NEBRASKA FARM OUTLOOK

(The MONTHLY FARM OUTLOOK is reprinted from Notes on Nebraska Farm Business, a monthly publication of the Department of Agricultural Economics, Agricultural Extension Service, College of Agriculture, University of Nebraska, Lincoln. This authoritative report is reprinted each month by the State National Bank of Wayne as a service to our customers and friends.)

"Our Roots are In This Land"

Economic Situation

Business activity in July is falling off seasonally, but most importantly because of the continuing steel strike. Because of the developing serious steel shortage, industrial output is slowing down which in turn is causing employment layoffs in the automotive, railway, coal and other industries.

The uncertainty of continued price controls is now settled. Limited controls have been passed by Congress to continue through April 30, 1953. The extent of decontrol will depend largely upon how the new control law is interpreted by OPS officials. Some of the important highlights are: (1) support prices will continue at 90% of parity on basic crops for the coming year, (2) import restrictions on butter, cheese, peanuts, rice, fats and oils are somewhat eased, (3) customary mark-ups can be either dollars-and-cents or on a percentage-of-cost basis. Mark-ups are to be calculated for a group or an industry, but not by individuals, (4) the Williams amendment may cause ceiling prices on beef to be reduced.

Farm costs registered their first appreciable decline since the Korean outbreak — a decline of 1% between May and June, 1952.

Losses Due to Farm

Accidents

"We have a son named Joe
A right nice lad to know
But a combine mishap
Left his right foot agap
And so . . ."

To date Joe has run up against any number of disappointments due to the accident. Although he shows no sign of injury to casual observers, nevertheless:

1. He has no chance to participate in competitive school athletics. The foot cramps when tired.

Cattle
'May Decline'

Grass fed prices may decline seasonally toward end of grazing season. As of July 1, very little activity in Sandhills for feeders.

2. He could not pass the physical examination for the special Navy ROTC program.

3. He is barred from West Point or Annapolis.

4. His choice of life's work is limited to jobs that do not depend on high physical fitness.

The above accident, like most of those which occur on farms, was due to carelessness. So somebody's carelessness (and in this case not his) cost Joe:

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| Doctor bill .....                                | $139.00 |
| Hospital bill .....                              | 412.30   |
| Labor to replace Joe-($10.00 per day) ..... | 100.00   |
| Total money cost .....                           | $651.30 |

Startling as the dollar-and-cents total may be the more serious fact is that Joe is still paying for the accident and will continue to pay as long as he lives.

Additional Costs

Joe was not the only injured party. It cost Joe's farmer employer time and money to find a man to replace him; worry and anxiety over the boy's condition and the degree of farm liability. Joe's employer suffered a three or more cents dock on some of the wheat due to the ensuing delay caused by the accident.

The cost of an accident is not limited to the victim, the employer, or his family. Joe had planned to be a farmer, we think he would have been a good one. Joe will see only limited military service; his country as well as his pride may suffer. Who can determine the total ultimate cost of this accident?

This true story carries a timely warning. A survey of accidents to farm people in Miami county, Ohio, 1950-51, showed that July is by far the most costly accident month of the year. About 1/4 of all farm accidents during the year occurred during the harvest rush. And almost a third of all accidents to farm people were those involving machinery. Except for farming, no large industry in the United States using high-powered, many geared implements would dare attempt to operate without an established safety program. The reason for this is clear. Industry employs experts to design guards, instruct workers in safe procedures and enforce safety measures.

A Little Thought — A Better Life

Accidents don't just happen; they are caused. You should take an inventory of all possible accident hazards on your farm. As safety engineer on your farm, you are entrusted with the most precious lives in the world—yours and your family's. Get together as a family to see that hazards are removed. Then learn or review safe procedures for all farm work. Consider the following as Ten Farm Safety Commandments to be obeyed:

1. Never grease, oil, unclog or adjust a machine that is in gear.
2. Don't wear floppy clothing that can catch in machinery.
3. Keep tools in a safe place.
4. Keep ladders and stairways in good repair.
5. Apply first aid promptly, even to minor injuries.
6. Don't smoke around the barn.
7. Keep all safety devices in place.
8. Be careful not to startle animals.
9. Use a staff when leading a bull.
10. Demonstrate safe practices.

If farm accidents are to be reduced—and they can be—each farm family must become safety conscious. It should be a source of pride to eliminate as far as possible all safety hazards. There are no prizes and no plaques of achievement awarded to the farmstead which is accident free, but you'll be alive and whole and so will the rest of your family. And that is a prize worth working for.

Increasing Size of American Farms

The size of the average American farm has grown by 77 acres during the past 40 years—from 138 acres in 1910 to 215 acres in 1950. During the same period, the number of acres of land in farms increased by almost 79 million—from about 879 million acres to 1,158 million acres. But there was a decrease in the number of farms by almost one million—from 6.13 million in 1910 to 5.13 million in 1950.

In Nebraska the size of the average farm has grown almost 200 acres—from 246 acres in 1900 to 443 acres in 1950. And during the same period the number of acres of land in farms in Nebraska has increased by over 8 1/4 million acres—from 382.3 million acres in 1910 to 47 1/2 million acres in 1950, while the number of farms has decreased by 22 1/2 thousand—from 129,678 to 107,183.

More Land — Less Farmers

Although the number of acres being farmed since the turn of the century has been increasing, the number of persons on farms in the U. S. since 1916 has decreased by 8 1/4 million or by 25%—from 32 1/2 million in 1916 to 23 1/4 million in 1951. The proportion of total population in the U. S. living on farms has decreased from 32% in 1916 to less than 16% in 1951. And in Nebraska the proportion of the state's population living on farms has declined from 53% in 1910 to less than 30% in 1950.

In Nebraska the number of persons living on farms has decreased by 193 thousand or 33%—from 584,172 in 1920 to 391,400 in 1950.

A Changing Agriculture

Very important changes have been taking place within agriculture which has made it possible for fewer and fewer farmers to cultivate more and more land. Farming methods have been changing at a very fast rate. Since 1920 the tractor has been replacing the horse and mule at the rate of about one tractor for five horses (or mules). That is, on the average for each of the past 31 years, 12 thousand tractors have replaced 62 1/2 thousand horses (or mules) each year. Tractors have not only released over 60 million acres of land formerly used to grow feed-stuff for those horses and mules, but it has made it possible for farmers to do more per hour and to increase total agricultural production. Farmers are learning to let new scientific knowledge do some of their work for them. Less man hours are being spent to produce larger crops, but more and more fertilizers, more insecticides and fungicides and more farm machinery are being used. The result is greater agricultural production with less hours worked. Farmers have learned that correct

Corn . . .

Prospects for an excellent crop; earliest beginning to tassel; crop 10 days ahead of normal.

amounts of certain kinds of fertilizer, proper mixtures of the right kind of sprays and up-to-date farm machinery when correctly applied will increase crop yields more than many hours of inefficient labor.

American farmers in 1950 used about 3 times as much fertilizer as they did in 1935; they are using over 75% more insecticides, fungicides, and farm power and machinery.

More Science — And More Money

Since the end of World War II, farmers have not been able to buy as much fertilizer, insecticides, fungicides and farm machinery as they have wanted. These shortages have cut farm production to a limited extent. Some shortages have been rather serious since the Korean outbreak and if supplies should become seriously short, agricultural production would fall off accordingly. Present-day commercial agricultural production has ceased to be a simple combination of land and endurance. That is, a simple combination where the native fertility of land and the physical endurance of man and beast combined with weather determined agricultural production. Today, successful farming is a combination of improved land, weather, many types and forms of power, expensive and complicated machinery, fertilizer, insecticides, improved varieties of seeds, and many modern cultural practices that require large amounts of money.

Prospect for Hogs

Higher Market Next Winter

Four main forces will affect the hog market this summer and fall:

Fewer pigs were farrowed this past winter and spring. Hog marketings will be below last year's mark this summer and early fall. Due to late farrowings and less pushing for the early market, slaughter may not fall as far behind last year's mark in late fall, however. If so, we will get a greater than usual late seasonal rise in hog slaughter.

This delay in the fall upswing in hog slaughter may be offset in part by the large stocks of pork in cold storage. Releasing these stocks will increase the supply of pork on the market this summer and early fall. Pork consumption will fall 1 to 2 pounds per person below last year's figure.

Hogs

'Unsteady'

Prices unsteady caused by high summer heat, some labor trouble and outbreak of the contagious hog disease, vesicular exanthema, supposedly spread through feeding uncooked garbage.

Even so, the large supply of pork in storage will limit the summer and early fall hog price. Storage pork will no longer be of influence by mid-fall.

Price ceilings, if in force, may restrict prices of live hogs during summer and early fall. Another point: Price ceilings apply to various pork cuts. Some are at ceilings now; others (such as lard, fat bellies and the like) are much below ceilings—and likely to continue so. The weaker market on these fat cuts and lards is likely to be a serious block in the rise of hog prices after the more demanded cuts push against ceilings.

Prospects are for a smaller fall pig crop than last year. This would mean fewer hogs to kill next spring than in 1952. And it might induce a good storage demand next winter.

Pulling things together, we should see summer hog prices as high or higher than last summer. The fall price decline may start a little later. And the amount of the decline probably will be no more, and perhaps a little less than usual.

Beef kill next winter will be up about the same number of pounds per person as pork slaughter is off. Even so, this is a price-stiffening factor on the side of pork. Studies show that consumers substitute back and forth some between beef and pork—but that the two are not perfect substitutes.

Thus, we probably can look for a higher hog market next winter—even if cattle are lower because of larger cattle marketings. The price for hogs should be favorable next winter. But the profitability of hog raising will depend on the size of the corn crop.
