EDITORIAL COMMENT

The editorial department of a weekly newspaper is an important department. Normally it is one person's opinion of topics that concern most of the readers.

You may not agree with an editorial — but if you read the editorial and give serious thought to the subject discussed you have gained. You, as a reader, have given careful thought to an important problem and the writer is proud to have called your attention to an important subject that you may have overlooked.

The School Book Probe

The Nebraska Legislature rejected an interim probe of Nebraska school books, but by such a narrow margin (20 to 19) that the matter can by no means be considered dead. A more decisive result would have been better.

The effort brought editorial criticism elsewhere in the nation which will now be silenced by the legislative decision but that is of less concern than the living implication within the proposed measure. It cannot but mean that there is a lack of confidence either in the capacity of local school boards or their loyalty to protect Nebraska school children. It equally casts a cloud of doubt over the state's professional educators.

This creates a paradox of inconsistency. In other instances Nebraska is deeply committed to local control of schools. It is an anomalous position to cherish local discretion while holding it suspect.

But that is not a dangerous indictment. Stability and educational qualifications are the common yardstick by which communities choose their school boards and the preponderance of the membership is of such high capacity that a shotgun implication fails to impress. The more serious aspect of the measure is the temptation to deny local discretion by setting up a minority of censors who would arrogate to themselves the practice of citizenship which is the property and duty of all citizens.

And who is to examine their basis of judgment? This is an exercise to be shunned until that tragic day when there is convincing evidence of failure of the present practice, if ever. — Lincoln, Neb., Star.

No Meat in Moscow

"No Meat in Moscow" was the title of a recent editorial in the Muncie, Ind., Star and it has significant bearing on developments in this country that Congressman Halleck read it into the Congressional Record.

The editorial began by pointing out that the proposed new farm law would make it possible to put hogs or cattle, and perhaps other livestock, under government marketing orders — and if that should happen, free agriculture would be just about through in this country. Then the Star said: "An acute meat shortage has hit Moscow. . . . The government in Russia, operating in accordance with the Community theory of national planning, sets the amount of meat which Soviet citizens need to consume and which Red farmers are to produce. An AP correspondent who toured the state-run butcher shops in Moscow failed to find a single scrap of fresh meat, not even sausages. Canned meat from Bulgaria and dried fish were available. . . . Meat could be bought in the central market where the peasants bring produce grown on their private plots of land. But the peasants set their own prices in the market and chunks of beef including the bone were being sold for 4.75 rubles per kilogram or more than $2 per pound. The peasants were selling eggs for 16 cents each."

"If an American farmer or any American Congressman wants to know how a controlled agriculture operates, all he has to do is look to Russia. Government control of supply, which . . . the Communists have in Russia, will bring meatless days in Washington. . . . 'The United States doesn't need to adopt any plan of this kind.'"

Legal observers said the session restriction could be done by a law but would be more effective if incorporated into the Constitution since lawmakers could repeal the law during a session. Burney also said the senators should be elected on political tickets to give organized leadership to the lawmaking process. State senators now are elected on non-partisan ballots.

Traffic Points

The Legislature has officially frowned on the practice of assessing traffic violation points against drivers of overloaded trucks. A resolution by Sen. Jack Romans, Ord., a trucker himself, was adopted by the Legislature by a 28-7 vote.

Romans had said some drivers were assessed penalties at state weighing stations. He said one station was assessing two points against a truck driver found driving an overloaded vehicle. What the resolution does is abolish the interpretation that the state law permits point assessments for overloading.

Board of Control

The Legislature has done away with Nebraska's three-member Board of Control for supervising state institutions.

Two bills were passed dividing the board into a Department of Public Welfare and a Department of Public Institutions, each headed by a single administrator appointed by the governor.

A five-member advisory board would aid the governor who would have complete authority over management of institutions. Now the board members are appointed by the governor, but function independently of him afterward. The head of institutions would be paid $10,000 per year and the director of public welfare, $10,000.

Under the two bills, the change in management of institutions would become effective Jan. 1, 1962.

There has been increasing controversy swirling around the Board of Control since 1947.

Gov. Frank Morrison, who has strongly advocated abolition of the board as an antiquated means of running state institutions, said he would search for professional administrators to head up the two new departments.

The Board of Control pledged full assistance to a smooth transition when the change occurs.

Watch For Corn Borers

It's time to watch for the first brood corn borers in early-planted corn, says Robert E. Roselle, University of Nebraska Extension entomologist. Field observations indicate that pupation is well along. The peak of corn borer emergence should occur soon.

"Moths that emerged early may not have found corn tall enough to their liking," Roselle explained. "Eggs may be deposited on small corn, but larvae normally fail to become established. Corn that is about 25 inches in extended height is very favorable for egg deposition and larva establishment."

"It usually pays to control first brood corn borers with 1/2 pint of DDT per acre. Total application should be 1 1/2 pints per acre, plus hole or pin-hole feeding signs in the whorls of the corn plants."

The entomologist recommends the following materials for control of corn borers:

- DDT, Granules, 10 percent, 10 pounds per acre; DDT Granules, 5 percent, 20 pounds per acre; DDT Granules, 2 percent, 40 pounds per acre; DDT Granules, 1 percent, 80 pounds per acre; DDT Granules, 1/2 percent, 150 pounds per acre; DDT Granules, 1/4 percent, 300 pounds per acre; DDT Granules, 1/8 percent, 600 pounds per acre; DDT Granules, 1/16 percent, 1,200 pounds per acre.

Corn treated with DDT should not be placed in the silo, Roselle warns.

Tractor Accidents

About 1,000 persons in the U.S. are killed each year in farm tractor accidents, according to a report received by Rollin Schneider, Extension safety specialist at the University of Nebraska. One-third of these occur on the public roads. Upsets and collisions lead the list. Non-fatal accidents involving tractors are estimated at 45,000 a year. Daring or sporting liberties should never be taken with tractors in the field on the farm or on the highway.

Ram Show-Sale Aug. 4

The Nebraska Registered Sheep Breeders association will hold their twenty-fifth annual ram show and sale at the Nebraska State Fairgrounds Aug. 4. Ted Doane, Extension animal husbandman at the University of Nebraska, says 98 yearling rams and 24 yearling ewes will be offered at the sale.

"This sale would be a good place to acquire stud rams and good commercial rams as well as excellent replacement yearling ewes," Doane points out.

Guest speaker at the event will be Prof. M. A. Alexander, who has been serving on the University of Nebraska staff in Turkey. He will discuss agriculture in the Middle East with particular emphasis on sheep production. Alexander is past secretary of the Nebraska Sheep Breeders association. Following a vacation in Nebraska, Alexander will resume his post in Turkey.

Ram judging will begin at 9 a.m. Aug. 4. The sweepstake ram is slated to be picked at 10:45. Show judges will include Tom Dean, retired shepherd at Kansas State University, Manhattan, and Bill Esry, University of Nebraska shepherd.

The Witch Doctor

Thinking OUT LOUD

Rev. Norman B. Parr, St. Anne's Catholic Church, Dixon. In a recent newspaper article was found in a small corner. "A 16-year-old youth was crushed to death Wednesday when the tractor he was driving overturned on a hill on a country road near his farm home." It gave his name, parents' name and address. That was all! A tragic accident hardly newsworthy. Why? A common occurrence is not news.

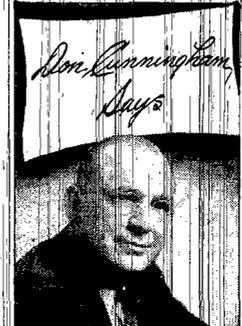

More important, what was the cause? Carelessness, carelessness! Eliminate these three and you eliminate most farm accidents. First, carelessness. The careless machine operator "hires less" about the possible consequences of his way of acting than he does about accomplishing his work in a responsible way.

Secondly, ignorance. The person who is ignorant of things he should know concerning the danger spots among gears and pulleys chooses a setting for a tragedy. Was this the cause for this 16-year-old tractor driver?

Thirdly, haste. The person who works in too great haste thinks more of the few minutes of time he can gain than of the loss in a hospital bed. Worse would be if haste would cost him his life, leaving a widow and orphans.

Statistics show the death rate for the farm population in accidents is four percent higher than for the rest of the population. To this sad fact of statistics add the fact that three-fourths of the accident victims are men. Understandably so since they are the ones that work with machinery.

One more fact. Peace of soul is closely related to accidents. Inner turmoil disturbs the soul and many times is the underlying cause for carelessness and haste. At peace with our God, ourselves and our neighbor, we are on a safe road to avoid accidents.

Things have been happening the past month or so that seem to be along the pattern of 1951 and 1959. Incidents that in heretofore do not seem extremely important or grave, but have been force-runners of important things to come. (As an example, the Berlin issue.) We learned a lesson though from them, for now we realize that from a little flame, seemingly isolated in some far corner of the Balkans or some remote part of the Pacific, can be engendered a holocaust that may engulf the world. Sure, we learned that these things can and do happen. Seemingly the things we have not learned is why they happen, and how to prevent them from happening.

Maybe the reason for that is because of our way of thinking. I don't know what you are thinking these days, but if your thoughts are as mixed up as mine, then you can't make head or tail out of the whole mess. When I try to fathom out what line of reasoning can be used by men or nations as an excuse for war, I'm still all at sea. Certainly today, the nation which is seemingly fomenting most of the disturbance doesn't need any

DEAR MISTER EDITOR: It may be that I'm getting a little impatient, but it seems to me this cold war business with Russia is getting as one-sided as a drunk's hat. The American taxpayers is footing most of the bills, but looks like this country ain't got much more say-so in the thing than a hog's got at a hog-calling contest. . . . I was reading last night where the United Nations has estimated more territory for its people. The vast domain that it now possesses hasn't by any manner of means been developed to anywhere near its capacity. I can understand to some degree the thinking of a nation that finds itself overcrowded, over populated, and with a slowly diminishing standard of living; but here is a nation that hasn't as yet made the most of what it does have in the way of vast resources. So then I turn to the thought that all of this must be purely ideological. . . . That it must be the designer bend all mankind to an acceptance of its theories, ideologies, and way of life. . . . Capitol News . . . Weighty List for Lawmakers To Study for Next 18 Months

Lincoln — State senators will be busy the next 18 months studying problems to come before the 1963 Legislature. Before adjourning the 1961 meeting, the lawmakers approved looking into 17 subjects in the interim until the 1963 session. . . . All 43 subjects will split into committees and research the problems as the Legislative Council. This is the name given to the Legislature when it studies problems between sessions. . . . Here are the areas of study and thumbnail explanation of major ones:

Taxation: A detailed and comprehensive study of all phases of taxation to aid the Legislature in future changes, if any, in the law structure. Appropriated for costs — $30,000.

Tourism: What now is being spent for promoting the state and exactly what tourism is.

Railway Commission: Laws and internal workings of the commission and a re-evaluation of commission laws. Appropriated: $5,000.

State Retirement System: An exploration of a suitable plan for a retirement system to cover all state employees. Appropriated: $5,000.

Public Power: All phases of this problem, including generation, transmission and distribution. Appropriated: $30,000.

Gasoline Tax Distribution: A look at the formula for allocating money to cities and counties. A separate study on whether the rate of taxation on aviation gasoline should be changed was also okayed.

The lawmakers put their stamp of approval on studies on leasing state school lands, road improvement, district laws, soil and water conservation, water control, forestry development, educational problems in Sarpy, Cass and Douglas counties, the future of the Curtis Agriculture school, state purchasing procedures, state car pool, investment of retirement funds and problems of small communities.

A continuing study will be made by the senators who comprised the Legislature's budget committee to see if state agencies are spending the way they told the Legislature they would.

The Legislative Council executive board, whose chairman is Sen. H. K. Evers, Gresham, will meet July 26 to name members to the various committees.

Legislative Session

As the Nebraska Legislature wound up an all-time record length meeting, its presiding officer said something should be done to shorten the session. Lt. Gov. Dwight Burney, Hartington, said the lawmakers now are meeting more than six months on the calendar and the time has come to put a limit on the length. He proposed 100 legislative days as the maximum session. The 1961 meeting lasted 126 legislative days, breaking the 1960 record of 120.

KNEE POPPERS

Smartest stitcher on our street borrowed her three-year-old's coloring book, cut out big animal shapes from colored denim. She appliqued these over the knees of Shmmy's cover-alls with darning yarn, then added button-eyes to the stitched critter. (Can you beat that?)

POSY HOLDER

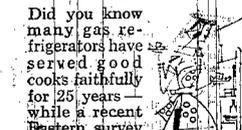

Mrs. F. D. Meyer of Mankato, Minn., reminds us plastic strawberry boxes can lead a double life. Fill them with dampened, shredded styrofoam from the florist. Invert box in large container. Stick fresh flowers into this easy holder, taking care to keep them "balanced."

SWIFT SWEET

Mrs. Jane Chace, of Wisconsin, says vanilla ice cream takes just a mite of beating to replace whipped cream on Summer shortcakes. (Wouldn't tonight be tasty timing for a fresh-peach model?)

CHILL THRILL

Did you know many gas refrigerators have served good cooks faithfully for 25 years—while a recent Eastern survey proved other types of refrigeration have an average "life" of 15 years? Modern gas refrigerators keep your food cold without frost, serve up just-right Summer salads and desserts. 'Tis a wise time to shop gas refrigerators, at your local gas company, Peoples Natural Gas, or gas appliance dealer!

POP PLEASER

Next time Dad goes fishing, send his carpenter apron along. It's too tough to tear or snag easily, suggests Evelyn Franklin of Minneapolis, Minnesota. The large pockets hold bait, extra lines, hooks, fish stringers—and even, says wise Evelyn, a folded plastic raincoat!

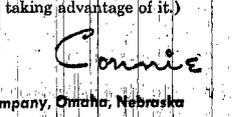

POTATO SALAD ITALIENNE

This ripe-olive-rich salad makes you an "international" hostess, says C. Marie Elsassner of Omaha, Nebr. Blend together 3 Tbsp. olive oil, 1 Tbsp. vinegar, 1 tsp. grated onion, 1/2 tsp. salt and 1/8 tsp. black pepper. Pour over 2 cups hot diced boiled potatoes. Toss lightly; cool thoroughly. Cut up one cup pitted ripe olives. Add to cooled potatoes, along with 2 diced hard-cooked eggs, 1/2 cup diced celery, 1 cup diced cucumbers, 1/4 cup diced dill pickles, 1/2 cup diced pimento and 1/2 cup mayonnaise. Let flavors mingle in gas refrigerator. Serve to six.

Public Spirited Citizens Began Rural Power System

Wayne County Public Power District began in 1935 when a group of public-spirited citizens of the area gave their time and effort to promote the vast undertaking at their own expense.

Among the early pioneers were Frank Rees, R. I. Jones, Gus Paulson, Hans Tietjen, John Peterson, Jack Sveigard, George and William Longmeyer, Herman Podell, Lyle Marolt, T. R. Roberts, F. L. Moss, Ed Grubb, Alfred Sydow, Emil Kaij, William McQuistan, R. T. Utech, Carl Sundell and Albert Watson.

This group and many others held meetings and made numerous personal contacts to get the individual farmers necessary to obtain a loan.

They formally organized by holding an election with Alfred Sydow, Lyle Marolt, Jack Sveigard, Lawrence Itzig, Albert Watson and Ed Grubb elected as the first official board of directors.

July 13, 1938, their petition to form a power district was granted by the State Railway commission. April 26, 1938, the original application for Federal funds had been made and three months later the first loan of $197,000 was granted.

The first manager was Henry Mording, Winside. The first lines were energized in the fall of 1939 in the southeast section of Wayne county as the first energy was purchased from Cuming County Public Power District.

Members of the present board of directors, which sets policy, hires the manager and oversees the complete operation, are Lyle Marolt, Hoskins; Jack Sveigard, Winside; Marvin Dunklau, Wayne; Carl Sundell, Wakefield; Leland Thompson and Alfred Sydow, Wayne.

Experts Said "It Couldn't be Done"

The so-called experts said it "couldn't be done" a quarter century ago. That's when most rural Americans lived in comparative darkness—35 years after their city neighbors had begun to enjoy many modern benefits of electric light and power.

In 1935 the Rural Electrification Administration was created to provide interest-bearing loans to rural people who organized to serve themselves with low cost power. Since then, more than 17 million rural residents have found it possible to live electrically, thanks to their home-owned rural electric systems.

To serve them, about one thousand rural electric systems across the nation have borrowed more than $3 1/2 billion from REA to build over 1 1/2 million miles of line. Out of their monthly "light bills" they have already repaid the U. S. Treasury over $1 1/2 billion, in principal and interest, on or ahead of schedule.

Locally, Wayne County Public Power District has built 1,072 miles of line with $1,940,525 borrowed from the REA. Nearly 2,300 customers are served in this area.

Already, WCPDD has a repaid $810,000 in principal and interest, every penny contributed by the people it serves.

From the start in 1935, REA loans have been available to people. See EXPERTS—page 2

Air Conditioning Takes Heat Off Housewives, Moms

Housewives and mothers of small children reap the greatest benefits from air conditioning, families who have home cooling agree.

The cool, dehumidified air produced by an air conditioning system makes all household chores easier by filtering out dust and providing a more efficient working climate.

Children nap better during the day and sleep more comfortably at night.

Clothing, bedding, upholstery and draperies stay cleaner and fresher, too.

Thanks to recent advancements, home air conditioning now is within the financial reach of the average family.

A leading factor in lower cooling costs today is better insulation for the home. Modern insulation stops heat so effectively that smaller, less expensive equipment does a comfortable cooling job at lower operating costs.

Dishwasher Choice Pointers Given

A question often faced by families who have decided to buy an electric dishwasher is: Shall it be a built-in or portable model?

A portable dishwasher, of course, is the only answer for apartment dwellers, house renters, or families who have small kitchens.

A built-in model, on the other hand, usually is preferred by families who are building a new house or remodeling the kitchen in their present home.

Here are some advantages of both:

Portables go where you go. They move from apartment to house and can even go on vacation with the family. No plumbing is required and the portable goes to work as soon as it is delivered. It can be rolled to the table to collect dishes, then rolled to the sink for washing. When not in use, it can be pushed to an out-of-the-way corner.

Children, Too

Wood decked patios outside various rooms of the home will become a must in the future, with special decks for children and adult members of the family. Both western red cedar and Douglas fir are popular for these wood decks.

Parties Won't Be Stuffy If Air Conditioner Guest

A room air conditioner can be a welcome guest during the holiday whirl of parties. It freshens air, filtering out smoke, cooking odors, dust and general stuffiness.

Modern room air conditioners do this with a "ventilating cycle" that filters and freshens without cooling the air in a room. This makes a room air conditioner useful all year long, providing complete summer comfort by cooling and dehumidifying air, and freshening stale air in other months.

Quality room air conditioners on the market today are a permanent, rather than temporary, solution to home comfort. Many families, in fact, prefer them to central systems, since the units can be purchased one at a time, and room comfort can be individually controlled.

Today's room air conditioners not only serve well in hot, uncomfortable weather, but create a healthy atmosphere by removing dust, pollen and other irritants and unpleasant odors. Allergy sufferers in particular will benefit from the year-around usefulness of the electric appliance.

Today home owners are aided in selecting the right size air conditioner for their need by standards of the National Electrical Manufacturers' association which provide that the unit's cooling capacity (BTU's per hour) be imprinted on the nameplate.

Gives Low-Cost Electric Heating

Some questions being asked more and more frequently today by both present and prospective home owners are:

Can our home be heated with electricity? Isn't the cost prohibitive? Is it difficult to install?

The answers depend primarily on the electric utility that services the area in which the house is or will be located. If the utility is one of many throughout the country that are offering rates for electric heating, any house in the utility's area can be heated electrically at costs that compare favorably with other types of fuel.

A vital prerequisite for electric heating in any house is proper insulation. When a new home is to be heated electrically, it should be insulated with batts or blankets of mineral wool labeled R-19 for ceilings; R-11 for frame walls and R-13 for exposed floors.

The "R" stands for resistance to heat flow. Mineral wool batts and blankets are scientifically designed to provide proper resistance to heat flow for the most economical electric heating possible today.

Existing homes can be insulated with a mineral wool for electric heating by an insulation contractor. He is equipped with pneumatic equipment that literally blows insulation into walls, ceilings and floors for a complete insulation seal.

Mildew Defeated. Dampness and its accompanying problems, including mildew, peeling paint and wallpaper and musty closets disappear in air conditioned house.

Good Lighting in Electric Homes

Good lighting is one of the features of a home identified by a gold medalion mounted next to the front door in the front steps.

Rural electric systems award this gold medalion to homeowners and builders who meet lighting requirements, provide electric heating, adequately wiring, electric kitchen and laundry appliances and other benefits of electric living.

Standards require the installed lighting fixtures to provide general lighting in every room of the house. The lighting from walls or ceilings in living rooms brings out the colors, textures and design of carpets, furniture, draperies and other furnishings.

Bedroom lighting fixtures are needed for seeing into drawers, selecting clothing, cleaning and for care of the sick.

The dining room fixture is often a conversation piece and decorative accent in itself.

In addition to a ceiling fixture in the kitchen, installations provide specific lighting on the range and work surfaces.

Difficult seeing tasks, such as shaving and make-up, need well-placed light. General lighting in the bathroom is provided from ceiling fixtures. Extra lighting from both sides of medicine cabinet mirrors or across the top of a wall mirror prevents shadows, makes closeup work easier.

Lighting fixtures installed at time of construction cuts cash needs at a most difficult budget period—moving-in time. Without built-in fixtures, large numbers of portable lamps would have to be purchased.

Hot Water Assured

Many automatic electric dishwashers have a warm-up feature to flush hot water from pipes and insure hot water in the dishwasher.

Enclose Outdoors

One simple way to create an outdoor living area is to design your home with an L-shaped floor plan. If the home is sided in some places, you already have two walls for an outdoor patio.

Tiny Touch-ups

Use your finger to dab on paint in making very small touch-ups on painted moldings. The sensitivity of your finger-tip will give you exact control.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION... a blue chip investment in America's future

Experts who study world wide population trends tell us every American farm worker must be prepared to feed and clothe about 50 others by 1975. That's twice the number he produces for now, and five times more than his quota in 1935... when the Rural Electrification Administration was born.

In those days, the American farmer lived in comparative darkness. Only one farm family in ten had, or could get, electricity at a price it could afford. Things are different, today. Almost every farm is served, thanks to REA and millions of rural people like us who decided to organize, string lines, serve ourselves!

No matter how population explodes, farm mechanization, improved fertilizers, insecticides and better farming methods—plus an abundance of low-cost electric power—will make sure our farmers keep pace with the need! We'll be ready, too. Heavily up our lines to meet increasing demand is our first order of business, always.

That's why we say, rural electrification is a blue chip investment that's really paying off.

Electric Milking Operation at Ward Gilliland's

Some 35 cows go to make up a Grade A dairy herd at the Ward Gilliland farm two miles west and three south of Wayne.

Electricity plays an important part in all phases of the operation. Electric milkers do an efficient, sanitary job of milking. The electrically run cooler prevents the growth of bacteria, and an agitator, also run by electricity, enables Gilliland to pour warm milk in with the cool.

Security Lights Aid Livestock Farmers

Some 37 security lights have been installed in this area by Wayne County Public Power District to benefit farmers and store owners by discouraging prowlers.

Users say the lights also help livestock by making it easier for them to get to feed and water during the night.

Norris Addressed Wayne Audience

The late Senator George W. Norris, campaigning for public office over 30 years ago, on October 28, 1930, addressed a Wayne audience with these statements of his ideals:

"I stand on the doctrine that in every official act a senator performs, in every vote he casts, he should be guided solely and exclusively by his conscientious convictions as to what is right."

Theodore Sorenson, special counsel to President Kennedy, whose father was campaigning at Norris' side at the time, describes Norris with these words:

"My knowledge and admiration of the Norris tradition are those which a father bequeaths to a son. I have no worthier legacy, and I share it with you gladly."

"Yet the contrasts of the Norris life do not fit the neat patterns of a testimonial address. He was the Senator from Nebraska—but he belonged to the nation. He was, through most of his life, a Republican—but his statesmanship knew no party. He was a gentle, kindly soul—but he showed his enemies no mercy. He was devoted, to serving the people—but his will, not theirs, cast his every vote. He became famous for the battles he lost—but he lived to see almost his every cause prevail."

"He was a politician without guile or ambition—an elder statesman with the aspirations of youth—a widely-hailed hero who most often walked alone. He was both praised and condemned, both sought after and shunned. He was capable of soft words and of righteous wrath—of sincere humility and of stubborn conviction. His dress and speech were of the old frontier—but his ideals are found on the new."

"Tonight we look back—for a century, or a generation. But George Norris always looked ahead—to another generation, or even a not-a-century. His toughest battles, he once wrote to a wise Nebraska editor, would be fought so that 'sometime in the future'—

EDITORIAL COMMENT

The editorial department of a weekly newspaper is an important department. Normally it is the editor's opinion of topics that concern most of the readers.

It is the duty of an editorial writer to search all available facts before he sits down to write. From this basis the writer should be able to give a clear picture of important topics.

Thrill Still There

Can you still remember the "day the lights went on"? And the great thrill you got? It's been many years since that big day, for most of us. But rural electric systems across the land never stop chipping away at the small pockets of darkness that still exist in their service areas.

One of these was the tiny town of Luber, Ark., where 27 families had to wait until last year to know the thrill enjoyed by a multitude of rural Americans in the past 26 years — since REA was established to help bring light and power to the unserved, wherever they might be. How did the folks in Luber react? Rather than being resentful about the delay, residents expressed gratitude that progress had reached them.

To get to the 27 families who are now being served, it was necessary to dynamite and drill through solid rock to place poles across the mountains in the area. A year later, the results are easy to see. Kerosene lamps are gathering dust. Television antennas are appearing on more and more of the houses, some tiny ones perched on a hillside.

Appliance dealers are making the long trip over rough mountain roads with such heavy items as electric ranges, refrigerators, even home freezers. All the families have at least one small appliance, such as an electric iron or radio. Lester Gill has lived 50 years without electricity, and one year with it. "Boy, I'm telling you right," he remarked, "I wouldn't be without it. We have a television, refrigerator, radio, iron and one of those deep-fryer things. We can stay up later at night now, too."

It took years, but electricity got there just the same! And that — in a

You, as a reader, have given a useful thought to an important problem and the writer is proud to have called your attention to an important subject that you may have overlooked.

nitshell — is the true story of rural electrification.

Unfinished Work

Had George Norris lived to be a thousand years old, his work would not have been completed. His aim was to make a better life for people — to insure justice for rich and poor alike — to secure the fruits of their labor for those who create the wealth of the nation.

Although George Norris championed the cause of people generally, he was particularly concerned with the welfare of rural people. It was the depression of the early 1930s that triggered his greatest work. Agriculture was on the rocks, the utility companies were riding high politically and bank deposits, representing the life savings of many people, were evaporating before the depositors' eyes.

In the battle for the establishment of the REA, Norris threw himself into the fight without restraint. Had he not done so, this great agency would have been delayed and possibly have been established on a basis less favorable to the rural areas of the country. Even so, he did not win every point in the rural electrification battle and had to accept modifications in the initial program in order to get this great work underway.

The battle for an effective REA was won in the conference meetings with the House, at which Senator Norris was usually the sole representative of the Senate. As a result of his persistency in this epic struggle, over 98 percent of all the farms in the United States are now using central station electric service.

Largely as a result of the REA victory, American agriculture has become the envy of the world and our most potent weapon in defense of democratic government.

SENATOR GEORGE W. NORRIS

Sen. George W. Norris Led In Rural Electrification

If Sen. George W. Norris had lived, he would have been 100 years old Tuesday. Centennial observances have been scheduled in many parts of the country — including his home state of Nebraska.

The state has good reasons to be thankful for this man's efforts. As co-author of the Rural Electrification Administration Act of 1936, he was responsible for helping make a cheap, efficient electrical service available to farmers throughout the area.

One year earlier Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt had created REA with the scratch of his pen on his now famous Executive Order which provided for loans — at modest rates — to bring electricity out beyond the city limits.

Standing shoulder to shoulder with his President and his Senatorial colleagues of opposing political party, was Sam Rayburn, Texas — the U. S. Congressman and now Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Americans everywhere have reason to pause and salute these three great leaders whose actions helped lift the burden and lighten the workload for 17 million Americans.

They, perhaps more than any others save the pioneers who formed the non-profit rural electric systems, are responsible for a brighter future for all Americans — through the electrification of Rural America.

Norris' Water Philosophy

"Every stream in the United States which flows from the mountains through the meadows to the sea has the possibility of producing electricity for cheap power and cheap lighting, to be carried into the homes and businesses and industry of the American people. This natural resource was given by an all-wise Creator to his people and not to organizations of greed. No man and no organization of men ought to be allowed to make a financial profit out of it." — George Norris.

Experts —

sons, corporations, cooperatives, cities and states to build facilities to serve rural areas.

By law, rural electric systems are prohibited from investing REA loan funds to serve consumers located in any town with more than 1,500 population.

At the same time, the law requires that they provide electricity for everyone in their service area. In many cases this means the rural electric system must stretch its lines over miles of countryside to serve a few small consumers. Service is provided whether the consumer uses $3 or $300 worth of electricity.

Twenty-five years ago consumer-members of these systems gladly accepted this responsibility as a means of bringing light and power to rural America. In spite of the obvious difficulties, rural electricies have proved themselves successful and have grown rapidly.

The average annual KWH consumption per consumer was less than 600 for WCPED the first year. In 1960 it was over 7,000 per farm. As consumption increased, the cost decreased. At first each KWH cost over eight cents. In 1960 the average cost had decreased to less than 2 1/2 cents each.

This has been possible partly because WCPED has never increased its rates and partly because consumers have favored electricity as a cheap and dependable source of power.

Lighting America's Farms Needed Pioneering Leaders

By DAVID LUTT
(Editor's Note: David received a free trip to Washington D. C. for winning the annual Wayne County Public Power District essay contest.)

A kind of pioneering, has gone into lighting up America's farms; a pioneering not unlike that which went into the opening up of the American continent. In community after community, leadership has risen to do a job that had to be done. It is still another proof, if anyone ever had doubts, that Americans can perform any task they set themselves to.

There has been a complete revolution in the life of farmers since 1932. Then only ten percent of the farms had electricity, powered by individual units or some other central station electric service.

Today more than ninety percent of all farm homes have electricity and many of the labor saving devices that go with it. A drive through the countryside makes dramatically clear the effect of rural electrification on community life. Here, there, and everywhere glittering lights appear where there once was nothing but darkness.

The potentialities of irrigation with electric pumps, in areas where irrigation has never been contemplated, suggest greatly increased crop yields. Electric pumps delivering a thousand gallons of water a minute onto the ground enable one man to irrigate nearly 20 acres of pasture and meadow.

Electricity may eventually enable the farmer to process much of his products right on the farm, thus assuring him of higher prices for his crops. He is able to reduce the toll taken by rodents, weevils, mold, and fire through proper handling by new methods.

The economics of the electric motor applied to farm work are simple. The electric motor allows the farmer to apply a small amount of power for a longer period of time instead of using a large amount of power for a short period. With an electric machine small enough for his job, the small farmer can close the gap of efficiency between himself and the large factory farm.

The rural electrification program has brought untold benefits to the rural people of our state, and has not cost the taxpayers one cent.

The business establishments of towns and cities enjoy a fine income from the billions of dollars spent by farmers enjoying electricity. This brings a closer relationship between city and rural people.

Electricity has influenced American farm life more than anything else in its history. Not only has farm production been affected, but so has the whole outlook of the rural people. They are becoming better citizens with an increasing interest in local and national affairs.

Without electric power the small farmer cannot compete against the large factory farm. We must not lose sight of the family size farms. The true value of rural electrification in our home and community cannot and shall not be underestimated.

A man and his dog... and three airtight silos on the John Schnoor farm.

Has Three-Phase Service; Better Corn, Oat Storage

Three blue enameled silos seven miles west and two miles south of Randolph mark the farm of John Schnoor—one of the largest users of three phase electrical service in this area.

Each of the silos has a 10,000 bushel grain or oil storage capacity. Schnoor said they enable him to retain feed value.

"Livestock gains are good enough so there's no need to add a protein supplement," he explained.

In addition, shell corn can be put in with as high as 30 percent moisture content. Storage in conventional type bins would require an artificial reduction in moisture content of about 15 percent.

A 60 foot auger, also run by electricity, fills the silos and carries grain to overhead bins to feed by gravity into the grinding

Electricity Use Grows Every Year

First came electric lights. Then an electric motor, then the pump, a washing machine and electric iron. That was the parade of new electric appliances and equipment that crowded on the heels of rural electrification as it spread across America.

Freezers followed refrigerators; electric ranges replaced the coal, wood or oil stoves. Then came pressure water systems, water heaters, electric milkers and motors for the cream separator, corn sheller, feed grinder and farm elevator.

As farmers discovered electricity could reduce tedious hand labor, use of electricity on the farm and in the home is making rural living brighter.

Use of electricity has jumped from a meager average annual consumption of 600 kilowatt hours per farm during the early days of rural electrification to an average of 700 kw-hr per month today.

In contrast to farm dependence on electricity, city dwellers, using electricity for household appliances and lighting only, average just 3,200 kw-hr in a year's time.

Electric power and light has enabled American farmers to step up their production per man much faster than city factories. It has helped farm workers to double their production in the past 14 years — produce three times as much per hour as they did at the start of rural electrification 26 years ago.

While electricity has been revolutionizing farming, it has been performing miracles in raising our standards of living. Improved sanitation has meant better health in both town and country. Electricity has been an important factor in helping provide fresh, clean, high quality food in abundance for city tables.

Where one farm worker produced enough to feed 10 people in 1930, the average farm worker today produces even more nutritious food for 25 — never have so many been fed so well by so few.

Experts say electricity will play an even more important role in rural areas where the demand for electricity is expected to reach eight times the present consumption by 1985.

More than just lending a helping hand at work, play and daily living in rural areas, rural electrification is a tremendous economic force, making jobs for millions of workers and creating business for merchants on every main street in America.

This includes the billions of dollars invested in the 1½ million miles of rural electric lines and equipment and the almost endless list of appliances and equipment found on farms and in country homes.

In the next 20-25 years, rural people will spend 25-35 billion for things electrical — lights, wiring, television, radio, air conditioners, space heating, freezers, water systems, water motors and other electrical appliances and equipment that go with modern farming and rural living.

Feed is protected from the weather in this concrete bunk with a roof belonging to John Heinemann.

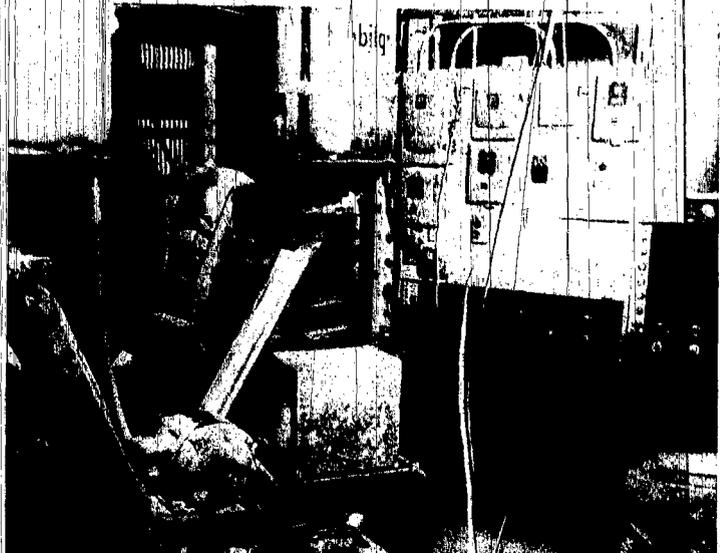

Pushbutton Cattle Feeding Yields Cheaper Cattle Gain

John Heinemann gives enthusiastic approval to his pushbutton cattle feeding operation after seven months of use.

The 1954 cattle a mixture of oat silage and dry corn in 15 minutes two times a day with only the flick of a switch to move the oats from an unloader at the bottom of the silo and into an auger which takes it the full width of his concrete feed bunk.

The dry corn which is increased from 1 1/2 to 12 pounds per day per head over a four-month period enters the picture by means of an auger which brings it from a concrete bin through a weighing device attached to the silo and into the feed bunk with the oats.

Heinemann said the operation is quicker than feeding with a shovel and produces cheaper gains because no feed value is lost in the airtight silo and concrete roof-protected feed bunks.

Feed is mixed automatically at the John Heinemann farm.

THERE WERE FEW ANCIENTS AMONG THE "ANCIENT ROMANS"

THE AVERAGE ANCIENT ROMAN LIVED TO BE 27

The American born in 1961 can look forward to a life span of nearly 70 years. Since 1900 alone, average life expectancy has climbed an incredible 20 years. Medical progress is the great achiever of these revolutionary gains. New research and new knowledge today promises even further advances.

Nevertheless, neglecting to see a physician in time to benefit fully from modern medical science is cheating many of only of average years, but of extra years. Clearly, the great step toward better health and longer life is simple: regular medical check-ups.

ADJUSTING THE HEAT is easy for Clarence Morris at the Carroll club room.

Electricity Offers "Clean" Heat For Community Clubs

The Carroll Community Club Room has clean efficient heat because of electricity. The attractive 18 x 36 foot room, located above the city auditorium in Carroll, was dedicated May 7 after construction was completed by volunteer workers in the community.

Three electric resistance heating units make it possible to hold meetings in comfort during the winter as well as summer. In addition, there is no humidity loss and the air is kept circulating by a built-in fan.

Each of the units is controlled separately with a thermostat on the unit. Two of the units run on 3,000 watts and one on 4,000 watts.

Public Power System Born Over Quarter Century Ago

More than a quarter of a century ago, Nebraska became the uncertain parent of a peculiar offspring. This addition to the state is commonly known as a statewide public power system. There had never been a creature quite like it. And it has not yet been matched in any of the other 48 states.

At the time of its birth, the most pressing demands of the drought and depression days of the early 1930's were for irrigation and employment. Public power was included principally to help support these.

However, public power thrived and grew to proportions never dreamed of by the state. In less than ten years, all the state's electrical power facilities were owned by the public. None are owned by private individuals or companies.

Bared without precedent or guidelines, fast-growing public power was rambunctious, usually unpredictable, sometimes unruly.

Aside from its own growth pattern, the power system is caught, with the rest of the state, in the rapidly social and economic makeup of this agricultural area. Nebraska is gradually shifting its foundation toward a balance of agriculture and industry. Its people are moving from farms to the cities.

At the same time, the remaining farmers are needing greater amounts of electrical power and power-using industries are springing up in rural areas as well as cities. This evolution, too, is causing a long look at the makeup of the state power system.

In spite of the difficulties and of inevitable changes though, this public-owned electrical system has managed to keep pace with Nebraska's soaring demands for electricity. Use of electricity in the state has increased 60 percent since 1935.

Nebraska's power rates have ranked among the six or seven lowest in the nation. Its average electric bill for 250 kilowatt hours in 1959 was $6.23 compared with a national average of $7.26. This resulted, in part from the fact that, being owned by the public, the state's power facilities were required to pay only nominal taxes and to yield no profits.

The rates now paid by Nebraskans mean a savings of several million dollars a year as compared with that paid by users in most other states. Power developments in the state have contributed greatly to the development of irrigation, recharge of underground water and availability of water for recreation. The system has made possible an atomic energy plant, the first of its kind in the world.

In the beginning, the system served only eight percent of Nebraska's farms with electricity. By now, an estimated 97 percent are electrified, a key factor in Nebraska's agriculture progress. While public power operates on a statewide basis in Nebraska, it is not supervised by any state agency. It exists instead, as a network of individual districts. Each of the 11 districts must perform one or more of the electrical functions—generation, transmission and selling to individual users. Each district is autonomous and answers only to the voters within its boundaries who elect its directors.

Except for the area covered by the Omaha Public Power District, at least two different districts operate in all areas. Consumers District is principal power supplier in towns and cities outside the Omaha area and there are 36 districts providing service to rural areas.

Electricity for farm use - the Sholes substation.

Four Substations Cut Local Power

Four substations at Wayne, Winside, Sholes and Osmond reduce the 69,000 volt power supply which enters the Wayne County Public Power District from Belden.

The largest of these is the 1,500 KW substation located three miles south and one mile east of Wayne.

The other three, located one mile north and two and one-half miles west of Winside; two miles south of Sholes and three and one-half miles east of Osmond are each 1,000 KW.

By means of different sized coils, the substations cut the entering 69,000 volts to 7,200 volts. The voltage is further reduced to 230 and 120 volts at each farm.
