

Out of Old

Nebraska

When Nebraska Territory was opened for settlement in June, 1854, Edward R. Harden of Ringgold, Georgia, was appointed judge of its first court. There had been 800 applicants for the position. Harden arrived at Bellevue, the temporary seat of government, in December, 1854, after a month-long journey and his reaction was immediate. He did not like the new territory, and his letters, which were published by the Nebraska State Historical Society in "Nebraska History" (Volume 27, 1946), reflect his attitude as well as conditions on the frontier as he saw them. Excerpts follow:

"Bellevue, Dec. 2nd, 1854 . . . I am now at the Presbyterian mission house here, which is the only house in the place except some mud huts . . . There are at this mission some 20 young Indian children, boys and girls, being instructed and civilized. I went into prayers last night and saw them and heard them sing. We are surrounded by Indians . . . I was walking down to a trading house yesterday evening about half mile from here, and met three warriors - very cold and high wind blowing - their bodies were naked, and buckskin leggings around their legs . . . I shall return home on the first boat that comes up this spring if my life is spared . . . about the 1st of April next, I cannot get home earlier than that time if I wanted to as the boats will from this time cease to run up the Missouri River."

"Bellevue, Dec. 9th, 1854 . . . Oh what a climate - cold and piercing winds . . . The Gov. of this Territory slept in my room last night on a Buffalo skin, and has assigned me my post 35 miles below this at Nebraska City on the Missouri River . . . Write me all the good news, and for God sake cheer me up as much as you can, for I am the most low spirited mortal you ever saw. Everything is awfully high in this country - I have all my own wood to cut, and bring up into my room, make my own fires and in fine I am certain that when my present stock of clean clothes are exhausted that I will have to go to the wash Tub. Our government here is in a perfect stew about the location of the Capital . . .

"I am most awfully disappointed with this country. Just imagine a vast expanse of land like the ocean, without a tree to be seen, bounded by the blue horizon and you have some idea of Nebraska. The prairie land is rich indeed, but really not enough timber in the habitable portion of the Territory for firewood, much less for building purposes, and how they ever expect to build houses, unless they freight lumber from St. Louis I am at a loss to know. I have entered upon the discharge of my official duties, but shall return home on the first boat that leaves in the spring. The Missouri River just opposite where I now am has been in the last week frozen over so that persons walk over on the ice . . . You would not know me wrapped up in furs and Buffalo robes, and Buckskin pantaloons and blanket with a hole cut in the middle and (put) over my head . . . P.S. Don't say to anyone that I am displeased, and burn up this letter - as I am very popular with the people and they all think I like the country."

"Bellevue, Dec. 18th 1854 . . . Two hundred warriors are now camped in their skin tents, just in front of this house, and while I write the yard is full of warriors and . . . squaws, with their paposes or children swung on their backs . . . The climate is awful cold - It takes me all my time to loaf wood up into my room and to keep fire. I have to wait on myself altogether . . . Owing to the fact that I can get no washing done here I have compelled to have some red flannel shirts made neatly ornamented with black braid - the kind generally worn here - which I wear in the place of the cotton shirts which I have laid aside. I have been compelled as a protection to my face against the awful winds that prevail here to turn out my whiskers and mustachios, which with my red shirt, and blue blanket makes my look as savage as a meat axe. The papers of this territory have noticed me in a very complimentary manner . . . The ground is now white, with snow, and I am confined to my room, in perfect prison, only going out when I am compelled to get wood . . .

"Bellevue, Feb. 1st 1855 . . . Mails are very irregular . . . Thank God I have but one more . . . month to spend in this interperate climate . . . I have suffered all the privations, and encountered all the perils of this voyage to live among savages . . . to make some money, and some reputation and character for my family . . . The newspapers have noticed me in very flattering terms. I had the honor of administering the oaths of office to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the house of representatives of the first legislative assembly, that ever convened in this territory (January 16, 1955) and . . . this fact will do for my children to pride themselves upon . . .

By the summer of 1956, Harden's impressions of Nebraska were somewhat altered: "Nebraska City, July 7 . . . I am much delighted with this summer climate . . . and have . . . decided to bring my family out . . . My cash income is now $2,350 with scarcely anything to do . . . We have fine society here . . . I made a great speech on fourth of July at this place, about 1500 Ladies and gentlemen present . . . I am as a King here. My word is the Law of the Land . . .

For reasons unknown Harden returned to Georgia. He saw limited service in the Confederate Army, but in 1863 he and his family moved to southwestern Georgia where he spent the rest of his life struggling against poverty. He died June 12, 1884.

STRAY Thoughts

By Jim Strayer

Congratulations are in order for John and Marie Mohr on the opening of the new, Black Knight steak house and lounge.

The new location has about 5,000 square feet of floor space, including a dance floor, restaurant seating for 100, a private party room with seating for 140, and the lounge and bar area. Numbers, of course, don't really tell much about a place, particularly one as tastefully decorated as the new Black Knight. Anyone who hasn't had a chance to stop in yet has a real treat in store.

Shocking Theory

Wayne seems to be getting rather more than its share of lightning bolts lately. I heard one theory advanced regarding the bolt which struck the Redeemer Lutheran church - that it was attracted by the large number of Presbyterians who live in the neighborhood.

Heavy Load

To comply with proposed Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations, a commercial diver would weigh 1,000 pounds by the time he went under water, according to a Navy magazine.

The Washington Post said the proposed safety standards would cost the diving industry from $33 million to $100 million a year. The Council on Wage and Price Stability reports that the cost of $33 million statistically would save two lives a year. And the $100 million figure is more than the industry grosses annually.

Hot Air?

The word "blimp" came from a military designation for a non-rigid structure lighter than air craft - B-type limp aircraft of "B" blimps which later became, simply, blimps.

And in case you ever wondered, from watching television commercials, BF Goodrich did at one time make blimps. In fact, during World War I, the government contracted with Goodrich for five, with Goodyear for nine, and with the Connecticut Aircraft Company for two.

Goodrich and Goodyear set aside commercial rivalry when Goodyear completed their first blimp, but did not have hangar facilities available. Goodrich offered the use of its hangar and bottle hydrogen gas to launch the airship on May 24, 1917. Goodrich commissioned its first blimp Sept. 11 of the same year and it served until Dec. 12, 1918, when it was seriously damaged. It was repaired, damaged again, recommissioned, and was finally stricken from the record Oct. 30, 1919.

The airships, by the way, were commissioned to protect shipping from enemy submarines. I had planned to include a picture of the famous Goodrich non-existent blimp, but for some reason, none was available.

"Go" Derby

zine, for Goodyear tire dealers.

The promotion, which appears in The Wayne Herald, used a photo of a tire, challenging readers to guess how many golf balls you could make from the 67x51, 12,500 pound monster. Mike Sievers won the "Crazy Days" promotion, guessing 81,825 (the correct figure was 83,333.) Sievers removed the cover from a golf ball and took the rubber to the post office to weigh it on letter scales.

According to the Go magazine article, the promotion was a huge success. Owner Mike Perry in a memo to station manager Lee Tietgen described April as the best sales month in the 36 years Coryell Derby has been in business.

Territory sales manager Tim Waldschmidt was credited with the golf ball idea. The idea was routed to Goodyear's public relations department in Akron, Ohio and the answer to the golf ball question came back by 3 p.m., Waldschmidt said. "From that point," the magazine quotes him as saying, "it was just a matter of drawing up the news ad and running it with a picture of the tire."

YOU AND YOUR CAR

By the Automotive Information Council

A recent news item noted the passing of an 11-year-old station wagon that had exceeded 200,000 miles. Interestingly, its owner was a United States senator whose car, dubbed the "Blue Bomber," gave Maryland's Charles McC. Mathias Jr. an extra bit of public fame.

That kind of story coming out of Washington these days is rare in that the Washington political corps generally probes to tell Detroit how it can improve its products.

The Automotive Information Council, while conceding that Detroit bears its share of complaints, says that Senator Mathias is one of millions of Americans who more than got their money's worth. The files of all the auto companies are thick with complimentary letters from owners reluctant to give up the old family buggy long past its reasonable scrapping date.

A Californian took a subcompact 1971 car into Alaska with the odometer approaching 100,000 miles. The woman drove through snowstorms, a windstorm that ripped a bolted-down luggage rack from the roof and endured a wind chill factor all the way down to 60 degrees below zero. Alaskans were so impressed they offered her $600 more than what she paid for the car when it was purchased used.

The 1973 model year cars were not especially famous for good gas mileage, but a New Jersey resident bought the car used. He spent $35 on repairs, reported 20 miles to the gallon. That wouldn't be good enough for the 1985 federal standard for 1985 but it was pretty good for 1973.

While he thanked the company for the product, he admonished: "I could go on and on, but I wouldn't want you folks to get a swelled head."

A Massachusetts couple were so delighted with the company's cars that it purchased four of them and sent a photograph of the vehicles parked on the front yard. Three of the cars were owned by the children - all of whom had learned to drive in the couple's 1970 model.

From a New York State, the company heard about a car that had been out of production for several years. The 1967 'relic' had cost the motorist $300 in repairs over 10 years and "everything still works but the clock."

A peripatetic citizen of Illinois passed the 100,000 mile mark while in England, is now over 115,000 and drives 85 miles daily to work.

Generally, the owners with six figures on the odometers took good care of their products. They read the owner's manual and followed suggestions.

OBSERVATIONS

Basis for comparison

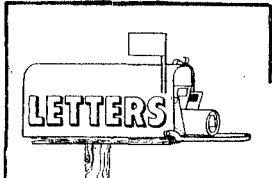

The City of Wayne Tuesday night opened bids for a trash compactor station. Now that those figures are available, and using the best available projections for useage, the city should be able to come up with some hard data on what it will cost to operate the facility on a break even basis.

Considerable controversy has developed around the compactor issue. An opponent has said cost will be excessive and has proposed instead operating a landfill on a private basis.

Now that bids are in, there is, perhaps, a way to see which proposal would be the least expensive. Useage fees for the compoactor station, based on recovering building costs and operating on a break-even basis, can be compared with useage fees proposed for a private landfill, if those figures can be made available.

If it appears the landfill proposal would be less expensive, and some guarantees can be given that such a condition would continue, taking into account inflationary factors, then, perhaps, further consideration should be given to the private landfill idea. If those figures aren't available, the council probably has little choice but to proceed with the transfer station. - Jim Strayer.
