Contribution questioned

Ed Naries of Sidney sold in a news release I received today "If's an absolute insuit to Nebraska's agricultural com-munity," referring to a $2.000 campaign contribution which, he claims. Omaha mayor and Democratic senaforial candi-dale Ed Zorinsky, received from the Sea-farers Union's political activity com-mittee.

The Seafarers Union was one of the unions which supported the grain boycott last August. If Narjes' claim is true, we are certainly inclined to agree with him. One of the prime reasons President Ford lost so heavily in Nebraska's Republican primary was his caving in to big labor's demands during the boycott, and I suspect that any candidate, regardless of party, who accepts money. from any of that boycott is treading on prefity thin ice in an agrarian state. — Jim Strayer.

In the matter of car safety seats for small children, the government standard setters have been sitting on their hands. Major manufacturers of the seats charge that the current law is inadequate espec-ially in testing procedures. More than two years ago, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration requested industry input on protective devices for children weighing 50 pounds or less. The data was submitted in May of 1974 and NHTSA was to respond in a matter of months. "Virtually nothing has been done to change the design of children's seats simply because we don't know which way the government is going to move," one company official told the Automotive could not be established until government guide times are set.

the cost of retooling production lines could not be established until government guide lines are set. The current-test for child seats is called a static jest and merely requires that a "child dummy" be subjected to a 1,000 pound pull without moving the front-seat more than 12 inches. "We are not dealing with the real works in that test," the official said. Current NHTSA law does not require a high-speed laboratory sled crash although a number of com-panies do perform such testing with dummies. About a, million and a quarter child safety seats are sold each year, the bulk of the purchases in the children's section of major, department stores and in juvenile specialty shops. One type of seat is recommended for infants up to 20 pounds, while the seats on the market paparently are doing good protection job, the industry believes they could be wen belter with realistic federal stan-dards.

The loss, however, won't hurt the locals' chances in the four-team postseason, playoffs scheduled tô begin next week. As it stands Wayne will meet the loser of the Homer-Newcastip elayoff for first place, which was scheduled for Sunday night. Wayne started out, with a crisp 20 lead off a two-base thit by the game's leading hitter, third baseman Larry Raabe.
