Way Back When

Comparison Shopping

When you go shopping for a particular item, do you go from store to store comparing quality and price? Comparison shopping is a common habit.

In a similar manner, do you when on a trip, compare your hometown with those of similar size? What is it in a community that most often impresses you? Some folk drive through a city and are impressed because it appears lawns are well groomed and the streets are clean. Others say they like a certain town because people are friendly and, as one person put it, "The entire town had a fresh look about it."

Neat lawns, attractive buildings and good streets are strong indications of a community's attitude and civic pride. Functional buildings are just as important to a thriving community as are beautiful buildings.

Suppose you are shopping around Wayne with the idea of locating your home or business here. After looking over the city for first impressions, you take a second look.

You make a second judgment of civic pride upon discovering the 5,300 residents expect the city clerk to carry on a near $3 million dollar annual business in a room approximately 20 by 25 feet, plus another small room.

You find out the college town is in the midst of fighting a rising crime rate. The rising rate is happening all over, but what is unusual is that the citizenry asks for more police protection while not providing the police department with a special investigator requested by the chief months ago. When you also find out police are being asked to carry on operations out of a small side-building attached to an old fire hall, you begin to question the community's claim of being progressive.

You then inquire about the city hospital and find out it doesn't even meet the standards of the state fire marshal.

What is your conclusion? Love it or leave it? How about loving it and doing some new building? — MMW.

BRING SLIPPERY HOURS!

They Are Terrible

If you have traveled on one of the state highways out of or into Wayne recently, your comment about road conditions is more than likely "They are terrible."

Highways north, south, east and west out of Wayne are presently unsafe at the speed limit.

Highway 35 from Wayne to Norfolk and from Wayne to Emerson is a series of patches on patches, frost boils, red flags and "rough road" signs.

Driving from Wayne south is fine for nine miles and then a motorist has the choice of either driving on a gravelled county road, a detour, or continuing south on a rough, slightly gravelled, state highway that continues to be under construction after more than a year of being torn up. Either road requires cautious, slow driving. As one heads north out of Wayne on Highway 15, the road surface is similar to corrugated steel.

Regardless of which highway you use on a trip into or out of town, plan to go early and it might be well to make an appointment with your garage repairman in advance.

State Senator Elmer Wallace of Emerson spoke before local Kiwanis last week and, when asked about the roads, quipped, "It was the first time I have ever been high-centered on asphalt."

After getting out of the immediate area, highways are generally in good shape; however, it looks like we're going to be bouncing around a long time. — MMW.

Out of Old

Nebraska

The Richard E. Dill Concrete House Native Nebraskan ingenuity has produced houses made of straw, chalk, and sod, all unusual in their own respects. But perhaps unique of all the various materials architectural files of the Nebraska State Historical Society tell of its exclusive use in a home built by Richard E. Dill in Alexandria in 1936.

Mr. Dill, a native of Alexandria and a retired rural mail carrier who likes to call himself a "practical engineer," has been referred to in national as well as international publications as the "father" of pre-stressed concrete technology in the United States.

The idea for the construction method used in building the house was first conceived and patented by Mr. Dill in the early 1930's. It consists of a process known today in technical language as post-tensioning. Simplified, the process he used consisted of pouring concrete into a form, into which were embedded greased steel rods that were threaded on both ends and protruded from the forms (the rods were greased to prevent the occurrence of a bond between the concrete and the steel rods while the concrete set). As the concrete set, a flange was placed on either end and the nuts on the exposed threaded rod ends were tightened so as to stress the steel and thus compress the concrete. This stress gave added strength to the concrete and prevented cracking, thus slowing down the weathering process over the years.

The house itself, with the exception of a conventionally poured concrete floor, is entirely built of stressed twelve- and fourteen-foot slabs. The ceiling and walls consist of a double row of these one-inch-thick slabs, leaving a gap between them of from 18 to 24 inches which is filled with straw. The straw serves as insulation for the home and has worked so well that only a regular-sized fireplace is needed to heat the house to a comfortable level in winter.

Other unique features incorporated in the house include a thirty-foot metal-lined shaft going into the ground, thus utilizing the nearly constant earth temperature, which varies little from 40 degrees, to cool the house in summer and, channeled through the central fireplace, to heat the house in winter. Kitchen storage area connected to the shaft acts as a cooler the year round, taking the place of a refrigerator, although the Dills do have a freezer.

At a time when few people had bathrooms, this six-room house had two, along with a stainless steel sink, and chrome furnishings all of which created quite a stir in the small Thayer county town during the 1930's.

Because the house has no woodwork it can also be considered as one of the first 100% fireproof homes, although a fire did occur in the straw insulation due to faulty wiring. The damage, however, was minor and readily repaired.

Although Mr. Dill has received little monetary rewards for his patent and relative little renown in Nebraska for his accomplishments, nevertheless, if the house should only stand half of the thousand years which Mr. Dill has predicted it will even though the roof has developed minor leaks over the years, it will certainly serve as tangible evidence to the ingenuity of a unique native Nebraskan.

Capital News —

Legislature, Gov. J. J. Exon Drifting on Collision Course

LINCOLN — The Legislature — which has been there before — steered itself onto a collision course with Gov. J. J. Exon last week.

Even though the governor has called it "the great tax hoax of 1971" and guaranteed a veto, the lawmakers voted to give preliminary approval to the personal property tax exemption bill.

After spending most of the day debating a series of amendments, the senators put a 31-13 endorsement on LB 573 and sent it to second reading.

That 31-vote total could wind up to be crucial in the stare-down with Exon. If the bill passes and the governor responds with the veto he has promised, it would take 30 votes to override him.

Sen. J. W. Burbach of Croton has been faced with the veto problem before. He is sponsor of the exemption proposal and he was the introducer of the bill to increase the food sales tax credit. Exon vetoed the latter measure and Burbach decided against attempting an override. He was outvoted by others, and it failed.

Score that round to Exon — who, by the way, had his local veto sustained this session too.

But Burbach says he has more strength on the exemption measure and indicated he hoped to be able to battle the governor down to the wire this time.

The Burbach bill is designed to implement Amendment 10, one of the constitutional changes authorized by the voters last fall. The amendment permits the Legislature to divide personal property into classes and exempt any class it wishes from taxation.

The Burbach bill establishes classes for business and agricultural equipment and inventories. As it was amended on the floor last week, it would exempt 50 per cent of the actual value of those classes of property from taxation in 1972, 1973 and 1974. In 1975, the waiver would be increased to 60 per cent, with an additional 10 per cent excused from taxation for each year until 50 per cent is exempted.

Burbach says local governments — the schools, the cities, the counties and other units depending on property taxes — have been getting about $48 million in revenue from those classes of personal property. If half were erased from the rolls, the local governments would lose $24 million a year. His bill would have that loss made up from the state treasury.

The state would get its money from the sales and income taxes — which would have to be increased to provide it — and that's where Burbach and Exon part company.

The governor has promised that the sales and income tax rates won't exceed 2 1/2 per cent and 13 per cent next year if he can help it. It would take another 1/2 per cent of sales tax and another 1 per cent of personal income tax to meet the demands of the Burbach bill.

The senator contends — and he had floor support last week — that Nebraskans want property tax relief even if it does force the sales and income tax rates beyond the governor's recommendations.

That same argument was used later last week when Sen. Jerome Warner's bill to raise the state school aid by $54 million a year was debated. An Exon veto also was programmed for the Waverly lawmaker's proposal.

Ear-marking Method Used One way to sidestep an impact on

The Little Pulpit

Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

— 1 Corinthians 6:20

sales and income taxes is to finance a project from another source.

That was the method chosen for the proposed state office building and the new University of Nebraska fieldhouse.

The senators decided to increase cigarette taxes and dedicate the additional revenue to the two construction projects.

Comhusker Athletic Director Bob Devaney launched that campaign.

The bill reached final reading late last week.

Liquor taxes were offered as a financial resource for another legislative problem. The senators voted to have the state take over the financing of a statewide community college system — which incorporates junior colleges and area vocational-technical schools.

If smokers could finance an office building and a fieldhouse, drinkers, it was proposed, could pay for the community colleges.

Sen. Terry Carpenter of Scottsbluff, who had been behind the other two earmarking strategies, said there was a way to find the funds for the personal property tax exemption expenses, too.

He suggested that intangible taxes, which were repealed in 1967, could be reinstated. No formal action had been taken on that suggestion as last week moved to a close.

Classes at Home Proposed

NU Chancellor Durward B. Varner last week suggested that the state's educational television network be used to provide a complete collegiate freshman curriculum for home study.

Varner won permission from the University Foundation to conduct a study of the idea. He said it could be ready to go — if "external" funding is found — by the middle of the next academic year.

Wayne

Dear Editor: Tuesday afternoon I was babysitting with my seven-year-old brother who is home with the chicken pox. When he answered the door a lady said that there were some people in the car who wanted to see him. In came the Blue Fairy, Gippetto and Pinocchio. This was a big thrill for a little boy who was heartbroken over not getting to see Pinocchio with the rest of his class. Nice to know such busy people have time for others.

On behalf of my brother, Tommy, many thanks to Dr. Helen Russell and her fine cast. (Editor's Note: This letter was sent to the Wayne Stater, but since no more issues of the college newspaper will be printed for some time, it is being printed in The Wayne Herald.)
