Wakefield Grain and Feed Building Destroyed by Fire

The Wakefield Grain and Feed, one of the town's older businesses, was nearly destroyed by fire Tuesday evening, only the front portion of the large building and a few of the contents in that section saved.

No one was in the building when the alarm was turned in to the Wakefield Fire Department at approximately 5:20 p.m. Flames quickly enveloped the back portion of the building and help was summoned from Wayne and Emerson, the Wayne Fire Department receiving the call at 5:35.

Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Ekberg, owners of the approximately 300-foot by 60-foot building, did not know what caused the fire in the frame structure, which has been used as storage only since 1968.

The black smoke could be seen for miles. One person who lives nine miles south of Wayne said he could see the smoke clearly from his home.

Three thousand bushels of government sealed corn were in bins behind the block-long building, but it was not known immediately if that grain was damaged. The bin was too hot for firemen to attempt to open the doors to check on its condition.

How to fight dirty.

There he is! Mr. Right. Now. How do you get him? How do you make him yours alone? Well, he's bigger than you, so you can't tackle him. And you just can't climb a tree and drop a net on him and carry him away. And there's an awful lot of competition out there, so you can't just walk by and wiggle your finger and expect him to follow. No, you've got to fight dirty. Real dirty. Lies? No. Cheating? No. Stealing? No. Wearing? Much worse: You get Styx. Just put a little Styx Spelling Spray on you. And poof, you'll go from Sugar and Spice to something not so nice. You will have magical powers. And poor Mr. Right. He will be caught in your net. Is it fair? No, but Love never is. And that's why we've made Styx. To give you an unfair advantage. So squint your eyes. Pick him out of the crowd. And then get Styx and go after him. He hasn't a chance. Styx. The magical fragrance. It's definitely unfair.

Swim Team Coach Dennis Siefkes told the board that Wayne will have its first meet with Elgin on June 28 at the Wayne pool. Presently Wayne is scheduled for three meets, including Elgin, Laurel and Wakefield.

Councilman Brash asked the board if it would think about building a new ball diamond possibly on the south end of town. Brash pointed out that while the board wants to make a decision whether to build a new ball park, the price of the land will be going up.

And, Councilman Russell asked the board if it was interested in setting up a five-year plan for parks in the city so the council could get a better idea of the long-range plans for the city recreation areas.

South Sioux City Town Team Drops Wayne Nine from Unbeaten Ranks, 9-4

The South Sioux City Town team battered Wayne's perfect record in last week, dropping the locals to a 3-1 record behind first place Sioux City with a 5-0 mark.

The Wayne club was stung in the first two innings as the home town club pushed across three runs, two of which came from South Sox Pitcher Stahle, who had a home run with one man on.

Wayne club came back in the third with one run off two hits as Shortstop Mark Johnson crossed the plate via Bob Brandt's double.

But the home team scored four more runs off two hits in the fourth to boost the score to 7-1. And continued hitting in the sixth, scoring two men on three hits.

Wayne's attempts to come back fell short in the seventh and ninth innings as the visitors scored one run in each inning.

Wayne's Delmar Wacker took the loss after being relieved by Paul Eddie in the fifth.

South Sox's Stahle pitched his

NEBRASKAland Column To Appear in The Herald

"Mr. NEBRASKAland", a new weekly column on the fact and fun of outdoor recreation and travel will debut in the Thursday, July 6, edition of the Wayne Herald. Columnist is Dick H. Schaffer of Lincoln, the acknowledged "Mr. NEBRASKAland."

Schaffer, editor of NEBRASKAland Magazine, distributed throughout the United States and 34 foreign countries, and the voice of Outdoor Nebraska, aired on 41 stations in a four-state area, announced his resignation with the Game and Parks Commission, effective July 5, so that he can become more personally involved in the out-of-doors.

His new Thursday potpourri will relate personal experiences and observations, drawing from his vast storehouse of knowledge of the outdoor Nebraska scene, and also from the extensive statewide traveling he will be doing the year-around.

Schaffer will focus on fishing, hunting, boating, camping, hiking, traveling and ecology. He also will share how-to tips and forecasts on times and methods for productive and pleasurable outdoor excursions along with personal recommendations on where to go.

Schaffer is a former associate editor of Outdoor Life Magazine in New York City, a member of the public relations staff of the Marathon Oil Company in Findlay, Ohio, and sports staffer for the Lincoln Journal. He is a native of Lincoln and a graduate of the University of Nebraska School of Journalism.

Past president of the American Association for Conservation Information, Schaffer is a past regional director of DATO (Discover America - Travel - Organizations) and charter member of the Old West Trail Foundation. In 1965, when also director of tourism promotion for the state, the NEBRASKAland program he conceived and directed won DATO's highest state award. The total information program he directs was selected No. 1 in the United States and Canada in 1969. No. 1 ratings were also won by NEBRASKAland Magazine and Outdoor Nebraska radio.

The name "NEBRASKAland" was coined by Schaffer. Combined with the words, "where the West begins," the latter suggested by former Game and Parks Commission Director M. O. Steen, this became theme of the state's tourist promotion efforts for years. In 1963, the State Legislature adopted it as the state's official slogan and motto.

Vacation Traffic Creates Increasing Hazards for Both Motorists, Wildlife

It's vacation time and the increased traffic on the highways creates a unique problem involving motorists and wildlife.

Every week hundreds of wild animals in the state fall victim to automobiles, mostly when the creatures are crossing a well used highway.

Crossing a highway is dangerous for humans and appears to be twice as dangerous for animals.

Snakes, squirrels, raccoons and turtles are the most frequent victims, but deer, are also part of the wildlife toll.

The State Department of Roads reported that during the week of May 15-22 10 deer hit and killed by automobiles on Interstate 80 in Nebraska. From May 23 to May 31, a total of 23 deer were killed.

Unlike other animals that cross highways, deer have a tendency to stop when a car approaches. A stationary deer poses a definite threat to the safety of a driver traveling at 75 miles per hour. In most cases, a driver were killed on Nebraska roads in 1971.

Compared to other states, Nebraska's yearly deer highway toll is quite low. In Pennsylvania over 15,000 deer were killed on the highways in a one-year period.

In Nebraska, deer kills are highest during May, October and November. In May of 1971, 158 deer were killed. In October, 212 and in November, 298.

According to Game and Parks officials this is due to several factors. During the spring early-born fawns begin to break away from the does. As a result, more and more animals begin to wander near or onto highways. Also highway travel is increased as people take their vacations.

During October and November deer are in the rut and lose some of their natural caution. They are also seeking shelter from the weather.

State Game and State Roads officials urge motorists to be especially alert when traveling through areas that are marked by deer crossing signs.

In Nebraska, the registration fee is $8 for Class 3 boats, which include all craft between 16 and 26 feet in length.

Litterbugs

We recently went on a "fishless" fishing outing in the Norfolk area and were appalled at two sights—the first being the litter strewn along the banks and the second when four persons, two men and two young boys, launched a canoe and all hopped in to fish the sandpit, which in some areas is reported to be 60 feet or more in depth.

bank one of the most relaxing places we know have been in the company of a single person who would leave anything behind outside of possibly bait that would surely be consumed by scavenging animals and birds.

We have seen prime fishing holes closed up because of vandalism to farm machinery and fences and because of beer cans, bottles, sacks, etc., left behind to litter the banks.

It was hard to believe that the two adults, presumably the boys' fathers, allowed the two youngsters to stand up in the canoe while fishing. To make matters worse, the wind was blowing strong and erratically on this particular day and we feared for the lives of all of them every time a gust of wind came up.

Administrators Study Developing Industry

City officials from a 17 town area participated in a city administrators' meeting Friday in McCook.

According to City Clerk Dan Sherry, the meeting centered on the election laws, budget, pension plans and corporation ordinances.

Sherry pointed out that McCook's industrial site was used as the example of how a town could develop and use its industry.

"McCook has 15 industries in its site," he said, noting that the city, through the cooperation of its citizens and the local media, helped to attract the industries.

Sherry explained that the McCook newspaper and the two radio stations, "hand-in-hand" with the Chamber of Commerce played a major role in the industrial development.

In another discussion Sherry pointed out the importance of the media and City Hall. "Some of the best ideas concerning the development of the area came from the media. Some news items should not be released to the news media until the city and its council or administrators further discuss the subject."

Hearing Test Set for Wayne, Nebraska

Electronic hearing tests will be given at Hotel Morrison, Wayne, on Friday, June 23, from 10:30 to 3:00 by Jack Jennings, Belton Consultant.

Everyone should have a hearing test at least once a year if he has any trouble at all hearing clearly. Even people now wearing a hearing aid or those who have been told an aid won't help should have a hearing test and find out about the very latest hearing aids.

The free hearing tests will be held at Hotel Morrison, Wayne, Nebr., on Friday, June 23, from 10:30 to 3:00. If you can't get there on Friday, call or write the Belton Hearing Aid Service, 1201 Nebraska St., Slou City, Iowa, phone 258-1960.

FARM PAGE

The Agent's Angle

by Harold Ingalls

These same plants will form flower buds this fall or growth made this summer. Therefore, any correctional pruning to modify the shape of these plants should be done now. Depending on your personal preference, older canes can be removed, and new growth pinched to encourage branching and more bud wood this fall.

WATER SAFETY CAMPAIGN

Owners and operators of farm ponds should take every precaution to provide for their safe use and maintenance. Participating in National Water Safety Month during June, in cooperation with the National Safety Council, the USDA has launched a nationwide water safety information campaign for farmers, ranchers, and other users and operators of farm water resources.

There are about two million farm ponds across the country, and about 50,000 new ones are built annually. More and more of these are used for recreation. Yet, about 400 drownings occur each year on farms, most of them in farm ponds, and most of them involving young children.

The Department advises farmers to place proper warning notices and fencing around farm ponds, to provide fundamental life saving equipment and instructions on what to do in emergencies, and to fence off or cover irrigation ditches or other water channels where people often pass nearby.

USDA is sending out quantities of American Red Cross first aid posters to agency field offices for distribution to farm pond operators upon request. The posters are designed to be mounted around the top of a "Rescue Station," a post with basic life saving equipment installed near the deep end of a farm pond. The Red Cross and the Department of Agriculture recommend that a "Rescue Station" be at every farm pond.

EARLY SUMMER PRUNING

Spring and early summer flowering trees and shrubs have already passed bloom. Unless you care to use the dried seed heads for decorative purposes, it would be desirable to remove fading flowers.

HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Economical home construction does not mean inferior construction. Poor workmanship and shoddy materials are not economical in the long run and maintenance and repair costs eventually will nullify any initial savings.

There are other ways to keep the building costs down. First, plan on paper before you start construction. By doing so, you can avoid costly mistakes in the building and in the purchase of materials. Careful planning and proper design will reduce not only the initial cost but also the cost of furnishings, utilities and maintenance.

Second, avoid unnecessary features and expensive "frills." Numerous features found in today's homes could probably be eliminated without sacrificing living comfort or efficiency.

Third, do some of the work yourself. Limit yourself, however, to those jobs that you know you can do. Mistakes can be costly.

Major factors to consider in planning a house include: Location, style or design, interior arrangements, selection of materials, construction scheduling and materials handling and utilities.

Skunks, take a back seat. Science has come up with an odor-causing substance it may prove useful in warning people away from dangerous places—that is, over 100 times more powerful, once for once, than the stuff skunks use.

NU Researcher Enthused Over Freeze-dried Alfalfa

By Lynn Holden
Editorial Assistant
University of Nebraska-Lincoln

Dr. E.R. Peo, Jr., tossed three small plastic envelopes across his desk to where I sat.

"Here, try these," he said. "The first one I picked up was labeled 'Regular Dely' and contained a coarse, dark green alfalfa meal with a faint, smoky odor coming through the dried alfalfa smell."

"Taste it," the University of Nebraska swine nutritionist coaxed. "Just pick up a pinch between your fingers."

It was like eating dried grass, and, in addition to the bitter grass flavor, the burnt, off-flavor came through.

"Now try this," he said as he pointed to the envelope marked "Recycled Dely." The meal in this package was more finely ground, and its plant origin couldn't be guessed as easily.

"The gases given off in the process are captured and used again," he explained. "Perhaps the forewarning influenced me, but I could detect a sharp, gas-like aroma. The taste was bitter also, and the off-taste was even more marked than in the regular."

"Now the freeze-dried," he said, trying to keep a straight face. The feature I noticed immediately was the color: it was a bright, fresh green that made the other two look dull, dark and old by comparison. The smell was definitely different, too—more like new-mown grass. And the taste lacked something the other two definitely had: bitterness.

"It's not bitter," I told him; to which he replied, "That's just it, this stuff's beautiful. It's light, fluffy, and it's got this bright green color, and none of the bitterness of the conventionally processed alfalfa meals. And I'm convinced it's a good source of protein."

Dr. Peo has been working with several varieties of alfalfa meals as a source of supplemental protein for baby pigs. He feels that alfalfa has been passed as a protein source, especially when the protein yield per acre of alfalfa is compared with that of soybeans. Under ideal conditions, an acre of alfalfa will produce 2,700 to 3,400 pounds of protein while soybeans produce 1,800 to 2,000 pounds. Even under poor conditions alfalfa will yield 850 as opposed to soybeans' 350 to 450 pounds of protein per acre. Higher yields reduce the cost of protein per pound, but in addition alfalfa is a more economical crop to raise than soybeans. One planting of alfalfa will last several years, while soybeans must be replanted each season. Alfalfa also saves time and labor in that it needs no cultivation after planting.

The quality of the protein being produced is important, too. Protein quality of a feedstuff is measured by the per cent of protein in the feed as well as the proportions of the different amino acids that make up that protein. Often a feed is only labeled with the total protein percentage, and rations are often balanced for protein using only this figure. Calculating on per cent protein, about 3/4 times as much alfalfa meal as soybean meal would be required to fill an animal's protein needs.

However, looking at the amino acid composition, the freeze-dried alfalfa meal is of equal or better quality than either of the regular dely or the recycled gas dely. Freeze-dried alfalfa also has an amino acid composition comparable to soybean meal, even though soybean meal has a greater total per cent protein. If a ration was balanced on per cent protein, more alfalfa would be required; but if balanced on amino acid composition, similar amounts of the two would be required.

Dr. Peo commented that although a certain basic level of nitrogen is required from protein, the amino acid composition of a feed is more important than the total amount of protein.

How does the freeze-dried compare when actually fed to swine? Dr. Peo showed me a series of slides giving the results of a study with baby pigs that made freeze-dried meal look good. Involving 160 early weaned pigs, the study compared the feed intake, average daily gains, and feed efficiencies of animals fed the three types of alfalfa meal and a control corn-soybean meal diet.

Although the pigs fed freeze-dried alfalfa ate less, their gains were sufficient enough to give them a greater feed efficiency than both the heat-dried alfalfa meals and the corn-soybean diet. Pigs on the corn-soy diet averaged 0.48 pounds of gain per pound of feed, heat-dried averaged 0.40, freeze-dried averaged 0.52. Calculated another way, pigs consuming freeze-dried meal showed an 8.5 per cent improvement in feed efficiency over the corn-soy pigs, and a 30 per cent improvement over those on heat-dried meals.

Theorizing that the alfalfa meals may have been penalized in performance because of the lower fiber content of the corn-soy diet, a second experiment was run last winter with equal fiber contents in all diets. The feed efficiency results were as follows:

Corn-soy, 49 lbs., gain/lb. feed; Corn-soy plus fiber, 46; Reg Dely, 45; Recycled dely, 41; Reg pelleted dely, 41; and Freeze-dried, 47.

Again, the freeze-dried meal showed a high feed efficiency, though not as high as the corn-soy diet. According to Dr. Peo, this suggests that some kind of changes are taking place during the drying processes that affect the availability of the nutrients in the alfalfa. He commented as he flipped to a slide showing the conventional drying by tumbling the alfalfa around a flame, "I'm convinced that anytime you subject a feed to that kind of heat treatment, you've got to be damaging its quality with respect to nutrients."

Peo further speculated that the bitterness in the heat-dried could be due to a reaction during processing called "carmelization" which affects the soluble sugars in the alfalfa. Freeze-dried alfalfa apparently does not undergo carmelization and so is not bitter.

Dr. Terry Klopfenstein, associate professor of Animal Science, also has found some differences between heat- and freeze-dried alfalfa in studies using an artificial rumen. He is concerned with how fast ammonia is released from a feed in the rumen, which affects the animal's ability to use it in synthesizing protein. Freeze-dried does release its ammonia at a different rate than heat-dried, indicating, as he says, "In drying there are some changes taking place, but we don't know as yet whether that's good or bad."

Dr. L.D. Satterlee, NU Food Science Department staff member, is also looking at alfalfa as a source of protein. He relates that they are concerned with the lack of nutrients in most snack foods on the market. With the help of Agricultural Economist Dr. James Kendrick, a least-cost formulation for a human food product equivalent in protein balance to milk or whole egg was developed by computer.

Swine Producers Urged Not To 'Push the Panic Button'

Nebraska swine producers have been advised not to hit the panic button after disclosures of the first hog cholera outbreak in the state in 18 months, but were urged to be prompt in reporting any sick pigs to veterinarians. Dr. Alex Hogg, University of Nebraska Extension veterinarian, said producers should be on the lookout for any suspicious symptoms, especially in herds adjacent to Adams County, where the outbreak was reported by the State Department of Agriculture Monday afternoon.

The outbreak, if not controlled, could cost Nebraska its much-coveted hog cholera-free status, achieved in October, 1971. Dr. Hogg said, "It is hoped quarantine procedures instituted by state animal health officials will stamp out the outbreak, Dr. Hogg said. If the hog cholera-free status is lost, it could not be regained for another year, he noted.

The need for producers to be vigilant is important not only in terms of stopping further threat of the disease, but also in assuring that immunity will be paid in case cholera is confirmed, Dr. Hogg said. Producers are paid for animals destroyed to eliminate any cholera carriers, he explained—but only for those hogs alive during the first visit of an inspector. Clinical symptoms which producers should watch for include: diarrhea, poor doing animals, abortions, stillborn pigs, mummified pigs, and weak pigs and "shaker" pigs. These symptoms can develop with or without the typical or classical symptoms such as high mortality (death loss).

The fluorescent antibody test, developed by NU veterinary scientists, is recognized as a valid test for both acute and chronic cases of cholera, Dr. Hogg said. The herd from the farm near Holstein which constituted the latest Nebraska outbreak was tested both by NU veterinary scientists and the National Animal Disease Laboratory at Ames, Ia., before the presence of cholera was declared confirmed.

The importation of feeder pigs to the Corn Belt for finishing is a continuing concern from a cholera prevention standpoint, Dr. Hogg said. The elimination of vaccinations has removed one of the means of perpetuating the disease, he said, but at the same time leaves the entire swine population susceptible to hog cholera.

Lobsters, massive-clawed crustaceans that listen with their legs and taste with their feet and are capable of regenerating severed claws, are living fossils that have existed in their present form for some 100 million years.

Ready But Not Waiting - Until -

While we're rambling about food, let's ramble about the quick-trick food experts of the country. The farm wife is not only experienced with serving food almost everywhere and anywhere on the farm, she can also serve it at almost anytime. They can and, most often, they do.

Occasionally the farm wife has to be able to prepare a hearty, substantial meal in a matter of minutes. And her quick meal is to consist of more than a sandwich and a can of chicken noodle soup.

A can of hot soup is often served for the children's quick supper before a school program, club card party, a commercial feed supper or the yearly night out. But it is almost never permissible to be served for a meal to the man of the house.

The only soup that is ever permitted to be served for a meal to a hard working farmer is a thick, homemade soup. Served without verbal indignation, that is. One such soup is a beef stew that is mostly meat chunks.

Occasionally he'll tolerate a vegetable soup if it is mostly meat. Maybe one or two potatoes and a couple other vegetables to allow it to be called a vegetable soup.

Once a Month

And then it is never to be served twice in one day nor more than once a month. Any leftover soup is usually served as a bedtime snack.

If she's been helping in the field during harvest and also doing chores, pancakes are occasionally permissible for a quick supper. Provided, of course they are accompanied with several slabs of bacon or a couple slices of smoked ham. Also provided he had been served sandwiches, cake or cookies and coffee about 4 p.m. for lunch.

Of course such food as instant potatoes are absolutely forbidden on a farmer's table. As far as the farmer is concerned anyway. If he chances to see the box or package before she empties it he will most likely have to be shown the potato peelings for the next couple of weeks.

Many food nutritionists, dietetists, food economists and food editors often publish mouth-watering, hearty meals and title them "Meals in a Hurry."

Today, maybe. But last week it took hours to prepare those meals before putting them in the freezer.

But then every farm wife does something like that when she can meat, bakes extra bread, makes relishes and freezes fresh garden vegetables.

Unexpected Guests

Besides, how would you have known last week that all those shelter men were going to stay for dinner today?

Or that he was going to run out of spray and come in for dinner at 11:30 today instead of 12:30 as he planned this morning?

Or that he would get the cultivator set and would want to go to the field about noon instead of 1 p.m.?

How about the time, probably just yesterday, when you thought the men wouldn't be done cutting at Neighbor John's until about lunch time only to have them pull through the yard about 11:15?

The first thing on the menu is meat. If you're lucky enough to have it frozen with paper between the slices of round steak or ham, you can pry them apart for fast cooking. And they talk about city women fixing frozen dinners!

Then comes the dessert problem. If you don't have any pies in the freezer, you're really in trouble. And how does any farm wife with a family keep such a delicacy as pies on hand?

Maybe a marshmallow, whipped cream and fruit conglomeration will do the trick. It will depend on the size of the marshmallows you have on hand, if you have enough artificial whipped cream or whatever to cover them and what kind of fruit you can find in the pantry. Also if you can find a little dab of coconut to add a "Chef's" touch they might think it really had a recipe to it.

And you don't forget to peel the potatoes while the cream is whipping.

Vegetables Easy

There is never any question about the vegetables to serve to farmers. When a doubt it will be beans, peas or corn. Except when it is peas, corn or beans. The style will depend on whether you have any frozen corn, beans or peas from last year in the freezer. Otherwise it will be whatever style is in the first can you reach on the pantry shelf.

Then there is the problem of bread. Well, they'll just have to eat boughten bread today. At least they won't eat as much boughten bread as they would have homemade buns. But you can be sure they will expect it tomorrow.

If you're lucky Susie will be able to find some nice-sized green onions and radishes in the garden. They will help fill up a vacant spot on the table.

You forcefully coax her to set the table while you go to the garden and look for enough lettuce to make a salad.

The meat is turned for the last time. The potatoes are going to make it. And if you hurry you might make it, too.

Mad Rush

As you race back to the house from the garden you hear the tractor coming in from the field.

You hurry to wash the lettuce, throw together a vinegar salad and put the salad on the table. You drain the potatoes, start the gravy and mash the potatoes while the men are washing. Usually it takes them five minutes or so to wash. Especially if you're ready for them.

So what if the gravy got a little lumpy in the rush? They don't know how lucky they were to get it. You dish up the potatoes and vegetables as they set down to eat.

When! How's that for getting a meal in a hurry?

And how many farm wives have experienced such an emergency only to have the men stop in the yard, you're thinking they're coming home for dinner, and yell, "We're going back to Neighbor John's for dinner. She's got it all ready!"

School Opens

The summer school program began Monday, June 12 at Wakefield with 32 students registered. Classes are held daily from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. until July 21.

Courses offered are language arts, mathematics and physical education with Derwin Hartman, Mrs. Alice Johnson, Mrs. Ruth Leonard and Joe Coble instructing. Mrs. Hazel Ralston is in charge of the program.

Don't Lower Profits by Neglecting Hogs

By Bob Fritsch-District Extension Swine Specialist Northeast Station

Don't get so busy this summer that you neglect your hogs. With the market looking good, some of the most profitable functions on the farm may involve your hogs.

Get them worked on schedule. With a new morning program on the market, you will have about four basic wormers from which to choose. Your decision of which one to use will be based on which specific parasites you are after and if you will administer it via the feed or water.

Take time out to spray your pigs. External parasites are profitable robbers and cause the pigs to be rough on equipment. Pigs that were overwintered, or in contact with pigs that were overwintered on bedding may have a more severe parasite problem than those in confinement. Consider installing a fogging device in hot humid weather. A fogging device in the summer-time can be as practical as bedding or supplemental heat in the winter.

Feeder adjustment is important year-around, but in the summertime special problems develop. Adjust the feeder to get a uniform flow of fresh feed. Prevent excessive accumulation of feed in the feed cups as this leads to wastage and spoilage. With high summer temperatures, any excess moisture in the feed will lead to spoilage and heating.

Assure the pigs a clean supply of fresh water. The water also should be cool. Warm water reduces consumption and may lead to bacterial problems. If you are finishing pigs in confinement, a few less per pen in summer likely will result in better total performance.

For the first time in history, of the Northeast Station, we are raising pigs on "dirt." The objective is to use pigs raised on dirt as a standard or control in our foot study. The feet on these pigs will be compared with those of pigs raised on concrete, steel or aluminum slats.

This should be a study that is of particular interest to those raising pigs in confinement. Nearly everyone in confinement has had more or less of a foot problem in their pigs.

In addition to the foot study, we have 432 pigs on a summer housing study. In this comparison, we are looking at that time use 2, 4-D. A simple garden weed killer won't get rid of it.

and two-unit system. Built into this study is the comparison of 25, 50, 75 and 100 per cent slatted floors. We have conducted this study several times in the past, but never during the summer.

If you are interested in looking at these units in production, stop in. However, keep in mind that these are research buildings and not demonstration units. We're not any different than anyone else. If we could rebuild, even for research purposes, we would make some changes.

Backyard Farmer

Are all moths dangerous? There are many different types of moths but not all of them are harmful to crops or gardens. The main trait of difference is in the pattern of the wings but it is very difficult to tell them apart.

How can red top be eliminated? There is no way to completely eliminate it but it can be spot treated with dalapon. Red top is quite common and has a small seed, which makes it more difficult to control in a lawn.

How can you control field vine weed?

To control it now, hoe field vine weed and use a dandelion killer. However, it would be better to wait until fall for more complete control. It will get a good growth in October so at that time use 2, 4-D. A simple garden weed killer won't get rid of it.

Best Early Summer Pruning Practices

Spring and early summer flowering trees and shrubs have already passed bloom. Unless you care to use the dried seed heads for decorative purposes, it would be desirable to remove fading flowers.

These same plants will form flowers later in the season. It is better to remove them now, before they are set, than to modify the shape of the plants should be done now, depending on your personal preference, older canes can be removed, and new growth pinched to encourage branching and more bud wood this fall.

Evergreens with their new growth fully expanded can be shaped before the wood hardens. This type of pruning can be severe enough to contain the size of an evergreen. A natural unpruned growth of evergreens may be your preference if the tree or shrub isn't crowding the house or sidewalk.

Grim Statistics From Rapid City

With the known dead from the Rapid City, S. D., flood well over 200 and over 450 persons reported missing, it has become the second worst flood disaster in the history of the United States.

Other statistics compiled by the Black Hills Jewelry Mfg. Co. lists 790 homes and 500 mobile homes destroyed, major damage to 1,725 houses and 825 mobile homes, minor damage to 1,900 other homes, 65 farm buildings destroyed and 60 with major damage, and 150 small businesses wiped out.

Cash donations may be sent to the Rapid City Chamber of Commerce or to the Rapid City United Church of Christ Flood Disaster Fund, Box 119, Box K, Dean, Treasurer, Rapid City, S. D. 57701.

Shade trees, especially those that bleed, are best pruned in early summer after full leaf occurs. Many an experienced arborist will say pruning in the summer restricts growth while pruning in the winter initiates growth. Therefore, if you want to remove a double leader on a shade tree, or remove basal branches, pruning this time of year will not produce as much lush new growth.

Limbs or branches damaged beyond repair should be pruned immediately. Tree wound dressing should be used on any cuts over one inch in diameter.
