

Council, Public Learn: Cost Is Big Stumbling Block to Municipal Bus

It would cost $15,586 a year to operate a municipal minibus in the city of Wayne, according to figures made public during Tuesday night's council meeting.

In a written report to the council and mayor Freeman Decker, city administrator Fred Brink said such a bus system would require 50-passengers a day at $1 per ride to break even.

The figures were reviewed by Brink during the council's public hearing on the minibus subject. The hearing attracted about 30 citizens most of them apparently in favor of establishing some type of municipal transportation system in the city.

Brink said he figured the first year's cost of operating a minibus by estimating a depreciation expense of $5,000 on a $7,500 van-type vehicle, insurance at $1,127, fuel at $640, drivers' salaries at $8,580, maintenance at $1,092, storage at $360 and workman's compensation, social security insurance and fringe benefits at $1,287.

According to Brink's written report, such a transportation system "would require a mill levy increase of 2.16 mills of the first year and subsequent mill levies, presuming no escalation of costs, of 1.32 mills."

He noted in the report that such a "mill levy increase would in no way be palatable to the general citizenry."

There are three ways to provide a municipal bus system, according to Brink. They are through tax funds, federal subsidy or private corporation.

The federal subsidy applies only to existing bus systems, he noted, and the privately owned taxi service which operated for a time in Wayne was forced to cease operation because it was not profitable.

The council is expected to discuss the minibus subject at a coming meeting, possibly after members talk with the Chamber of Commerce and service organizations about their helping provide bus service in the city.

Several people spoke out in favor of a municipal transportation system during the public hearing.

"Mrs. Ed Smith ticked off several reasons why public transportation would be good for the community. It would help those in fixed incomes who can't afford their own cars, elderly people unable to drive, and workers who need transportation to their jobs, she noted.

In addition, she said, it would ease the traffic congestion in the downtown area and would be a "community effort to improve the quality of life" in Wayne.

She said the city now provides other services, such as the center for elderly people, tennis courts and a swimming pool, and the bus service would merely be another service to residents of the city.

City attorney Budd Bornhoff said during the discussion that "something might be worked out" as far as the city purchasing a vehicle and turning it over to some other group or organization to "I think this might be a line we might pursue," noted mayor Decker.

At least two councilmen agreed on the possibility of having interested people form a corporation to run a municipal bus on a non-profit basis.

Councilman John Vakoc suggested the idea, noting that such a setup would require those interested in the bus system to contribute money should it not show a profit. Councilman Ted Bahe said he agreed with that idea.

Vakoc also suggested that whatever is tried should be run on a trial basis to determine if it is feasible. "I'd like to see if (the need for a bus) proven," he noted.

He said he would not like to see the city purchase a vehicle and then be "saddled" for years if the municipal transportation system failed.

Vera-Schultz, a city employee who operated the former taxi service in the city, said that at the present time a corporation could not make money operating a municipal bus.

"We'd still be in (the taxi) business if it paid," he noted.

"A lot of people want it (public transportation), but they don't want to pay for it," he remarked after being asked what he thought of the idea of a municipal bus.

Bornhoff pointed out during the discussion that it is not legal for the city to subsidize a private taxi business.

Another councilman, Vernon Russell, remarked that it won't be possible to offer public transportation to all the residents of the city. He noted that it might be possible "to work something out for the senior citizens."

In other action Tuesday night, the council learned that it will cost approximately $5,000 to purchase and install the equipment necessary to add fluoride to five wells in the city.

Although the city has seven wells, two of them are used only in emergencies and are not required to be equipped with fluoridation equipment, according to the city administrator.

Voters in the city gave 699-691 approval to fluoridating the city's water supplies in the Nov. 5th general election.

Pigs' Feet (Real Kind) Topic of Fritschen Talk

Pigs' feet — not the delicate sort — were again studied and scored.

"Differences in claw length and width measurements between the first and second halves of the study were significant," Fritschen told. "However, approximately 90 per cent of the total measurement occurred during the growing period rather than the finishing period."

"Claws of pigs reared on concrete or clay floors were again studied and scored."

Fritschen's flight far from funny.

Robert Fritschen, swine specialist at the Northeast Station near Concord, presented a paper on swine housing and waste management at a seminar in the Republic of China last month. Seven other Americans were involved in the seminar, which was sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

The trip was not without unexpected excitement. An anonymous bomb threat on the flight from Guam forced the airplane to land on Okinawa where the plane, passengers and luggage were searched. No bomb was found, however.

On the return trip from Tokyo, an in-flight engine failure caused the jumbo jet to make an emergency return flight to Tokyo.

Fritschen left Sioux City on Nov. 16 and returned Nov. 25.

Proponents of Fluoridation Gain 8 Votes in Re-Count

The margin of approval given to fluoridation in Wayne's recent election increased by 8 votes in Friday's re-count.

The re-count showed that backers of fluoridation won that election by a 703-687 margin — 8 votes more than the official 699-691 margin announced by the canvassing board several days after the Nov. 5th general election.

Wayne County clerk Norris Weible, who conducted the re-count Friday morning, said the difference in the voting totals was the result of 4 "counting errors" made by those tabulating the votes after the election.

Helping Weible conduct the re-count, which began at 9 a.m. and ended shortly after 11 a.m., were Mrs. Gerald Ott, one of the opponents of fluoridating Wayne's water supplies, and the attorney representing those opponents, John Addison of Wayne. Also present was Chuck Carhart, one of the people who worked in favor of fluoridation before the election.

The re-count had been asked for by Wes Plueger and the Committee Against Fluoridation in Wayne, who filed an application in district court Nov. 21 asking for the ballot boxes to be opened and the votes to be counted again.

Results of the re-count open the door for the city council to go ahead with purchasing equipment necessary to fluoridate the community's water supplies.

That equipment is expected to cost a total of about $5,000 for the five wells in the community which will have to be equipped to inject fluoride into the water used by local residents.

Members of the city council learned the approximate cost of the equipment at their regular meeting Tuesday evening, but they took no action on purchasing the equipment pending the outcome of Friday's re-count.

Wayne thus becomes the only town in the county to approve fluoridation in recent elections. Hoskins defeated fluoridation by 59-29 vote in the Nov. 5th general election, and Carroll voters rejected fluoridation by a 73-3 margin in a special election late in November.

Winside voters will go to the polls in a special election on Tuesday, Dec. 10, to decide whether to add fluoride to their water supplies.

Wayne also becomes one of a small number of communities across the state to okay fluoridation. The majority of towns and cities voting on the issue in recent months have rejected it.

A state law passed by the 1973 legislature requires most communities in the state to hike the level of fluoride in their water supplies unless voters decide against it.

That Time of the Year Again

ICICLES! hand down from a roof on Wayne State campus. Friday morning, slowly melting from the sun's rays, piercing through a thin cover of clouds, The Wayne area received this winter's first measurable amount of snow.

Thursday evening, The snow continued falling into the weekend, bringing much needed although small amounts of moisture to the area.

A closer look...

By Norvin Hansen

I THINK Wayne city councilman Ted Bahe had his tongue in cheek when he answered John Vakoc's question during Tuesday night's council meeting.

The council was talking about the cost of fluoridating equipment when Vakoc asked a logical question: "How do we pay for this equipment?"

Bahe's answer: "A mandate of the people."

You will remember that Wayne voters gave a narrow 699-691 approval to fluoridating Wayne's water supplies in the recent election.

The council took no action after learning from city administrator, Fred Brink that the equipment will cost a total of about $5,000 for the five wells in the city. The council wanted to wait and see what happened during the re-count on Friday morning.

BRINK told the council that installing fluoridating equipment is the "equivalent of installing a water softener." The equipment is tied into the wells so a small amount of fluoride is squirted into the water every time 10 gallons of water is pumped from the well. Learning how to operate the equipment, something city employees would have to do once it is installed, is also quite simple, he added. City employees could be trained how to do that in about half an hour, he said. The firms which sell the equipment can install it in about an hour and a half at each well, according to Brink.

IT WOULD TAKE 50 passengers a day at $1 per ride or 200 passengers daily at 25 cents a ride for a municipal bus to pay its own way in Wayne.

That's what Brink has calculated after figuring such things as the cost of the bus, insurance and drivers' salaries.

Here are the expenses a municipal bus system would face, according to Brink:

— $7,500 for a new van-type vehicle.

— $1,127 for insurance for one year.

— $40 for fuel for one year.

— $9,500 for salaries for drivers from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m., six days a week for one year.

— $1,092 for maintenance for one year.

— $360 for storage space for one year.

That totals up to $19,299, but the bus could be depreciated out at $2,500 a year over three years, lowering that first year's cost to $14,299.

However, workman's compensation, social security and fringe benefits hike the total from $14,299 to $15,586.

Concluded Brink in a written report to the mayor and city council: "The bus system would require a mill levy increase of 2.16 mills the first year and subsequent mill levies, presuming no escalation of costs; of 1.32 mills."

Noted Brink in his report: "The mill levy increase would in no way be palatable to the general citizenry."

There are three ways a municipal bus system could be financed, according to Brink. It could be done through a private operation (which failed in the recent attempt to provide taxi service), through a federal subsidy (which Brink says applies only to existing systems) or through a mill levy.

I'll have to agree with him that most of the people in the community would not be willing to have the city levy boosted more than two mills the first year and almost a mill and a half after that to provide a municipal bus.

THERE WERE quite a few ideas thrown out during Tuesday night's public hearing on the subject of a municipal bus. Some of them:

Have the city purchase a vehicle and let another group operate it. That other group could possibly be representatives of service organizations or the Senior Citizens Center.

Let the Chamber of Commerce take over the project by possibly forming a corporation to buy and operate a bus.

Promote the bus idea among those most likely to use it by selling them shares in a corporation which would run it and subsidize it as necessary.

Meet with the Wayne County commissioners to see if they would be willing to apply along with the city for state and federal funds available to purchase a bus just for elderly people to use.

PERSONALLY, I like the idea of the city purchasing a vehicle and turning it over to some board or group which would be responsible for seeing to it that volunteer drivers would run it. But I can see a lot of problems with that set up.

I also think, as one councilman pointed out, there should be some type of trial run to see how successful a municipal bus would be. I always stick my foot in the swimming pool before diving in, because I want to be prepared for the shock if there is going to be one.

THE JOYOUS traditions and customs of the Jewish holiday of Hanukkah will be covered in a special program to be shown tonight (Monday) at 8 p.m. on Nebraska ETV. The program will be repeated on Saturday, Dec. 7, at 9 p.m.

Edward Asner, Emmy award winning actor of television's Mary Tyler Moore series, narrates the historical and cultural examination of the ancient Jewish festival. The eight day holiday commemorates a victory by the Jewish people over religious oppressors more than 2,000 years ago.

Saw in one of the daily newspapers a while back that the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission is recalling 80,000 lamp buttons because the buttons have sharp edges, point with too much lead and clips that could break off and be swallowed by children.

The button's message: "Think Toy Safety."

'Horn honking is rather disturbing'

Dear Editor: I don't know if your city has an unnecessary noise ordinance on the books or not.

I would like to see the honking of horns stopped. It goes on especially after ball games, up and down main street. It's rather disturbing to drivers and pedestrians.

I'm just an ordinary citizen who visits your city once in a while. — Fred Harrison.

(Editor's Note: The city of Wayne does have an ordinance concerning unnecessary use of horns on vehicles. Drivers are occasionally stopped and warned about using their horns unnecessarily, according to police chief Vern Fairchild, but for obvious reasons the ordinance is difficult to enforce. To make a charge stick under the law, the police officer has to be able to prove that the driver was not warning somebody or something, he said.)

The young people drive into a closed gas station, uncork their car's gas tank, stick the dry nozzle in the filler pipe and stand by. Immediately, a line of cars forms behind them. When the line is long enough to suit them, they hang up the hose and drive off. Doggone those cute kids!"

OBSERVATIONS

'Where's a meat grinder?'

If you were appointed the Central Economic Planner in Charge of Meat Grinder Production, would you know how many meat grinders to produce?

The question is not as silly as it sounds. It is, in fact, at the heart of a debate of great importance to all of us. In dispute is whether a centrally planned, government-directed economy is more efficient than a free enterprise, market-regulated economy.

Many people, I suspect, think that central control of an economy eliminates mistakes. It does not. It merely insures that those mistakes which do occur will occur uniformly throughout the economy.

Thus, when someone in Gopspan — the central economic planning agency for the Soviet Union — noticed that not enough meat grinders were being produced in Russia, the order went out to produce more meat grinders. And in 1962, some six million meat grinders were produced. That was considerably more meat grinders than the Russians needed or wanted.

So it was decreed that meat grinder production be curtailed. And it was. By 1969, only 90,000 were manufactured. The number kept falling and today it is almost impossible to find a meat grinder in a Soviet store. Soon, no doubt, the cycle will repeat.

A similar problem for the Russians is the shortage of card file boxes — the kind we use to hold 3 x 5 index cards.

Seems some Soviet bureaucrat decided at the start of their current five-year plan in 1971 that the wooden file boxes then available ought to be superseded by more modern plastic or metal boxes. So the production of wooden file boxes was halted.

Meanwhile, the responsibility for design of the new plastic boxes was turned over to a government committee.

You guessed it. After three years of effort, the Russians still don't have any plastic file boxes. Or any wooden ones, either.

Nor do they have transparent tape, paper trays, glue, memo pads, ink, dictating machines, portable typewriters or copying machines — for similar reasons.

Of course, these shortages are relatively trivial compared to the inefficiency of the Soviet economy in providing its citizens with such necessities as food and housing.

It wouldn't do the Russian consumers any good to demand a consumer protection agency. Because there are no private businesses left for their government to protect them from. And there is no one to protect them from their government.

But it can't happen here. Can it, Ralph?

—By Arch Booth, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

9 Lettermen Bolster Winside Wrestling

Nine returning lettermen are enough reason for a high school wrestling coach to be optimistic about the coming season, but Winside High head coach Doug Barclay doesn't think so.

WINSIDE wrestling coach Doug Barclay, right, explains a hold to a member of his team. The Wildcats open their season Saturday in a four-team invitational at Wakefield.

However, the head man isn't pessimistic about the season, either.

Of his nine returning lettermen, five wrestled in the 1974 state tournament — three-year letter winner Gregg Lage, a senior, two-year lettermen Dwight Lienemann, Mike Anderson and Brad Brummels, and Bob Bowers, who earned his first letter last year.

Of the five, three will change weights. Bowers, a junior, will move up to 105 after taking second in the Class C 98-pound division during the state meet. Another junior, Brummels, will stay at 167, and Anderson, fifth in state, will stay in the heavyweight bracket.

Overall, Winside should be balanced throughout most of its weights this season. "We're spread out pretty good," Barclay pointed out, adding that the only weight class Winside might be weak in is 98.

Senior Brian Wade has a good shot at that weight, but he lacks varsity experience, according to Barclay.

As far as the middle weights are concerned, Barclay believes his team will be strong. Two returning lettermen, Neil Wagner and Lynn Langenberg, will wrestle at 155 and 132.

WS Grapplers Home Tuesday

Wrestling at Wayne State opens the home season Wednesday with a double dual at 5 p.m. in Rice Gym.

Can Trojans Produce Another State King?

Wakefield High has had a tradition of producing state wrestling champions during the past three years. Coach Lyle Trullinger hopes to continue that tradition this year.

Trullinger's hopes lie in several Trojan grapplers — notably seniors Pat Nicholson, who went to the state meet last year in Class C, and Ken Dolph. If the coach's dreams come true, this will be the second year the school has had two state wrestling champs.

Two years ago Kirk Gardner and Dave Rouse took state titles in 1972 Gardner won state and in 1974 Steve Sorenson claimed a state crown.

Nicholson, maintaining his 155 weight, should be one of the team's strongest wrestlers. Trullinger pointed out, noting that "I don't like to put pressure on the head man."

Banquet to Honor Winside FB Team

A banquet honoring Winside High's football team will be held Wednesday, Dec. 11, at the high school.

Dr. Ralph Barclay, Wayne State defensive football coach, will be the guest speaker for the 6:30 p.m. dinner. Tickets may be purchased from members of the Winside Community Club, which is sponsoring the banquet.

Name Omitted

The name of Wayne shooter Randy PINKELMAN was accidentally left off the list of turkey winners turned in to The Wayne Herald following the Wayne County Thanksgiving turkey shoot on Nov. 24.

PINKELMAN won a turkey in the blue rock shoot, club officials report.

Trapping Business Still Picking Up

Nebraska trappers are getting busier all the time, with the seasons on mink, muskrat and beaver now open.

These three are the only species with trapping season dates set by the Game and Parks Commission, dates that are determined by the time of year their furs come into "prime" condition.

However, there is little likelihood the water supplies can be fluoridated by then, according to the city administrator.

In other action Tuesday night the council:

— Took no action of a proposed lease agreement with the Wayne Country Club. The proposed agreement would require the city to pay for such things as seed and fertilizer at the municipal golf course.

— Tabled action on a retirement plan which would cover only the city administrator. The plan would be "portable" in that the city administrator could be covered under it in another community if he leaves Wayne.

— Agreed to meet on Tuesday afternoon at 3 p.m. for a tour of the city, prior to discussing the city's one-year and six-year street improvement programs.

— Agreed to meet on Monday, Dec. 30, rather than New Year's eve, which would be the council's normal meeting time.

CHARLES KAY

Kay Returns Home After AF Career

"I returned to my hometown of Wayne because of the friendly people, the outstanding education, and to take over the Wayne State Foundation Office," stated Charles Kay, the new executive secretary of the Foundation this year.

Kay graduated from Wayne in June of 1952 with a major in math and minors in journalism and sociology. While at Wayne he served as editor for the school newspaper which was known as the "Goldenrod" at that time.

Upon graduation Kay joined the Air Force and in June of 1953 was commissioned as 2nd lieutenant. He served as a pilot in France for six years, and in Vietnam for one year. He was assigned to the Air Rescue Service whose basic mission was to rescue military people and civilians during both war and peace time. The rescue crew of five flew helicopters to the aid of war victims.

Kay was later named Operations Officer for the 38th Air Rescue Squadron who had the responsibility for rescue aid in both North and South Vietnam, and also in Laos. While overseas he made his home in Loan, France and in Saigon, Vietnam.

He retired from Sheppard Air Force Base located in Wichita Falls, Tx., in June of 1972 as a lieutenant colonel with a 22 year career of military service and four thousand hours of flying time. He is now designated as a command pilot which is determined by the amount of flying time and the years of piloting achieved.

After retiring from the Air Force, Kay was in the real estate business until 1974 when he returned to Wayne.

Kay's new title is executive secretary of Wayne State Foundation. The Foundation was founded in September of 1963. Since that time the non-profit corporation has received $360,753 in gifts, bequests, grants and devices of property from former students and concerned citizens.

Much more money is needed now and in the future however to keep the Foundation operating usefully. The purpose of the Foundation is not only to assist and promote the educational program, faculty, and employees but also to help the students through the granting of scholarships and student loans.

Some other functions of the Foundation is to keep track of all alumni, present addresses and news about them. They supply much of the information

WSC Planning 'Futures Program'

Wayne State College is planning a Future Studies Program for third term. Future students will spend a week in Washington, D.C., taking part in televised seminars as part of the program scheduled for the term which runs for seven and one-half weeks beginning in mid-April.

Students will completely immerse themselves in Future Studies, earning six hours of lower division, upper division or graduate credit depending on their academic standing and level of accomplishment.

Plans call for meetings on campus daily, Monday through Thursday with evening seminars to be presented on KWSC Cable 10 television and KWSC Radio after the first week of orientation, study and research. Each student will participate in a minimum of one weekly. All students will be responsible for materials presented by each discipline.

Future program participants will attend the Second General Assembly of the World Future Society, June fourth to eight in Washington, D.C., and spend two additional days meeting with Midwestern Congressional delegations and sightseeing in the nation's capital.

Director of Special Studies Dr. Ed Elliott announced that the Future Studies will be offered with a choice of three departmental options — Communication Arts (Humanities Department), Creative Writing (English Department, and Political Science (Department of Social Sciences).

Broadcasting Communications Professor William Hagerman heads the program and will direct the Communication Arts section. Political Science Professor Edwin O'Donnell will supervise Political Science students, while Mrs. Elizabeth Hepburn will coordinate the Creative Writing student activities.

Enrollment will be limited initially to the capacity of the Wayne State four bus — or 40 students. This means a limit of ten to 15 students in each discipline. Students wishing to reserve a place in the program should take or send a $10 deposit with their name and address, and choice of area of study to the Director of Special Studies, Hahn Administration Building, Wayne State College, Nebraska.

The ten dollars will be used to secure reservations at a Washington, D.C. hotel.

Transportation to Washington, conference registration, lodging, and meals are expected to cost the participant approximately $100 in addition to regular tuition fees.

He continued, "Injury scores before the switch indicated that concrete slats are potentially more traumatic to pigs' claws than soil. When the pigs were moved from concrete slats to soil, the claw injuries of the concrete-reared pigs nearly disappeared by the end of the study."

WSC Alters

Policy on Student Files

The Wayne State Placement Bureau has modified its operational procedures in an attempt to comply with new federal legislation contained in "The Family Education Rights and Privacy Act of 1974."

This action was announced in a bulletin released by Deryl Lawrence, director of special services. According to Lawrence, these procedures are tentative and appear to be in compliance with the law. Procedures may undergo further modifications when official guidelines are issued.

The intent of the law, as it applies to Lawrence, included the right for students 18 years or older to inspect official files maintained by the several offices and departments at WSC.

Ambiguity of the act makes it uncertain whether or not files maintained in the Placement Bureau, including recommendations voluntarily solicited by students from college instructors, are included in the act, Lawrence said.

Prior to this time, recommendations entered in student files were written confidentially and were not shown to the registrant.

Lawrence said he believes the procedures are fair and can be used by all registrants, whether they choose "open" or "confidential" files. The right to choose which kind of file one wants maintained is important, he said.

School Board To Learn About Summer Course
Members of the Wayne-Carroll school board, meeting for the last time before one of the board members goes off the board in January, are expected to hear a report and see a slide presentation on an environmental studies course during their meeting tonight (Monday).

Planning on reporting on last summer's course is high school science instructor Verne Mills. The course was possibly the only one of its kind in the state. It was offered to students during their summer vacation.

Going off the board next month will be Morris Sandahl of Carroll, board member for about the past 10 years.

Taking his place will be Dale Stoltenberg of rural Carroll, who won one of three board seats up for grabs in the November general election. Formerly of Wayne, Stoltenberg is in the process of moving back to Wayne after accepting a position with a local bank.

Also winning seats on the board were incumbents Wilbur Giese and Margaret Lundstrom, both of Wayne.

All three will begin serving four-year terms on the board next year.

Also scheduled for tonight's board meeting, which begins at 7:30, is the high school discussion of the use of the high school auditorium for winter sports. The auditorium is now equipped with new bleachers, making it possible to hold all basketball and wrestling matches at the school.

Parents and lay members of the Community Council of Project Success are also expected to give a presentation during tonight's meeting. Project Success is the school system's highly acclaimed effort at teaching students who are unable to learn in normal classroom situations.
