'Walking Blood Bank'

We hope the local Kiwanians and Mrs. Jaycees have good luck in increasing the enrollment in the "Walking Blood Bank" at the Wayne Hospital.

"Walking Blood Bank" will help insure that somebody who needs blood quickly will not have to wait. The person whose blood type matches the patient's can be notified to report to the hospital to give blood, saving precious hours and minutes in many cases.

Subject to Penalty

Staff members at the local county welfare office recently discovered a case where a Wayne State College student gave a false income report in order to qualify for the government's food stamp assistance program.

Those who would like to become part of the "Walking Blood Bank" can clip and fill out the registration form which will be printed in a coming edition of The Wayne Herald.—N.H.H.

Capital News — State Will Not Challenge County Property Valuations

LINCOLN — Property valuations certified by the state's 93 counties probably will be accepted without challenge by the State Board of Equalization again this year.

The committee has on its agenda consideration of the need for a new state men's reformatory and the new warden of the penal complex, Charles L. Wolf, will discuss that need at the Friday meeting in Lincoln.

Bad Feelings Gone Too Far

There have been bad feelings between young people in Wayne and Pierce for the past few years. Those feelings sometimes cropped up during high-school sports activities when the play became a little harder and rougher than against other schools.

We're not in a position to say who was at fault in the fight, which occurred during the Whiside Old Settlers Reunion last week. However, we do know that hospitalizing a person because of bad feelings between two towns is going too far, especially if it comes about from such despicable fighting methods.

It is easy to flatter; it is harder to praise. — Jean Paul Richter.

Out of Old Nebraska

For over one hundred and fifty years, the Missouri River has been an important avenue of commerce for the Great Plains and Rocky Mountain regions. Along with the large steamboats, flatboating by individuals was also long lived. The following account, written after the disastrous Missouri River Flood of 1881, was published in the Omaha Daily Herald of June 26, 1881, and may be found in the Nebraska State Historical Society.

His trip was a very long one, it having been made to Omaha in previous years in as short a time as twenty-six days. But Lameau's party encountered head winds which made them lay up frequently in the day and run nights when the wind had gone down. Lameau and his companions are finely educated men, and they like the life in that northwest region so much that they propose to return, first selling their boat and making a trip east.

Dear Editor:

As a collector of old trade tokens or chips, I was especially interested in one that I saw in Sioux City, recently. It was a 2 1/2 cent brass chip—William Dammeyer, proprietor, Wayne, Nebr.

Of course, most of these chips have been out of use for 40 years or longer. However, there are still lots of them around if one looks for them. Could you tell me of anyone in Wayne who would have some of these old tokens that I could buy or trade for? — Wilton L. Woodward

The large sign and the jammed cars on the northeast edge of Wakefield don't result in a very pleasing or very convincing picture for the traveler entering Wakefield from that direction.

Wakefield, like Wayne and other area towns, isn't putting its best foot forward when it lets a situation such as this exist. People driving through the community aren't likely to take a very pleasant image of it with them.

Small communities such as those in northeast Nebraska are having a difficult enough time surviving without contributing to their own decline. What's the solution? We're not sure. We realize that modern life takes a heavy toll on man and society—most noticeably in the junk and garbage that pile up all-around him. We also realize that because those piles of junk exist doesn't necessarily mean that they need to be displayed for all to see.

Yard & Garden Tips

Q. How much water should you put on a lawn in a day? A. Studies show that a lawn will use approximately one-fourth to one-third of an inch of water per day. Q. Is it advisable to break the onion tops down to make the globe larger? A. No. When the onion matures the tops will go down naturally.

Health Tips

Here is a health tip from the Nebraska State Medical Association: Sports and activities which provide regular, vigorous exercise can be an important foundation stone of good health. Many adults' feet sports are only for the very young. But as man grows lazier, he grows fatter—his heart, arteries and muscles degenerate. Lifetime sports—sports you can enjoy well past your middle years—are important and readily available to everyone. Bowling, walking, swimming, ice skating and many other activities can improve your muscle tone, keep your body in trim shape and get rid of pent-up emotional stresses and strains. Walking is a fine overall body conditioner as it brings nearly every muscle into use, while improving heart action and blood circulation. Lifetime sports, enjoyed regularly and sensibly, may in some instances contribute as much to your future health as medicine or surgery.

Motorists using the Seventh and Main intersection in Wayne were inconvenienced a bit two days last week by a crew of men installing new detectors to trigger the traffic lights at the corner. The new detectors, which operate by a magnetic field, were installed at all four approaches to the intersection. They will keep traffic moving smoothly by varying the length of time between light changes according to the amount of traffic coming from all four directions. The detectors include wires laid in the pavement and a triggering box on one of the corners. Working on the project Tuesday were John Thiel of Wayne, employee at the Wayne Department of Roads yard, and electronic technicians Stanley Davis and Jerry Waldman, both of Lincoln. Pouring epoxy to seal the wires are Waldman, left, and Thiel.

Good Morning Feeders & Hi Mom

By Eddie Collins

Each morning at 2:32 a demoralizing clock rings sharply. I arise, scratch and yawn for 5-10 minutes. Then, with squinted eyes I try to assemble last night's thoughts and correlate yesterday's late beef developments.

I talk to the farm and ranch moms about cattle. You see, I know their men are too bull-headed to ever accept advice, but I also know who are the bosses: the banker and the misus.

Recently upon returning from a tour of speaking engagements to livestock producers in South Dakota, Colorado and Wyoming, I found a sick, rapidly crumbling national beef trade. Off over $2 CWT, tight quarters and 8/9 weights, were quoted as selling direct at below $40, dressed carcasses across Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, Kansas and Nebraska.

The packing industry makes more profit in depressed, demoralized markets providing they destroy the producer's confidence. Hopes of $40 steers last August became a panic stricken $28, then $28 sale in December.

Why? Less interest and expense, greater plant efficiency with increased volume and cattle could be purchased $1 a hundred under the infamous Yellow Sheet, $1 radio.

By radio we counter attacked. First, by attempting to rebuild producers' confidence. Second, by urging price resistance. I set the suggested dressed price at $52 steers, $51 heifers—no weight. And, he'd fast that level for three weeks despite discrepancies.

Odd thing, in one day three beefmen from three separate independent packing plants telephoned. All voiced the same suggestions: "The radio program had lost reliability. We were dollars out of line. No cattleman would ever listen again. The cattle market was too high and Eastern chain stores would never accept such prices. Oh, yes, Ed, wouldn't you like to buy cattle again?"

I realize that feeders of quality cattle need no personal help or advice, but they do need protection. Protection from the habitual panic-selling too often dispensed by some 1,000,000 less informed small feeders in eight continental states.

Let a Mr. Nice or Dandy Dan proclaim: "George, only because we ate Kalachi's together at the Wilbur Festival, am I protecting you. True, I'm bidding $1 lower on your 127 head, but the beefman out every other layer off. Also the butchers in Long Island are boycotting beef. This will raise havoc with the future. At my bid, Buddy, you at least break even."

Unfortunately these cheapies give the beefman a sense of insecurity and doubt. Cattle $1 cheap. Now, instead of lapping up a big profit, he passes on the plum to his buddy and—poof—there goes the Yellow Sheet. So, by radio I urged and begged the 'Moms' to grab the truck keys, refuse to help sort, lie in front of the loaded truck, give the silent treatment at night if Dad sold one head cheap.

The fight took a full month. About mid-July beefmen began calling for advice and opinion rather than threats. While what I said on the phone was not important, what I said on the radio was.

Slowly but surely as resistance waned, the advance buy of the Cornbelt packer switched from 3-4 days to immediate delivery. Bail costs rose. The beef departments had to dig deep for higher bids.

We had up the pitch of a possible cattle shortage, especially heavy weights, insisting that no one wanted the peewees. Keep those home. We begged feeders to refuse a Saturday delivery as those 625,000 week slaughters

Livestock Permit Issue Is Explained

Wayne Fisher, area agricultural engineer who works out of the Northeast Station at Concord, recently attended a meeting at which the Army Corps of Engineers' position on issuing permits to large livestock raisers was explained.

Fisher notes that all livestock operations will need permits if they consist of 1,000 or more animal units and have a discharge or make deposits in a navigable stream or a tributary.

One beef steer is the base unit, Fisher explains. Seven hundred dairy cows or 4,500 butcher hogs would make the 1,000 units.

The need for a permit will be determined by the combined total of animals at the site, according to the engineer.

Storm water entering a stream or tributary from adjacent land does not constitute discharge. Examples of discharge would be flow from manure pits in confinement units, washings from concrete platforms or even overflows from water from continuous water systems, he says.

If some of the animals in a livestock operation of the 1,000 unit or above size have access to a stream or tributary, the operator must obtain a permit. If manure from the livestock operation is dumped into or placed on the banks of a stream or tributary, the operator must also obtain an Army Corps of Engineers' permit.

The definition of a navigable stream is self-evident; however, a tributary is often somewhat nebulous, says Fisher. This is a natural water course leading to a navigable stream which may or may not have a continuous flow of water, he notes.

If a feed yard meets the Nebraska standards, a Corps of Engineers permit would not be needed and if a feeder applied for a Corps permit he would not be able to obtain it without the application being approved by the Nebraska agency, according to Corps officials.

There is a $2,500 per day federal fine for operating a feed yard which meets the minimums and did not have a permit, Fisher warns. The application for a permit and any subsequent planning to correct the situation would show good intent according to a Corps spokesman, whereas as the lack of an application and no planning may correct the situation might show disregard for the law, he says.

It was emphasized at the meeting that a very small percentage of the feedyards in Nebraska need the permit and that almost all feedyards in Nebraska would need to meet the state system of approval by Dec. 31, 1972. At this time enforcement of the state laws would become necessary.

Fisher points out that the University of Nebraska College of Agriculture Extension Service, Soil Conservation Service and the State Environmental Control Agency stand ready to give operator assistance with this problem. Cost share payments are also available under the AS&S REAP Program, he says.

Local FHA Office Okays Over $737,000 in Loans

LaVern Ostendorf, county supervisor at the Wayne Farmers Home Administration Office, has announced that during fiscal year 1971, the Wayne office approved loans in the amount of $737,320 to 58 borrowers in Wayne and Stanton Counties.

The amount of loans currently outstanding, said Ostendorf, is $9,758,733 to 203 borrowers in the two-county unit.

These include annual operating advances, emergency loans, farm ownership loans, rural housing loans, soil and water loans, rural rental housing loans and association loans.

The average age of rural housing loan borrowers for the Wayne unit is 36, while 41 is the average for farm ownership and operating type loans, he explained.

State Director, Kenneth L. Bowen, has announced there will be a considerable increase in the year-all funding of the Farmers Home Administration Program for the 1972 Fiscal Year.

Farm ownership funds will be at the $14,500,000 level, an increase of $5,500,000 over last year. Ten million dollars has been allotted for rural housing loans, a slight increase over last year. More funds will also be available for association type loans.

Tips Handy on Tilt-Up Silos, Warm Buildings

Two agricultural engineering publications on structures of interest to the livestock producer have been produced by Nebraska authors and are available through county extension offices around the state.

EC 70-793, on "Tilt-Up Concrete Horizontal Silo Construction," and EC 70-791, on "Keeping Livestock Buildings Warm," are part of the Agricultural Engineering Digest series assembled by Midwest Plan Service and distributed through cooperating Land Grant universities.

University of Nebraska Agricultural Engineers E. A. Olson, extension, and Dr. O. E. Cross, research, are authors of both publications, with Gayle Lewis of the Portland Cement Association a co-author of the publication on horizontal silos.

In an introduction to the publication on livestock building, the authors note that "the growing numbers of both livestock and poultry being raised in enclosed confinement point to one thing—the desire, on the part of the feeders, to reach and maintain optimum animal or bird performance."

This performance, the publication continues, depends on optimum environment of temperature, moisture, air movement and gas content; achieved through light construction, insulation, vapor barriers, insulated doors and windows and insulation systems.

The publications cover such subjects as types of insulation, heat and moisture characteristics, and procedures for computing heat loss.

The companion publication on tilt-up horizontal silos discusses the advantages of tilt-up concrete construction; considerations of sites for a silo; specifications for construction and detailed drawings on steps in constructing various components of this type of silo.

New Plants
Plant breeding and selection programs in the Department of Horticulture and Forestry involve over 53 different species of flowers, fruit trees, vegetables and shrubs. Sioux, Ogallala, Hag, Nebraska No. 1, Redcap and Stadium Queen are, respectively, examples of varieties of tomatoes, strawberries, potatoes, dry beans, cucumbers and pumpkins that have received wide recognition for their superior traits.

Literally thousands of strains must be tested and thousands of crosses made before a better new variety is born. Over 1,500 strains of beans were tested before tolerance to a serious bacterial disease was found in seed from Turkey. This tolerance has been recently incorporated into a new variety named Emerson.

Patience, perseverance and an unselfish "feeling of obligation" to future generations are important in producing new trees.

Such work goes on at Horning Farm near Plattsmouth, where Professor Walt Hagler is testing native burr oaks against trees from across collected in the Great Plains region at sites from Texas through Manitoba.

Grown there are Scotch pine from Scotland—also from Poland, Greece, Spain, Belgium, Germany, Mexico and other countries of its native range. One of these may be a parent of your future Christmas tree or perhaps free seed producing industry in Nebraska.

Feedlot fly control
All insecticides are dangerous, especially highly concentrated insecticides before dilution. Feedlot operators should use extreme precaution to avoid illegal residues when using insecticides.

A newly released publication entitled "Fly Control in Nebraska Feedlots" gives instructions for applying appropriate insecticides. This publication is co-authored by John B. Campbell and Robert E. Toselle, entomologists at the University of Nebraska North Platte Station and East Campus, respectively.

Of the several different types of pests in feedlots, the house fly and the stable fly are the most harmful. Before treating for flies you should know what type of flies you are combating.

Stable flies are blood sucking insects and feed by piercing the skin and sucking blood. They feed mainly on the lower parts of the legs of cattle. They remain on the cattle only long enough to get a blood meal and then go to a shaded area where they digest the blood.

House flies do not suck blood but feed on organic wastes. These include the eye and nose mucus of cattle. They are annoying to

Dixon County 4-H'ers Tour IBP Facility

A group of 21 4-H members from Dixon County toured the Iowa Beef Processors confinement facility at Denison, Iowa, last week.

The facility houses some 500 head of cattle and features a metal building designed to provide shelter from winter winds and snow and from summer heat. Cattle are fed over a concrete slotted floor placed on four-foot piers. Four sets of electrically driven paddle wheels drive oxygen into waste material collected in that manner, leaving the operation free of odor and runoff contamination.

The building combined with the concrete slats also eliminates spring mud.

The tour was conducted by

Rod Lorenzen, general manager of feeding research for IBP.

According to Lorenzen this confinement structure was designed to enable the Corn Belt farmer-feeder to maintain leadership in the cattle feeding industry despite rapid Southwest expansion.

Preliminary test results being evaluated by Iowa State University indicate cattle fed in the IBP confinement unit are showing substantially better conversions than test cattle being fed in outside lots, he said.

Deadline Near for Crop Producers

Sanitation includes removal of all or most of the pest's breeding grounds and the breaking up of the insect's life cycle. Chemical control includes a vast number of methods for controlling pests using chemicals. Five different ways of controlling flies chemically are by use of residual sprays, area sprays, animal sprays, dips and baits.

Flies are annoying to cows in the same manner as house flies. They breed in garbage, excrement and decomposing flesh and animal matter.

Horn flies, like face flies, breed only in fresh manure. They are blood suckers as is the stable fly, but unlike the stable fly, they remain on the animal all the time. They are usually only a pest of feedlot cattle in the spring or when cattle are pasturing adjacent to the feedlot.

There are two types of control measures, sanitation and chemical control.

August 1 is the deadline for entries in the 1971 Corn, Grain Sorghum and Soybean Production Contest. Nebraska crop producers were reminded this week.

Duane Foote, secretary of the Nebraska Grain Improvement Association, said entry forms can be secured from and should be submitted through county extension agents.

Patrol Seeking Young Men

Colonel James E. Kruger, superintendent of the Nebraska State Patrol, has invited young men to investigate career opportunities with the State Patrol by contacting State Headquarters in Lincoln or one of the area offices in Omaha, Norfolk, Grand Island, North Platte and Scottsbluff.

Applicants possessing basic requirements (high school diploma, minimum height of 5'10", age limits 21-35) then have the opportunity to complete a personnel evaluation test which will be graded by the Nebraska MPT Council. A satisfactory score will result in formal application forms being forwarded to the applicant.

Colonel Kruger said that the training schedule will permit the new troopers to have all basic training completed before assignment to duty Jan. 1, 1972, for six months of in-service training. Salary schedule permits $75 per week plus total subsistence at the Patrol Training Center at Lincoln Air Park during the six-week basic training program and $580 fringe benefits during the in-service training period. Further increases are provided on an annual basis.

Ten Winside Youth Return from Trip To National Park

Ten members of the Luther League of Trinity Lutheran Church at Winside returned recently from a week of camping and hiking in Rocky Mountain National Park in Colorado.

Camping in Aspen Glen campground, the group cooked their own meals and learned cooperation in the midst of having good time. Hikes were taken to Dream and Emerald lakes and to Look Lake and Andrews Glacier.

Those attending were Jim Hansen, Don Krueger, Dean Krueger, Nancy Gallop, Debbi Sotter, Peggy Thies, Linda Warner, Jeanne Krueger, Doug Lutz and Gaylen Carstens.

Sponsors for the trip were Mr. and Mrs. Keith Krueger and Pastor Paul Reimers.

When L.A.P.E. was organized 25 years ago, one of the keys to its success was the fact that it reported to donors exactly how contributions were used. This practice is still followed. If they wish, donors may specify the kind of aid they want to give.
