 enough to meet the thermostat's demand. Batteries are opened and air is circulated through the crushed rock to the heated and returned to the house. The heat pump ticks in if neither the collector plates nor the solar storage chamber can provide enough heat, and if all else fails, resistance heating coils built into the heat pump system come on.

The solar furnace is designed to hook into any home heating system with force air ducts, Boyd said, and can be added to existing homes as well as new houses. It may not be practical for every home, however, because of space requirements. The furnace, which sits on the ground outside of the home is nine feet tall and must have a clear area in front of the collector panels at least two and one-half times that distance in order to receive adequate sunlight.

The collector panels face 10 degrees west of south, Boyd said, the most efficient angle to catch the sun's rays at this latitude.

Cost of installing one of the South Dakota-produced solar furnaces is about $6,000 to $6,300. That might seem a large initial investment, but Boyd predicted a bright future for the solar heating industry, particularly if price controls are lifted on natural gas. It has been predicted prices could increase by as much as 400 per cent.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey has proposed a measure which could also make solar heating more attractive. The Minnesota senator would like to see Congress approve a tax credit of up to $2,000 for homeowners who install solar heating devices.

Classes for the summer semester begin on Monday, June 6, and continue through July 8, with some specific exceptions such as economics and American history, which begin a week earlier. Plans for the 1977 summer session include the offering of several classes at non-traditional times. Classes such as American history, photography, marketing, and economics will be offered in the evening. A full schedule of daytime classes will also be available.

Changes in the summer program include the offering of semiconductor technology and semiconductor circuit analysis. Both of these courses, new to the summer curriculum, will be offered in the late afternoon and early evening hours. Among other courses to be offered during summer '77 are ceramics, painting, biology, real estate, accounting, criminal investigation, English, camping and canoeing courses.

Man is a being who buries his dead with ceremony. This he does in all the nations and cultures of the world, whether civilized or uncivilized. We consider our American funeral rituals to be among the most sensible. Significantly, they stem from the same human need to memorialize and mourn the beloved dead as exists among people everywhere.

Unicameral pondering park improvement revenue proposals

CAPITOL NEWS

LEGISLATION — How to generate money for improving the state park system and state recreational areas has been occupying some of the legislature's time in recent days.

Before the lawmakers are two bills, one proposing state park entry fees and the other suggesting a one-cent wholesale tax on a 12-ounce bottle of soda pop. The first measure would produce about $1 million annually and the other more than $4 million.

The annual entry fee would be $7.50 per vehicle for Nebraskans and $12.50 for nonresidents. A one-day resident permit would cost $1.50. Voted down was a proposed amendment which would have authorized issuance of duplicate $1 permits for those buying the 12-month entrance stickers for their vehicles.

Also rebuffed was an amendment which would have reduced the $7.50 to $5. Sen. Lorain Schmit of Belwood, one of the bill's sponsors, said it is intended as a revenue-raiser and should not be revised to diminish the amount it would generate because Nebraska has 92 parks and recreational areas, many of which need improvements.

The entrance permits would be required only for designated areas in the parks and recreational areas.

The soda pop bill provides that 80 per cent of the revenue flowing from the tax would be earmarked for parks and recreational areas with the balance utilized for improvement and development of wildlife habitat.

Several legislators who supported the bill emphasized it would also give the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission money that could be matched with federal funds.

During the debate, Sen. Frank Lewis of Bellevue recalled the commission at one time imposed a small property tax which raised about $500,000 yearly for matching with federal dollars. "But last year our match was zero," he said.

He argued the "very minimal" tax could readily be absorbed by the soft drink industry which he claimed was helped greatly by the sharp decline in the cost of sugar.

The senators refused to broaden the tax to include beer. Among the objectors was Sen. Orval Kayes of Springfield who noted he has another bill proposing higher beer taxes for the benefit of the state's general fund.

It's not known how the two bills will fare if they are passed and sent to Gov. J. James Exon. He has promised to veto the pop tax measure if it reaches his desk. To override a veto, the bill would have to pick up more support than it had during initial debate.

Tax Bill

The legislature has approved introduction of a bill directed at providing an additional 37.5 per cent in property tax exemptions for agricultural products and business inventory.

Under the bill, the additional exemption could be claimed on Jan. 1, 1978, on farm-income producing machinery and equipment, feed, fertilizer, farm inventory, grain, seed, and a number of other items.

In order to cover the added exemptions the legislature would have to appropriate more than $58 million from sales and income tax receipts.

On Jan. 1, 1977, the added exemption would cover business inventory, and on Jan. 1, 1980, would be made applicable to livestock.

Sen. Lorain Schmit said his Agriculture Committee began working on the bill after livestock valuations were announced last Dec. Discrepancies in valuations were noted by the committee during the drafting of the measure, he said.

Some of the lawmakers were skeptical about the proposal because of the financial impact it would have on the state.

Bottle Bill Defeated

An attempt to pry out of the Revenue Committee a bill mandating deposits on all beer and soda pop containers failed.

The Miscellaneous Subjects Committee was deadlocked 4-4 on the measure, so the three sponsors asked their colleagues in the full legislature to vote the bill onto the floor but there wasn't enough support.

The proposal would have required a minimum five-cent deposit on a 10-cent pop and beer containers. A 10-cent deposit would have been mandated for disposable containers.

Sen. Steve Fowler of Lincoln, chief sponsor of the proposal, said it would address the issues of litter, energy conservation and solid waste disposal.

Opponents argued passage of the bill would have thrown into the unemployed ranks hundreds of persons who work for beverage container manufacturers.

Law Implementation

Many Nebraska lawmakers are irked because some of the bills they enact into law are not implemented after a state official questions the constitutionality of the legislation.

There are three bills in the legislature aimed at solving the problem.

One of them would compel compliance with a law, even though a state agency had believed it constitutionally suspect. Under the legislation, a law would be fully implemented by the governmental unit charged with its administration, even if the attorney general had said the act was unconstitutional.

Deferral would be permitted if within 10 working days of the issuance of the attorney general's opinion, the agency commenced a judicial review to determine the law's validity.

There wasn't a dissenting vote when the bill received first round approval. But there was an understanding a number of amendments would be incorporated into the measure during later debate.

Introducer of the bill, Sen. John Murphy of South Sioux City, said he would be "most happy" to cooperate in amending the proposal but he left no doubt he wants some effective legislation.

During the discussion, Sen. John DeCamp, a Neligh lawyer, cautioned that the legislature was dealing with "fundamental" constitutional questions.

One suggestion from him was that the state reimburse any private citizen who took a test case to court and won. Sen. Ernest Chambers of Omaha, a law student, said amending the bill to provide that a citizen, at no cost to himself, could seek a court test of a law's validity might be the answer.

As the bill now stands, DeCamp said, a state agency chief, by seeking a court review within the 10 days allowed, could tie up a questionable statute in litigation for several years.

Cloud seeding not the answer to drought

Before drought plagued Nebraskans start demanding cloud seeding programs as some of their western neighbor states have done, they would do well to listen to words of warning from weather scientists who have spent years of research on the subject rather than to the promoters of cloud seeding services.

Throughout recorded history, people have turned to rain making attempts in time of drought. In the Old Testament, there is the story about how Elijah and Jehovah outdid the prophets of Baal to produce a much-needed drought-breaking thunderstorm. The rain dances of some of our Indian tribes of the Southwest are a part of their cultural heritage. During the droughty 1890's, traveling "rain makers" for a fee shot off cannon and firecrackers to attract rain. It is part of that nature in us that a time of crisis demands action. "Somebody do something" — even if the results are purely psychological.

G. Brant Foote of the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colorado, has warned that in aviation terms, weather modification is still in the "Kitty Hawk era" and that a great deal more basic research is required before there can be any real understanding. He warned that cloud seeding could have an effect opposite to that desired. For example, less rain rather than more rain or more hail rather than less hail.

For more than 10 years, federally funded "hail suppression" and "rain increase" studies and experimentation have been conducted in the Northeast Colorado area, extending over into parts of Western Nebraska and South Dakota. The results have been inconclusive. Despite that fact, the State of Colorado has hired a firm to seed clouds with silver iodide over the Rocky Mountains and Washington State has signed a contract for a similar program. It so happened that after the first seeding in Colorado a sizable storm front dropped much needed snow in the mountain areas and immediately officials of the company hired to do the work claimed they had increased the snowfall by 20 to 40 per cent.

Cloud seeding is not new in Western Nebraska. In the early 1950's a Denver-based firm sold ranchers and farmers on the idea of a "rain increase" program one dry spring. The sales pitch was similar to what one hears now. "We can't make it rain, but we can make it rain more." Ranchers who signed up paid so much per acre and business people also contributed to the fund. Representatives of the firm drove Cadillac cars out to pick up the checks. That was part of the "image" of being believable and successful.

Over $100,000 was paid out on that first contract. That spring, the rains came and they continued all summer and into the fall for one of the wettest years in Nebraska. It rained on those who had paid and those who hadn't paid and all were happy. The company took all the credit, naturally. The next spring, everybody rushed to get his check in and the cloud seeding got off to a great start. But the second year turned out to be one of the driest for that area on record. The company said, "There weren't any storm fronts. Remember, we told you we couldn't make it rain, but if it did rain, we could make it rain more."

The third spring came on very dry and the checks came in very slow. That year also proved to be a below normal precipitation year and so ended the program in that part of Northwest Nebraska.

A few years later, the North Platte Valley had its "hail suppression" cloud seeding program and there is still among the Nebraska statutes, a law setting up a local tax supported system of hail suppression districts. The law bogged down in court actions, particularly after the valley had one of its worst hail loss years.

A veteran U.S. weatherman put it "Frankly at this point there is no way of knowing whether it (cloud seeding) helped or hindered. What can be demonstrated in the controlled conditions of a laboratory can be something entirely different in the vastness of the heavens."

That was 20 years ago, but the most knowledgeable experts on the subject are still saying the same thing. — M.M. Van Kirk, Nebraska Farm Bureau.

Minimum wage law called discriminatory

If the current minimum wage bill were correctly titled "An Act to Deprive Minorities of Jobs" it would get few votes in Congress. But the Federal Trade Commission does not enforce its "truth in labeling" rules against other branches of the government, so the bill will get by with a little selected for its altruistic overtones — "Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1977" — rather than one descriptive of its destructive side effects.

The fact is, the minimum wage legislation now being contemplated (introduced by Rep. John H. Dent of Pennsylvania) would cost over one million jobs. And the losses would hit disproportionately the young, the old, and racial and ethnic minorities — especially black teenagers.

The reason for these undesirable effects is not difficult to understand. A legislated minimum wage rate may be either below or above the prevailing free-market wage rate for unskilled labor. If below, the legislation becomes an empty political gesture, doing neither good nor harm. If the legal rate is set above the market rate, however, the trouble starts.

An employer cannot pay more for work than the work contributes to his business. If he did, he would eventually exhaust his capital and go bankrupt. Therefore, increases in the minimum wage often force employers to find ways to get along with fewer unskilled workers. And they do.

Earn-while-you-learn jobs — the kind given to promising youngsters — are the most costly for an employer to provide in terms of immediate return on the wages paid out. Consequently, these jobs are of necessity low-pay — a kind of privately subsidized education for the inexperienced employee.

The payoff for both employer and employee comes when the worker is able to move up to more productive, better paying work.

Eliminate these jobs and you eliminate a traditional upward route for the unskilled and the disadvantaged. Worse yet, instead of being supported and trained at private expense, the unemployed victims of this phony government "help" must be supported and trained at taxpayer expense. And public manpower training programs — while worthy in purpose — have usually not worked as well in practice as the training available in private employment.

Am I being excessively theoretical? No. The facts are there for all who are willing to look. By 1970, the cumulative effects of minimum wage legislation had lowered employment by 15 per cent among 18-19 year olds, by 27 per cent among 16-17 year olds, and by 45 per cent in the 14-15 bracket.

Nor does the bad news end there. Rep. Dent's bill also contains a provision that would "index" future increases in the minimum wage to the average hourly earnings of production workers. Like the similar automatic mechanism for congressional pay raises, this little trick would relieve congressmen of the need to vote on future minimum wage increases. It would also create a disastrous inflationary spiral.

Think about it: The average pay goes up, so the minimum wage goes up. The increase in the minimum wage raises the production pay average, which again raises the minimum wage, which again raises the average, etc., etc.

Why do we go through this lemming-like performance, time and again? Because of the unions. Minimum wage hikes benefit the unions in two ways:

— They tend to reduce competition with higher paying union jobs.

— They tend to push up all wage rates. When the worker on the rung below gets a raise, the one above wants one too, and so on up the ladder. Since this process is likely to worsen inflation, nobody really gains in the end. But the people who elect union officers don't understand the connection.

If President Carter is really anxious to help the unemployed, this bill — H.R. 3744 — is a good place to start. A veto of it would save more jobs than his public service jobs program is designed to create.

'Party-line poopers' not appreciated

Wayne

Dear Editor: We have lived in the country for over six years now, and have been on four different telephone party lines. The last line we were on prior to this one was an unusually good one — people were courteous, not talking for long periods of time, not slamming their receiver down if someone else was talking, etc.

But this time, we have really got a winner. On this line, if someone picks up their phone while I am talking, it is very hard for the person on the other end to hear. Yet, knowing this does not stop this third party from keeping their receiver up, eavesdropping on as much conversation as they please, and, at the same time, making it difficult for any conversation to go on.

There are five families on our line, which, I gather, is about average, but in the space of a 10-minute phone call, I have heard a receiver lifted more than 10 times — not to mention the two or three minutes at a time spent just listening. If this only happened a few times, it wouldn't make me so upset — but I only make about two phone calls a day, and nine out of ten times, I am interrupted this way.

If people on party lines would only try a few suggestions, I'm sure we would all benefit:

- Try to limit calls to 10 minutes or less, and space your calls a half hour apart, or more.
- If you lift your receiver and someone else is talking, replace it quietly and wait five or 10 minutes before trying again.

— Please, please, don't stay on the line to listen. This only makes it more difficult for the connected parties to complete their conversations, since they have to repeat themselves to be heard.

I really don't know why someone must listen anyway. Very seldom do they hear any scandals. In fact, the TV and newspapers are usually more interesting than a private conversation.

I know I'm not the only one who is burned up by these "party-line poopers." Most country people have probably had similar experiences, or worse. There is nothing the phone company can do to stop these people. But maybe if they learned just how juvenile and discourteous they are being, it would make them stop and think before they do it again. — Name withheld upon request.

OBSERVATIONS

Choice: inequitable or unwieldy

The Unicameral is considering two bills designed to generate money needed to improve the state park and recreational area system, as explained in "Capitol News" elsewhere on this page.

One bill would impose a one-cent wholesale tax on a 12-ounce bottle of soda pop. The other proposes charging an annual entry fee for state parks and recreational areas.

The first bill is inequitable; the second unwieldy.

Sen. Frank Lewis of Bellevue said the soft drink industry could readily absorb the one-cent tax. True? Perhaps, but not necessarily a good reason for imposing a tax. It hardly seems fair that a single industry should be forced to absorb the costs of maintaining public facilities.

A cigarette tax, for example, was levied to finance the University's shiny new field house. The field house is now complete; the tax is still in effect.

The permit proposal appears a more equitable way to raise the money. Those who use the park system would pay for improving it. Some problems are immediately apparent, however.

The first is enforcement. Checking every car for a sticker during busy summer months is a task which could consume a considerable amount of time for Game and Parks Department personnel.

The effects on the state's tourism industry should also be considered. Travelers passing through on vacation might be less apt to stop if they are forced to shell out for a permit which they will use only once.

The proposal for a fee for each vehicle might also cause problems. Many families own several vehicles but are likely to only use one at a time for outings to recreational areas. The problem might be overcome by offering a family permit at a higher price, but covering up to say, three vehicles.

Neither revenue producing idea is impressive, but the permit idea seems the best, if problems can be ironed out and administrative costs kept at a minimum. — Jim Strayer.

Missouri River Bridge Proposed

A joint delegation from Vermillion, S.D., and Newcastle has presented a concept proposal for a Missouri River bridge linking the two communities to the Nebraska Bureau of Public Roads in Lincoln.

The concept proposal was presented to Thomas Doyle who is the director state engineer of the Nebraska Bureau of Public Roads staff.

The proposal pointed out that the northeast Nebraska counties including Dixon and Cedar are isolated especially pertaining to the north-south highway system. A Missouri River bridge would further enhance the potential for economic, educational and recreational growth and at the same time promote more farm to market trade, a spokesman said.

The Missouri River bridge committee was set to meet with State Highway Commission on April 22, but the meeting will be rescheduled at this month's Highway Commission meeting. The date will be announced later.

The proposal also will be submitted to the Old West Regional Commission to obtain funds for a study on how the areas would be affected with a bridge and approach roads. The commission is composed of governors of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Montana, and Wyoming.

It was also pointed out to the joint delegation that complete cooperation between Nebraska and South Dakota was essential. The Newcastle Area Jay Cee's and the representatives of the Vermillion Chambers of Commerce transportation committee are heading up the two respective delegations.

Carla Schwartz, 18, daughter of Mrs. Delilah Schwartz, of Wayne, has enlisted in the Air Force.

TSGt. Ron Marshall, local recruiter in Norfolk, made the announcement and assisted Carla in entering her four-year program.

Carla is assigned at Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas, completing six weeks of basic orientation training. Upon completion of basic, Carla will go to school for specialized training in air operations. She is a 1976 graduate of Wayne High School.

Second Lieutenant John Warner recently left for Nuremberg, Germany where he and his wife will be stationed for three years at Herzo Base near Nuremberg. ## Farming Is Third Most Dangerous Occupation

For many years, farming (including ranching), has had the dubious distinction of being the third most dangerous occupation in the United States, surpassed only by mining and construction industries.

Does agriculture deserve this lofty ranking? A series of state safety studies underway should answer the question.

During the late 1960s and early 1970s, there was a flurry of activity by agencies outside of agriculture to improve health and safety for agricultural workers. Much of this emphasis was developed without any input from the agricultural community and without any reliable statistics to justify emerging standards and codes.

While some of the efforts were beneficial, many were detrimental to farmers. And proposed standards were a "mixed bag" in the minds of farmers and ranchers; some promised harassment, others appeared to be productive.

Specialists in the agricultural safety field could not deny or argue the problem of tractor overturns or the accidents attributed to open power take-offs. In the case of other types of accidents, however, statistics were lacking. In order to correct this problem, a number of states conducted farm safety studies to gather data on farm accidents to assist in planning and accident prevention. Ohio and Michigan were the first two states to conduct comprehensive studies, followed by Nebraska. The Nebraska studies involved 6,990 persons and 1,779 farms in 18 counties. The study was designed to gather facts from three per cent of all Nebraska farms.

The 1970 study chronicled 436 accidents, of which 253 were agriculturally-related. At present, 29 states have conducted farm safety studies, and it is hoped all states will have conducted studies by 1980.

Nebraska now is in the midst of its second study. Whereas the first study was conducted with the help of Home Extension Clubs, the present effort is being done with the assistance of Farm Bureau Women in 21 Nebraska counties.

These types of studies identify the problems and focus attention on information that can be used to plan safety emphasis programs, engineering changes and industry cooperation in solving problems.

Occasionally, whether citizens like it or not, government must move in to solve some problems. The best way, however, is through voluntary efforts by citizens. One of the difficulties is a shortage of volunteers to gather needed data in fact finding surveys. A dislike for government programs has made many persons reluctant to be a part of a study.

Against this background of the farm safety movement in the state, how do Nebraskans react to farm safety trends? Those with fatalistic attitudes, believing that a certain number of deaths are destined to occur during a cropping year, are likely to be disappointed with 1976 statistics.

The 37 deaths caused by farm accidents last year is just one more than the all-time low of 36 recorded in 1974. From 60 to 70 fatalities have been recorded in "high accident" years.

Still, it is reasonable to consider that Nebraskans are not satisfied or content with as many as 36 or 37 fatalities. Most believe this record can be improved. A clue is seen in the fact that only one of the 1976 deaths can be attributed to equipment malfunction; the remainder are charged to operator error.

One of the high fatality categories has been the tractor overturn. While as many as 44 persons have been killed in tractor upsets in a previous year, only nine were killed in overturns in 1976 — about 25 per cent of the total.

The recognized trend in reducing tractor fatalities should be credited to approximately 1,000 persons around the state. The group includes county extension agents, vo-ag teachers, Nebraska State Patrol education officers, Department of Motor Vehicle examiners, volunteer instructors, women's organizations, and parents who have spent countless hours in teaching tractor safety to young persons who are future tractor operators. This segment of the total farm safety picture is truly a success story.

One area that needs improvement can be seen by examining the 1976 statistics. This is in the operation of the large round baler. Four persons have been killed in the state since this implement was introduced, and three of these fatalities occurred in 1976.

We are at approximately the same stage in safe use of the large round baler as with the case with the one-row pull-type corn picker of the 1950's. Harried corn picker operators were getting off the equipment while it was running, and compactor accidents did not decline until controls were put on the platform within the reach of the operator.

Hopefully, operators will condition themselves to turn off equipment rather than waiting for engineering changes to take place through the manufacturer.

It is not necessary to sacrifice a certain number of Nebraskans each year to get the job done in farming. Farmers, ranchers, their spouses, equipment manufacturers, retailers, and those involved in farm safety must realize that farming operations can be carried out safely if thought is given to each job as it is performed.

The reduction in the number of injuries and fatalities which has been carried out in the recent past shows it can be done, and even more reduction seems promising in the future. It is a matter of motivation and commitment. It can be done if people really want to.

Show May Benefit Gardeners

Urban green-thumbers as well as farmers can benefit by tuning in on a series of five half-hour television programs on safe use of pesticides, beginning today (Thursday).

So stresses Emery Nelson, extension pesticide training program coordinator at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. The five programs have been put together by the University of Mid-America and will air on the Nebraska ETV Network each Thursday at 7 p.m. on consecutive weeks, excepting April 21.

The television series, developed by UMA under a contract for use in Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, is primarily designed to help certify private applicators of restricted pesticides as required by law, Nelson said. However, he said it also will provide general information to homeowners and the general public, informing both users and non-users of pesticides of the hazards and benefits to society.

Anyone interested in viewing the series, whether a homeowner, farmer, rancher, or public-spirited citizen, is urged to stop by their county extension office and pick up a set of workbooks to be used when watching the shows, Nelson said.

He stressed to farmers and ranchers that "watching the television series by itself will not qualify you as a private applicator for certification to apply restricted pesticides." He urged agriculturists to watch the series as an aid in gaining knowledge. However, Nelson said, private applicators must attend a training session set up by their county extension agent in order of become certified. Nelson said approximately 40,000 farmers and ranchers have been certified through training sessions conducted this winter by county agents around the state. And, about two-thirds of the commercial applicators in the state — or about 2,000 persons — have been certified in separate sessions.

Nelson expressed satisfaction with the conduct of the state-wide program, which has as a goal the training of all the estimated 70,000 private applicators in the state. The federal law requiring certification of applicators of restricted pesticides goes into effect October 21, 1977.

Here are some good management tips that swine producers should follow in order to farrow and save more healthy baby pigs —

— Be present when the sow farrows — allows assisting difficult deliveries and disentangling newborn pigs from afterbirth.

— Provide a warm, dry, draft-free nest for the pigs — pigs need 90 degree F. for the first several days.

— Help small pigs nurse — pigs which receive colostrum (first milk) have a good chance to live. Pigs which receive no colostrum have little chance to live.

— Clip needle teeth to prevent abrasions of the sow's udder and faces of pigs.

— Disinfect navels to prevent navel infections.

— Provide supplemental iron by the fourth day to prevent anemia.

No part of the swine operation is as closely related to profit level as the number of pigs saved. Saving pigs is a good investment of time.

QUALITY OF SEED
Farmers who will be planting seed of any crop should consider the quality prior to planting and try to obtain the best seed available.

Only two per cent of total farming operating costs are spent on seed, so farmers can't afford to economize and use low quality seeds.

Seed quality refers to five characteristics: varietal purity, mechanical purity — a high percentage of crop seed, with low percentage of objectionable weed seeds and other crop seeds; high germination and vigor; adaption to local farming conditions, and freedom from broken seeds and disease.

A farmer can quickly check the quality of seed before buying by simply reading the labels attached to seed bags. The seed label has information of the seed lot's origin, germination, percentage of purity, percentage of other crops and weed seed and inert material.

BUY CERTIFIED SEED
The best assurance that a variety is true-to-type is to buy certified seed. All certified seed bears the blue tag which insures that the lot has met high inspection and laboratory standards for both genetic and mechanical purity.

Police Blotter

Charles Thomas, 720 Douglas, was driving on the 200 block of East 10th about 8:15 a.m. Monday when his vehicle struck the rear end of a parked car owned by David and Ella Carlson of rural Hooper. Thomas told the police some papers slipped from the car visor and when he picked them up his car hit the Carlson car.

About 10 a.m. Saturday, Todd Koester of 819 Valley Dr. reported that the door to his place had been pried open. Nothing was reported missing.

'What Freedom Means'

"THE MEANING of Democracy" was the topic of Karl Killsholm, guest speaker at the Wayne County Farm Bureau banquet Saturday night. The Iowa native recounted how he had moved back to Denmark as a small boy along with his father and brother, lived under Hitler's rule during World War II, and returned to Iowa to marry a childhood playmate and regain his United States citizenship. Toastmaster for the dinner was Ted Stock of Wayne. Invocation was by Lauren Boeckenhaur, Wayne County Farm Bureau president welcomed the audience and introduced the guest. The Pender High swing choir, the "Ambassadors" provided entertainment. Farm Bureau officers in addition to Sandahl are vice president Clarke Kai, secretary-treasurer Wayne Gilliland, membership chairman Merrill and Lorella Baier and Milton and Jacquyn Owens, youth at large Brian Kai, woman at large Ruth Felt, women's chairman Pauline Westerhold, commodity coordinator Laurene Boeckenhaur, agency manager Melvin "Budd" Froehlich, career underwriters William Hansen and Herbert Niemann, and office assistant Mona Mäyer.

THE EFFICIENT PLANT

An efficient soybean plant will give you higher yields with a lower planting rate. And that's exactly what the SRF* Certified Soybeans do.

SRF* Soybeans have narrow leaves that actually turn the sunlight down to the lower portion of the plant. This causes more air movement, giving you higher yields and a higher resistance to plant diseases.

That means greater efficiency. And that means more profit for you.

Surfactants Marketed to Increase Yields

Surfactants are being marketed as a means of increasing crop yields and obtaining better weed control from herbicides, according to Russell Moomaw, extension agronomist, Northeast Station at Concord.

Surfactants are materials used to help emulsify, disperse, spread, or wet liquids. Surfactants are added to herbicide solutions to improve leaf wetting and herbicide penetration into the weed leaf. In addition, claims are that surfactants will increase water usage by the crop plant, aid in soil water intake, and increase crop root size.

There are three kinds of herbicide solutions to which farmers could consider adding a surfactant, notes Moomaw. The first situation would be adding a surfactant to a preemergence herbicide solution which is sprayed on the soil surface. In University of Nebraska research plots, surfactants added to a preemergence herbicide solution did not increase herbicide performance, crop yield, or water penetration into the soil. The only reason to add a surfactant to a preemergence herbicide solution might be to improve mixing properties of the spray solution and decrease the friction of pump parts, not to increase herbicide performance. A second herbicide solution to which farm operators could add a surfactant would be a post-emergence atrazine solution, Moomaw said. If atrazine is to be used postemergence, it should be applied before weeds are one and a half inches tall. Crop oil is the most effective surfactant and it will improve weed control from the atrazine solution. Nebraska weed control researchers feel postemergence atrazine applications are more of a "rescue" operation than a front-line herbicide treatment, however. That is because rainfall can be erratic in the western corn belt and postemergence atrazine application must be followed by rainfall to be effective. Surfactants are also promoted for use with 2,4-D or Banvel solutions. Surfactants should not be added to 2,4-D herbicide solutions used on field crops, since these products already contain surfactants. Herbicide manufacturers include surfactants in formulated 2,4-D or Banvel products, based on their research. Adding an additional surfactant may have no effect; it may decrease herbicide performance, or it may increase herbicide performance and crop injury.

A NebGuide "Surfactants and Herbicides" available at county extension offices contains more information on this subject, Moomaw said.

Heavy Calf Loss Predicted

Estimates from a neighboring state suggest the possibility that a high number of cows and calves may be lost this year from the "weak calf syndrome," according to Dr. Charles Francis, extension veterinarian at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Affected calves are born weak at full term and fail to nurse. Death losses of the affected calves are approximately 80 percent unless treated with blood transfusions, Francis says. One pint of blood is given. The blood from a cow which has had one of the calves three to four weeks previously is desirable. Other supportive treatment also can be given along with the stress of cold and inadequate nutrition of the cow during gestation, researchers have found viral and bacterial agents associated with the syndrome, the veterinarian says.

Downer cows are often caused by a lack of adequate nutrition during the winter months of gestation, he notes. Shortages and high-priced roughages have tempted cow-calf producers to stretch available feed. This is risky since a lack of energy in the ration has been the biggest cause of the weak calf syndrome and death losses, Francis said.

Dr. Clair Hibbs, veterinarian at the North Platte Station, recommends for cows a one-to-one calcium phosphorus ration mineral supplement and a protein supplement with 30,000 I.U. of vitamin A. Affected calves require energy of good quality. Colostrum is the best source, he says. They may be injected with water soluble vitamin A along with a blood transfusion.

Here's what you can do to keep your gas bill down.

Use our Free Home Insulation Inspection Service.

2.

Do all those little things that add up to big savings.

A Peoples specialist will measure your home's insulation, ventilation and temperature needs free of charge. Then, if you need insulation, he'll handle all the arrangements, give you an estimate, arrange for certified installation and check the job when it's finished. You pay only for the installation and materials. And he can even set up easy payments on your monthly gas bill.

You already know many of the little things you can do to keep your gas bill down: caulk, weatherstrip, clean furnace filters, lower your thermostat and close off unused rooms. But there are many more. Keep your gas appliances clean and in good repair. Keep your water heater set at "normal"; "low" if you leave town. Get a new insulated outside door. Insulate hot water pipes running through cold areas. Insulate your basement walls, ceiling, duct work and cold crawl spaces. Let the sun shine in on sunny winter days. Get a humidifier to keep your home more comfortable at a lower temperature. Take showers to use less hot water. Use your fireplace correctly — it's beautiful, but if not properly used, it draws the heat right out of your house. Don't let the fire in the fireplace "die down," but put it out and close the damper as soon as possible.

Some of these tips require a larger investment than others, but they'll all pay you in the long run. Most just require a little thought on your part. So, devise your own ways to save energy as you're using your gas appliances. You're already saving money every day of the year just by having them in your home.

AI Short Course Planned

An increasing interest in the artificial insemination (AI) of swine and the growing availability of commercial semen in the state have resulted in the scheduling of an AI Short Course in Lincoln March 31 April 1, according to Dr. William Ahlshwede, University of Nebraska-Lincoln extension swine specialist.

The training session, sponsored by the University of Nebraska-Lincoln animal science department, will demonstrate semen collection, processing and handling, heat checking, insemination and pregnancy testing, he said.

Ahlshwede said students will have a change to practice AI techniques with sows and boars during the short course, which will run from 9 a.m. to about 5 p.m. each day at UN-L's Marvel Baker hall.

Fee for the two day course is $60, he said, and enrollment is limited to 16 participants. He said the enrollment includes the cost of course materials, animal use and an IA kit, which includes equipment and material needed for collecting from boars and breeding sows. Meals and lodging are not covered by the fee.

Ahlshwede said because space is limited, preregistration is required. He said a $20 pre registration deposit and any further questions should be sent immediately to Swine AI, Room 210, Marvel Baker Hall, University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Nebr. 68583.

EXTENSION NOTES

By Anna Marie Kreifels

POISON CONTROL WEEK
During Poison Control Week, March 20-26, take a look at areas in your home where poisonous substances are stored, then determine if they are being stored safely.

About 41 per cent of all accidental poisonings occur in the kitchen. Other areas where poisonous substances are stored in the home are the bathroom, the laundry, the garage and the workshop.

Such poisonous items as mothballs, cosmetics and medications left in the bedroom can also attract curious toddlers who like to put things in their mouths. Even some of the houseplants you have could be toxic enough to cause illness and death if eaten.

The Nebraska Poison Information Center is located at Childrens Memorial Hospital, 44th and Dewey Ave., Omaha, Nebr., 68105. This Center offers 24 hour a day access to poison information. One of their main objectives is home poison prevention. They have available upon request two brochures entitled "Poison Proof Your Home Check List" and "Stop Plant Poisoning." Both contain important information which might be used by Extension Clubs, 4-H clubs or other group meetings.

Business notes...

Robert Dickey of Laurel, director of the Hartington Federal Land Bank Association (FLBA), was in Omaha March 14 and 15 for a meeting of the FLBA directors advisory committee.

The 12-member committee represents more than 57,000 farmers and ranchers who are Land Bank borrowers in Iowa, Nebraska, South Dakota, and Wyoming. The committee counsels with officials of the Omaha Land Bank on matters pertaining to agricultural credit and operations of the member-owned system.

Along with other "reform" legislation Mr. Meany has waiting Common Situs would permit ONE picket protesting against ONE contractor to stop ALL work on a single project. IN ADDITION it would stop ALL OTHER projects on which ANY contractor working on the first site was involved!

This is your LAST GASP — LAST CHANCE — There is NO MORE time. It must be done this week — TODAY!!

Write our Senators, Carl Curtis and Edward Zorinsky at the Senate Office Bldg., Washington DC 20510 and plead with them to vote against the Common Situs Picketing Bill Repeal of 14 B and to vote AGAINST CLOTURE on debate on the Common Situs bill.

Last year we escaped this monstrosity by finally convincing President Ford of the rampant evil present in the wording and intent of this legislation. This year there will be NO Presidential veto. George Meany has declared himself President as far as this legislation is concerned. He is calling in his IOU's.

There is legislation waiting in the wings to permit almost UNLIMITED union violence on construction sites to force membership. The "Sixty Minutes" and Altomose could be happening all over Nebraska and the USA not just Philadelphia! They will pull this and other worms out of the can just as soon as they find out if they can ram Common Situs through. This is the bellweather issue! You will not have to be even remotely connected with construction to feel the effects of this legislation on your cost of living and your everyday life. It will affect professional people, trades, businessmen and farmers. FARMERS?? Especially farmers! Ask yourself what it is that has really put you in a bind. The drought hurts but that will eventually go away. What hasn't gone away for the last twenty years is the constant increase in the cost of your doing business and the constant sameness of the price you get for your product. Big labor is inflating the price of your needs. Big business doesn't care! They merely pass on all strike results to you. These same people along with the do gooders who are probably living off a family inheritance then cry about the high cost of food. Where do they try to cut the high cost of food? Not at the processing level; nor the distribution level or any of the other handling levels because these are all UNION levels. They cut the price in the Country. YOUR level. The cost of your raw material has to stay constant or be reduced to pay for the other increases. Isn't that what has been happening for years? You are independent businessmen — committing suicide by going along with such a program. Here is one place to begin stopping this rule by George Meany!

Write you senators and Rep. Thone. Ask them to oppose this legislation in every possible way. Write the President at the White House and ask him to rethink his commitment to George Meany for the good of America.

Take time out to do this RIGHT NOW. They are trying to ram this legislation through before the lawmakers have a chance to go home for Easter recess and find out what the people really think about it!!
