GRASSROOTS GLEANINGS

by Bill Stokes

Do you ever get the feeling that maybe the space age is moving too doggone fast in some areas? I got that feeling some time ago when I thumbed through the Redfield (S.D.) Press and read that the modern way to spread fertilizer is with aircraft.

"No waste, even distribution, fast application," the advertisement read.

I'd just like to know if the fellow who wrote that ad copy ever had to hand-spread a load of manure on a windy, wintery day?

The daily manure run was one of my youthful chores when school wasn't in session, and I can vividly remember the necessity for developing a successful spreading technique. When throwing a forkful into the teeth of a blizzard, for example, it is absolutely essential to turn your face immediately away from the direction in which you have thrown.

Frequently, I suffered the consequences of not moving quickly enough. One learns from such experience.

We used a bobsled and a team of horses, and the horses were guided from a precarious perch on the rear of the sled. You had to stand with your feet spread wide apart, because it just wasn't smart to fall to either side. Nor was it advisable to fall forward. This meant that you leaned backwards, and if you lost your balance, the chances were fair that you'd fall off the back of the sled. This made for a longer but much cleaner fall.

Sometimes when a runner of the sled hit a rock, there would be a sudden interruption of forward progress, and avoiding a forward fall was absolutely impossible. It is an unforgettable experience, and must be the basis for the saying about it being possible to take the boy out of the farm but not the farm out of the boy.

My father was a very particular barn keeper. He demanded that the floor be white and spotless. It is only too obvious that he wasn't concerned about his son staying in like condition.

Dad's way of telling me to make the manure run was to assure me that I needed the fresh air. I could never quite figure out how you were supposed to get any fresh air while riding on a mound of manure.

I never asked him about it though, because he would have told me to "think fresh," and under the circumstances I just wasn't up to it.

An editorial in the Crookston (Minn.) Daily Times criticizes college boys for "that silly and dangerous business" of competing for the record of being tumbled in a clothes dryer for as long as possible.

You can't tend to agree with the Crookston editor that it is silly and dangerous, but you just might ask why this fad hasn't given someone the idea of marketing a machine especially designed to wash boys—younger boys.

The machine would, of course, have to slow down the agitator action and provide for an air supply while a boy was going through the washing cycle. And if most boys are anything like ours, there would have to be a huge sand and mud filter on the machine's drain in order to avoid plugging up the plumbing.

If enough mothers would like to see a clean-boy-machine, perhaps this column can persuade a manufacturer to try the project.

A United Press item that doubtless appeared elsewhere also, but which came to this column's attention in the Watertown (Wis.) Daily Times, said that people could improve their posture by acting like cats.

It said that if a person would get down on all fours and arch his back like a cat, his posture would improve. Another suggested exercise was the "dog stretch" in which you bend down from a standing position until the palms touch the floor. The fingers are then "walked" forward until the body is in a "push-up" position. The feet are walked toward the hands and you stand up straight, or straighter.

Now, if I tried either of these exercises the following things would likely happen: someone would step on my fingers, one of the kids would jump on my back, the dog would bite me, my wife would demand to smell my breath, and if the neighbors were looking in the window they'd call the police.

STYLED FOR SUMMER

By Susan Lowe

"A rose is a rose" sang a celebrated poet, but not always is this so, for a strawberry too is a rose of sorts; a legitimate member of the rose family. No wonder the fragrance of strawberries is so meltingly sweet, their beauty so enticing.

We've assembled a bevy of berry dessert recipes, all styled for summer entertaining. Most are simple enough for everyday fare, but glamorous and delicious too. You'll want to make good old fashioned strawberry shortcake of course, and it's fun to make as individual shortcakes for a change, cutting with a cookie cutter.

Remember too that you can always combine rhubarb with strawberries in pie. You'll want to freeze berries for winter desserts, so why not freeze some of your strawberry pies while you're at it?

Remember that the berry season isn't confined to strawberries alone for raspberries and blueberries also make delicious summer desserts. You can make a pretty berry pie with raspberries, loganberries or blackberries.

These are but a few of the berry desserts you can make, all styled for summer serving!

OLD FASHIONED STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE

- 1 quart fresh strawberries, cut in half
- 1 cup sugar
- 2 cups sifted flour
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- 3/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 cup sugar
- 1/2 cup shortening
- 1 egg, beaten
- 1/2 cup milk
- 2 tablespoons melted butter or margarine
- 1 cup heavy cream, whipped

Combine strawberries and 1 cup sugar; mix well. Sift flour, baking powder, salt and 1/4 cup sugar together. Cut in shortening. Add egg and milk and mix lightly. Knead gently 10 times. 1 package instant pudding, vanilla flavor
1 cup heavy cream

1 cup mixed raspberries, blueberries, blackberries*
½ teaspoon grated lemon peel

Chill pie shell. Pour milk into mixing bowl. Add instant pudding and beat with egg beater until well mixed, about 1 minute. Turn into pie shell. Chill until firm. When ready to serve, whip cream and spoon it over pie. Scatter berries and lemon peel on cream. Makes 1 8-inch pie.

STRAWBERRY RHUBARB PIE

1½ cups sifted flour
¼ teaspoon salt

2 to 4 tablespoons cold water
½ cup shortening

Using a pastry wheel or knife, cut dough into strips ⅞-inch wide. Turn filling into bottom crust. Arrange strips diagonally over pie filling like spokes of wheel. (Or, if desired, bake strips on pan and place on filling after baking pie.) Brush rim of pastry with water. Place strip around edge and then press firmly. Bake in hot oven (425°F.) 35 to 40 minutes. 2 cups whole or sliced strawberries*

Combine sugar, flour, cinnamon and salt. Add to rhubarb and strawberries and mix lightly. Turn into bottom crust.

Makes one 9-inch pie.

20-INCH ROWS, 33,500 PLANTS, 301 BUSHEL

If you should stop by the farm of Richard M. Smith & Sons near Medina, Ohio this summer, you'd likely see an outstanding example of thick corn planting and what can happen under favorable conditions.

For the past six years the Smiths have planted a one acre plot of corn in 20-inch rows on bottom land soil. They attain a plant population of about 33,500. This is done by setting the planter to drop a kernel every 7 inches.

This exceptional acre yielded 301 bushels. His harvest stalk count on 40-inch rows was 20,000 per acre.

Admittedly, this plot is experimental, but it's an attempt to see what can be done. The Smiths account for their yields this way:

"First we put on lots of manure . . . at least 100 tons. Then we plowed down 1,000 pounds of 12-12-12. We plowed only once.

"At planting we applied 500 pounds of 6-24-12 with the planter. This past year we sprayed with Atrazine and didn't cultivate. At silking time we irrigated with urea dissolved in river water. We applied 125 pounds of actual nitrogen."

To irrigate with urea they dump it into a barrel to dissolve. Then they use a suction pump to take the fertilizer solution out of the barrel where it is mixed with more water and sprayed on the field.

To get 20-inch rows they use a standard 2-row planter set for 40-inch rows, then swing the drawbar and go over the field again in the same tracks.

Mr. Smith in commenting on this experimental plot observed: "This would be practical if it could be harvested by machine."

But the Smiths don't only get tremendous yields on "souped-up" experimental plots; they attain big yields on all of their cropland. In 1962 they averaged 150 bushels on the upland fields and 186 bushels on river bottom fields. Here's the corn growing program they followed this past year on their 61 acres of corn grown for grain, as well as the 16 silage acres.

1. They spread sawdust and sloppy manure all winter . . . whenever weather and ground permitted.

2. They spread 500 pounds of 12-12-12 on the bottom land that is in continuous corn. The upland got 400 pounds per acre. They spread just ahead of plowing.

3. Good plowing at the right time. This is one of the most important keys to getting high corn yields, Smiths believe. "We're never in a hurry to plow," Smith says. "We like to plow when it's not too wet, yet just ahead of planting. In fact, we like to plow one day and plant the next.

"If the ground is plowed at the right moisture, one disking is enough. Once over with a double disk and our ground is ready for planting."

4. At planting, 6-24-12 was applied at the rate of 250 pounds per acre.

5. Used chemical weed control. This year they used Atrazine on the bottom land, 2-4-D on the upland.

"We've had continuous corn in our river bottom for the past four years and it gets better every year," observed Smith.

On the uplands the Smiths use a rotation system. "We leave the meadows as long as they're good; some of 'em are 8 to 10 years old," he said. "We re-seed after corn with alfalfa-brome."

One thing's for sure with the Smiths, when there's a chance for boosting corn yields through improved methods, they'll give it a try. "We try to do the same thing in our dairy operation. We can't afford to do otherwise," he says.

What happens in "all out" corn production?

Last year Keith Smith, Jasper, Michigan had a yield check showing 165.8 bushels per acre in a test area . . . and his whole crop from nearly 100 acres averaged out an ever 150 bushels. "This is a jump of 20.8 bushels per acre from my yield check a year ago," says Smith.

Smith is a young farmer who aims for top efficiency as he steadily expands his business. Already the owner of 120 acres, he rents an additional 60 and he pushes for top yields of both corn and wheat on all the land he handles. He is now feeding 100 head of beef cattle and is working on plans to expand to around 300 head.

Using a special fertilizer program for corn, Keith Smith is following fertilizer recommendations based on a complete test of the soils in each field. Last year he applied 400 lbs. of 5-20-20 per acre at the row, placing fertilizer to one side and below the seed. Then he followed with a sidedress application of anhydrous ammonia. For continuous corn he figures a minimum of 100 pounds of actual nitrogen is probably needed in addition to the 20 lbs. or so contributed by the row application of fertilizer.

On his naturally fertile soils, Keith plants 21,000 kernels to the acre, aiming for a harvest time population of 18,500 to 19,000 ear bearing stalks. His high yielding corn in 1962 was one of the single crosses. With his fertilizer program, this single cross produced sound, well-filled uniform ears at the high population needed for 150+ bushels corn.

The program Smith follows is well within the reach of most Top Farmers in the Midwest.

How far should you go with corn plant productions?

One of the best informed men in the world on the subject of corn plant populations and the many factors which contribute to resultant yields is Mr. C. H. Stringfield, research agronomist for DeKalb Seed Corn.

What is a thick corn stand? Stringfield's answer was that any finished stand of 12,000 plants per acre or more in the southern part of the corn belt is heavy corn. In the north, 16,000 or more is considered high. You find quite a number of finished stands of 20,000 or more. He said that the great majority of farmers plant at less than 16,000. He further explained that plants are smaller in the north and therefore more are needed to fill an acre. Fewer large, leafy plants in the south provide as much shading effect as larger counts of smaller plants up north.

"String" says that any farmer who really knows his farm . . . has been growing corn on it for years . . . has a good chance of being able to increase his stands without running into trouble. He says such a farmer can almost produce the size crop he desires by proper seed corn selection, proper rates and ratios of applied fertilizer, and high populations. Of course, nature must cooperate.

"The successful farmer isn't bashful about the use of fertilizer. It takes certain amounts of basic elements to produce certain amounts of corn. It's that simple . . . low plant food level . . . low yields."

One of the rules of thumb he gave as a guide to plant populations in a given field was: "An optimum stand should produce air dry ears that average a half a pound or slightly more."

String listed environment factors and genetic factors which should be considered. Environmental factors include: Soil productivity — texture, slope and drainage along with sufficient nutrients; weather and climate — the higher the rainfall, the higher the plant populations (North and Eastern Iowa up to 9,500 plants per acre and parts of Indiana up to 20,000); day length — shorter seasons up north. Hybrids require higher populations to utilize each acre.

Listed among genetic factors are shade tolerance — some varieties are much more tolerant. Stringfield feels shading can cut yields by a third. Barrenness can also be linked with shading feels Stringfield. Stalk quality is a genetic factor.

A resistance to stalk rots as well as a good strong rind is a protection against a tangled mess at harvest time. A good root anchor can also prevent lodging and the greater genetic tendency toward prolificacy, the lower the incidence of barrenness.

Another set of conditions that have led to serious trouble is heavy stands and low fertility.

to Control flies

You'll find it pays to spray with Diazinon—just one residual application on dairy barn walls and ceiling, kills flies for weeks.

Diazinon saves time and labor, gives you lower cost per day of protection. So spray less . . . pay less for effective fly control. Ask your farm supply dealer for Diazinon—one of the safer, phosphate insecticides.
