taking on American farms. Because it is so easily confused with other maladies, and so highly contagious, it is vital that an accurate, dependable diagnosis be obtained at the first sign of symptoms...

Assistance Laws
(Lincoln Journal)
The seventeen bills passed at the last session of the legislature relative to the state assistance program have apparently confused the situation in the minds of the county directors. A meeting at Seward the other day attended by representatives from twelve counties, at which the legislation was gone over in detail, resulted in a request for the state department to interpret them before the effective date of most of the new laws.

Two of these measures are of prime importance, as they are aimed to shift to the counties part of the burden that has been resting upon the state fund. LB 544 provides that if the funds at the disposal of the board of control, which manages the fund, shall at any time become insufficient to pay the full amount of assistance to each person entitled thereto, then the amount paid each recipient shall be reduced pro rata. In no case shall more than fifty dollars, or less than five dollars be paid to any person. However, the measure provides that the expense of medical, surgical and hospital care may be allowed in addition to the grant, but only if the expenditure is authorized by the county board before the expense is incurred and the charges made approved by the county board after the services have been rendered. In making allowances over the legal maximum, the county must pay 25 per cent of the excess. LB 543 puts a maximum of $27 a month for an ADC family with one child and $18 a month for each additional child under sixteen, with no additional allowances for the parents. Here, too, the county board may approve a grant to cover the additional need, if it exists, with the county shouldering 25 per cent of the cost.

Information Given About Reburial Here

Information released by the Kansas City Quartermaster Depot regarding return and reburial of World War Two dead follows:

Q By what authority are remains of World War II dead being returned from over-seas or reburied over-seas?

A Public law 383, signed by the President in May, 1946. That law entrusts to the Quartermaster Corps of the War Department the program for final disposition of remains of Americans who died over-seas between September 3, 1939, and July 1, 1946, and whose remains could not, because of wartime shipping restrictions, be returned to their homeland for burial. The program embraces Army and Navy personnel, Red Cross representatives, war correspondents and civilians who died in the service of their country.

Q Who determines which remains shall be returned and how is that determination made?

A The guiding principle in the program is consideration for next of kin. They have the sole right to say whether remains shall be returned or left over-seas. To ascertain those wishes, the War and the Navy Departments in Washington are mailing to next of kin inquiry forms which are to be filled out and returned to Washington. From that point final disposition of remains follows the wishes expressed by next of kin.

Q What are the choices offered to next of kin in respect to final disposition of the remains of their loved ones?

A They may elect one of four options: (a) to have the remains returned to the United States for burial in a national cemetery; (b) to have the remains returned to the United States for burial in a private cemetery; (c) to have the remains reinterred in a permanent United States military or national cemetery over-seas; (d) to have the remains interred in a private cemetery in a foreign country, the homeland of the deceased or the next of kin.

Q Does the government assume all costs in carrying out this program?

A Where remains are reburied in a permanent military cemetery over-seas or in national cemeteries in the United States and over-seas, the government assumes all expenses. Those expenses include the furnishing of casket and shipping case, cost of disinterment, preparation of remains, transportation to final destination and actual burial expenses. Where remains are interred in a private cemetery, the government provides everything up to the actual burial expense which are born by next of kin. However, the government allows up to $50 toward actual burial expenses and provides the approved type headstone.

Q Should next of kin apply to Washington or to any agency or organization for the inquiry forms?

A No, the forms are distributed only from the War and Navy Departments in Washington and are sent to next of kin when the time approaches for disinterment in the cemetery in which their loved one is buried. All next of kin will not receive the letters of inquiry at the same time, but will receive one before any step is taken in final disposition of the remains in which they are interested.

Q Are widows, or are the parents considered next of kin?

A The widow is the next of kin if she has not remarried since the death of her husband, or was not separated or divorced from him at the time of death. If such has transpired, the right as next of kin passes to children over 21, and if none, to the father and then the mother of the deceased. If the deceased was unmarried, the line of next of kin starts with the father.

Q Can next of kin and other relatives be assured that the remains they receive will be those of their loved one?

A The word of their government is "Yes, without any doubt." A letter of inquiry will not be sent to any next of kin where there is the slightest doubt as to identification of remains. Methods and precautions used by American military personnel in original identifications and subsequent verifications include the latest in scientific identification. Unidentified remains will continue to be classed as "unknown" until there is absolute certainty of the identification.

Q Does the government say how much can be spent for private funerals?

A No, the nature and extent of services attendant to burial in private cemeteries are matters entirely between the next of kin, their funeral director, their chosen veterans organization and other interested individuals or organizations. The government does not intrude in any way into decisions of next of kin concerning final disposition or their plans for burial services.

Q What is the arrangement regarding military escorts and what are their duties?

A Each remains during the journey from the distribution center to the final destination, will be accompanied by a military escort of the same branch of service and the same rank or grade as the deceased. The escorts will be responsible for the dignified handling and safe delivery of the remains. They also will serve as the personal representatives of the United States Government in contacts with next of kin, carry the flag to be presented next of kin following the services and provide forms to be used by next of kin in applying for the funeral service reimbursement and headstone. The escort does not participate in the funeral services, but may remain for the services, if invited by next of kin or other members of the family.

Q How will next of kin who have returned the inquiry forms to Washington know when to expect the remains of their loved one?

A When the remains reach the United States, next of kin will be notified in a telegram from the distribution center to expect delivery in the near future. That telegram also will instruct next of kin to verify by return telegram, collect the name and address of their funeral director. This telegram also will advise next of kin to seek assistance of the distribution center if help is needed in making arrangements for military honors at the services. In most instances such arrangements will be made by next of kin through local posts of veterans organizations. When the remains are ready to leave the distribution center for the final journey, the distribution center will send a second telegram to the funeral director informing him of the hour of departure from the center, the name and number of the train, date and hour of arrival and the name of the military escort accompanying the remains.

Q Should next of kin pay for any information, or for any assistance, in connection with this program?

A Definitely not. All information is free and available upon request to the Office of the Quartermaster General, Washington 25, D. C. or to the Commanding Officer, Kansas City Quartermaster Depot, Kansas City 1, Missouri. Neither should any family pay for photographs of graves or cemeteries, for upkeep of graves or for any purported special services. There is no priority as to rank, race or creed in the return of the remains, the first returns scheduled for October.

Pre-primary Value.

(Norfolk Daily News) The democrats, many of whom opposed the pre-primary convention plan, may be thanking the good Lord for it before the next campaign is over.

The persistent George W. Olsen has injected himself into the democratic U. S. senatorial fight, and judging from past experience he might make himself plenty pestiferous if given a free run of the primary ticket.

The pre-primary convention may be the very instrument the democrats will use to head him off. It goes without saying that Olsen will not receive the convention preference vote, either first or second. The convention disapproval should help to offset his Scandinavian name. At least it will put the voters on warning that Mr. Olsen is not the kind of man the party wants to sponsor for the senatorship.

If, knowing that, he goes ahead and votes for Olsen, it will be a deliberate choice. But it is hard to believe that after convention action many democrats will care to put their party to the embarrassment of having Olsen as a candidate again.

F. O. Edgecombe Had Many High Awards in Spite of Loss of Sight.

Frank O. Edgecombe, 83, widely known publisher of the Geneva, Nebr., Signal for 53 years, died at his home last Wednesday morning. Editor Edgecombe had been in Wayne on several occasions. Funeral rites were held Friday at Geneva Methodist church.

Blinded in a hunting accident in 1892, Mr. Edgecombe did not allow the handicap to hinder his active journalistic career.

Mr. Edgecombe was born at Leipsic, Ohio, February 13, 1864 and came to Nebraska with his parents in 1865. He received high school education at Rufo, and higher education at the Methodist college in York.

After working in a bank at Rufo, Edgecombe bought the Falls City Journal which he published until 1894 when he sold the plant and went to Geneva where he consolidated 14 newspapers under the name of the Nebraska Signal. In 1904 Edgecombe with two associates bought the Nebraska Farmer, selling his interest in 1908. Mr. Edgecombe held controlling interest in the Beatrice Daily Express for some years.

In 1933 the National Editorial association presented Mr. Edgecombe the high award for his "Editorial Responsibility" editorial. Editor & Publisher chose him for the greatest community service award in 1926. Mr. Edgecombe was a member of the Nebraska Press association since 1890 and had been president in 1893-94. He served as president of the National Press association in 1925.

Deceased was presented the Kiwanis club medal for distinctive service to his state and community in 1933.

In 1913 Tyler Edgecombe became co-publisher with his father in the Geneva Signal.

Mr. Edgecombe leaves his son, Tyler, a daughter, Mrs. Ed. Hoyt of McCook, six grandchildren and five great grandchildren. Mrs. Edgecombe, the former Hattie Mengel, died a year ago. Mrs. A. G. Walker of Fairmont, is a sister.

From Wayne Herald for August 14, 1913: G. M. Lodge of Long Beach, Calif., who sent a letter to be read at the old settlers' picnic, said that when he came here in 1881 when homes were few but "hearts and hands were ready to make us comfortable." Mr. Lodge tells that he was called to Wayne, a town of 1,000, to organize a Presbyterian church. Mr. Lodge built his home here and preached in Wakefield and Wayne on Sundays. Ed. Berger and Miss Eva Glassmeyer were married August 13, 1913. Corn sold for 64c, oats for 34c and hogs $7.25.

From Ponca Journal for August 24, 1883: The new town two miles from Norris is surveyed and preparations are being made to build town. Paragon destined to be the new metropolis of Cedar county was surveyed, and the railroad is now about two miles from the town. Major N. S. Porter and two children arrived from Fort Peck Indian agency where the major took care of about 10,000 Indians the past four years.

Train Has Hard Trip.

"The air of Sleepy Hollow seems to encompass the Ponca branch of the railroad and the train which runs over it. The road track looks well in health; the cars are nice and comfortable, and those who run the train are gentlemen concerning whom no reproach can be made. But there appears to be a large amount of work to be done and the company does not have a quarter enough help. A large crowd wanted to go to Sioux City to see the circus. The train started at 8. The distance being 25 miles, it was fondly hoped to get there in time to see the outdoor parade which was to take place at 10:30. It was thought that the train would get there by that time if the passengers had to get out and push from behind whenever a difficult part of the road was reached. But people were mistaken in their calculations. The train, heavily loaded, trundled along, reaching Jackson on time and 10. At Jackson a long time was spent in hauling freight cars to and, fro,

Article in Nebraska Farmer Describes Brome Grass On Hoskins Place.

The Nebraska Farmer for August 2 features "Brome Grass Heaven," which is an account of farming carried on by Senator Norris Schroeder of near Hoskins. The article, written by Carl Deitemeyer, follows:

If there is a "brome grass heaven" it must be on the Norris F. Schroeder brome and livestock farm, near Hoskins.

There's brome everywhere; 505 acres of it. The grass covers whole fields. It's planted in waterways, along roadsides, in the wind-break, along fence rows, and even in the little waste pockets around the farmstead.

Mr. Schroeder, besides being a farmer, legislator, and soil conservationist, is the certified brome grass seed king of Nebraska.

Brome grass is old stuff to the Schroeder family. His grandfather, Fredrick Schroeder, seeded one of the first fields in Nebraska. This was in 1898. Norris has harvested seed from this field since 1941. The field was pastured every year until then. This is one of the foundation fields for Littlecole brome grass stock.

It is interesting to note that Grandfather Schroeder received brome seed from the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture in 1897. The original brome grass seed, now called Lincoln, came to the United States in 1884. It was handled by a French importer who purchased it for the University of California from Hungary.

Norris hasn't always been interested in brome or farming. It wasn't until 1937 that he had a taste of farm life. In that year he came to Hoskins for a visit. He decided that perhaps he would like to farm a place his father had as an investment. The decision took plenty of intestinal fortitude to make. He had a job as manager of a Denver radio station.

Schroeder admits that he got all the books and magazines on agriculture he could get his hands on, asked millions of questions and observed during those early years of his farming experience.

After a year or two, he became aware of the tremendous possibilities of brome grass. He always admired that field of brome his grandfather planted. When he harvested seed in 1941 he couldn't believe his bifocals. The field yielded 856 pounds of seed per acre for the 26.2 acres.

Norris was so elated with the harvest that he sent 10 pound seed samples to the Soil Conservation Service and to agricultural colleges throughout the country. Recipients were very much interested in such good quality seed.

The University of Nebraska College of Agriculture aided the Nebraska Crop Improvement Association in establishing this and seven other smaller fields in the state as foundation fields for Lincoln brome grass.

Schroeder has shipped his certified brome grass seed to 17 states. His fields have been examined by experts from all over the nation. All of the 505 acres have been seeded from "Grandfather's field."

His farming program is built around grass and livestock. The place where his home is located contains 240 acres. This is where he headquarters for his feeding operations. Schroeder feeds 800 cattle and 200 head of hogs a year. Grass is the heart of his feeding program.

Brome fields hinge onto his farmstead like a huge fan. Cattle come into the lots for their grain. Windmills and water tanks are placed on fence lines for access-

Editor Hart of the Dakota Eagle has a wonderful penchant for buying all manner of outlandish beasts and birds so he now has quite a menagerie. Recently he procured at a great expense from the Spanish main, a marvelous Jackass. It is a smallish critter, being about three feet high, with two towering ears, a tail of whisk, four legs whose lined qualities place it without a peer in the ranks of slow speed, and with a voice whose melodious notes cause the neighboring hills to shake with terror. Hart lent this beast to John Barnes, jr., who brought it to Ponca to be placed in training for the slow mile race at the county fair. It took several days of hard work to drive him up from Dakota City to Ponca and since then he has been driven around town, hitched to a small cart, and admired by all children. Six ride in the cart and a quarter of a mile an hour is the ordinary gait. On extraordinary emergencies the velocity may be increased to half a mile.

Ponca's new mammoth hotel, the Commercial, is nearing completion. . . Fremont's new $40,000 packing plant will handle 450 hogs a day. . . Business is dull. . . Residents are waiting a pump on Main street for public use. . . A grove for picnics is in demand. . . A new mill, a railway depot and daily mail service are other needs.
