Electric Heat No Thing of Electric heating is no longer a thing of the future to one Wayne county farm family. And according to them—it's—a source of heat that's here to stay. The Ray Agler family is now living—in their new farm home—234 miles northwest of Wayne. The eight-room home, completed after nearly two years of construction, is heated entirely by electricity. Each room has its own individual heating unit and automatic thermostatic temperature—control. Baseboard units are used in the upstairs bedroom and living room. Fast-heating wall units have been installed in the bathroom and near the front door to provide extra, quick heat. Basement rooms, including the recreation room where the Aglers sitnee children, Johnny, Lou Ann and Donna Rae, spend much of their time, also utilize wall-type heaters. The first question asked by most people about the house and its heating system is the cost of operation. The majority are somewhat amazed by the figures, Agler said. Econômical operation is insured by adequate use of insulation. Cost of heating the eight-room proximately $1,250. Agler said. Somebody had figured out how fast your savings can grow when you put aside a set amount regularly each month. This particular table is based on the buying of savings bonds. It includes the interest that builds up on Series E bonds over the years. It also takes into account the new 3th percent interest rate that became effective last June 1. Let's take a look at one of the columns. If you save just $18.75 every month in savings bonds, you'll have a little over $1,200 in five years. Or you'll have nearly $2,000 in seven years, nine months. That's the time it would take the first bond to mature.

A heap of you town folks don't understand why a hound dog will keep on barking all night, but there's a reason. A feller's dog thinks he hears somepun, so he starts barking. All the other dogs in the neighborhood hears him barking and think they got to help him out. Sooner or later the dog.

Int don't hear nothing ho more and instant, when I was a boy, look is ready to stop barking, but was discussing the origin of man.

iers has got to have a airport or a big dam acrost the river. His bud dies over in the next states thinks they got to help him out on account of pritty-soon-they're-going-to-need a airport or somepun theirselves. So they start barking to help out their buddy and afore long all the Congressmen is barking to help out their buddy and afore long all the Congressmen is barking to help out their buddy and the time-they git in the proof of the start of the congressment is barking to help out each other. Now I aim't comparing our Congressmen with a bound dog. Misture Editor, but in a heap of ways especially in spending money, they got a lot in common with a bark ing hound dog.

REGULAR SAVINGS COUNT

Tim not a statistician, but you don't have to be one to understand a rather interesting set of figures that came across my dosk recently. Somebody had figured out how fast time it would take the first bond to mature.

Look at it another way. If you could-manage to save $37,50 each month, that would buy a $50 bond. In only three years you'd have $1,-400. Or in seven years and nine months, you'd have nearly $4,000. This business of regular saving—through bonds or some other means—is not so far-fetched as it once was.
