Doctor's Orders?

Doctor's Orders? Normally, we are very tender-hearted, but we were unable to shed a single tear over the, plight of one Lt. Glenn Davis, famed football player with the U. S. mili-tary academy in 1946 and how an officer in the U. S. army. The lieutenant, complaining that a knee injury rendered him unfit for military serv-ice, requested that he be allowed to resign from the army—but the war department said he'd have to stay in, as per the agree-ment of all West Pointers to serve a cer-train number of years in the army after graduation. There was a well-founded sus-picion that Davis, ordee he'd cleared the army, housed to play professional football. And not use the tear of the tear of the pro-grid ders are paid somewhat better than the average working man for their efforts on the football field. We suppose there may be some individ-

Name ALL the Speculators Secretary of Agriculture Anderson de-serves no plaudits for his reluctance to give a congressional investigating committee a list of the names of speculators in the com-modity market so that the committee could take proper action against any federal em-ployeesi who might have used inside infor-mation gained through their exalted posi-tions to play the grain market to their own financial advantage. But he should be commended for his decision to make the list public, rather than turn it over to the committee for a secret perusal. If allowed to sludy the names in secret, as it requested, it is not unlikely that the committee might choose to put the heat only on those individuals that it would po-lifeally expedient to embarrass. The in-vestigating committee, of course, is under republican control, and it is conceivable that some prominent republicans, as well as federal omployees and prominent demo-crats, might be dabbling in the market. Come to think of it, senators and repre-senatives sometimes have inside informa-tion, too. One wonders if any of the na-tion's lawmakers could be among the list of speculators—cither in their own names or someone else's.
