Ensiling Sorghum
Best stage for harvesting sorghum for silage is when the seed heads reach the medium to hard dough stage according to Carl Hittle, forage crops specialist at the University of Illinois. If the crop-gets more mature, the grain becomes too hard and will not be digested. On the other hand, if the stlage is made when the plants are less mature, too much acid develops, giving a strong flavor and odor. It will also have too much moisture and be less palatable.
