Laurel Man Pleads Guilty to Murder

Richard Hander of Laurel, 53, Thursday pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of second degree murder in the May 14 shooting death of Howard Drayer, 53, also of Laurel.

Nov. 10 was set by district court judge Francis Knelfel as the date for sentencing, pending a probation report. Hander earlier had pleaded innocent to first degree murder.

Cedar County attorney Mark Behm said he filled a petition to reduce the charge because of mitigating circumstances that included Hander's cooperation by the victim.

Before "human rights" can be included in the Carter Administration's foreign policies, American citizens must be willing to pay the price to help others, according to a member of the U.S. State Department attending a conference on human rights Wednesday at Wayne State College.

Dr. Sandy Vogelgesang, a member of the Carter Policy Planning Staff, said the administration faces tough choices in implementing a foreign human rights program, because not every citizen values the same rights.

"I think you have to question if you can honestly expect the farmers of Nebraska, with the falling grain prices, to pay for those human rights and beyond that send money abroad," Vogelgesang said. "Would the citizen of Wayne be willing to make that sacrifice for human rights?"

Rezoning Hearing Slated

The Wayne planning commission has scheduled a hearing for Nov. 7 to consider a request for rezoning by Tompkins Construction. Inc. (TCI).

The company has asked that 10 acres of land near the State Roads Department maintenance yards in Wayne be rezoned from agricultural to industrial use. Another company with similar initials, TCI. Inc., is also considering Wayne as a possible site for plant location.

The company had previously considered locating a plant in Wayne, but chose Yankton, S.D., in the company had previously people. He said a decision on a site is expected sometime during the first half of 1978.

State Department Representative:

Panel discussions on the role of morality in foreign politices and the current Carter Administration's politices were held throughout the day before a crowd of about 300. Panelists included former governor Val Peterson, former foreign service representative Dean Norman Nordstrand, Dr. James Phifer, history specialist from Wayne State. Dr. Richard Super of Creighton University, and Allen O'Donnell, professor of political science at Wayne State.

The consensus of the morning panel was that a "moral" basis of thought is needed in the U.S. and other countries, before an effective foreign human rights policy can be implemented. Members agreed that conflicting views exist on makeup of human rights.

Frye said he hopes the production will reach maximum sometime next year. When that happens, about 40 employes will be on the job. The company is discussing acquiring additional land in the industrial park and adding a warehouse building.

National Fiberglass Corp. went into business in 1957 in Gilroy, Calif. Head-quarters has since been moved to Lewis-ville, Tex., a more central location for the company's national market. The Wayne plant is the seventh for the company, which has more than 200 company, which has more than 200 employes.

Frye said the company has had a good reception in Wayne and extended an invitation to anyone interested in the operation. He said an open house is being planned for sometime in the spriago.

Just how are fiberglass shower stalls made? It isn't as complicated as one might think, Frye said, but qualify control is important and products are inspected at every step in the process.

The most important tool in the operation are the molds around which the fiberglass products are formed. New ones cost from $1.500 to $2.500. Before production begins, the molds are carefully inspected, cleaned, and repaired, because any imperfections in the surface of the Inspected, cleaned, and repaired, because any imperfections in the surface of the mold will show up in the finished product. Molds are waxed so the final product will separate easily.

The next step is applying the finish. "We do things backwards from most products," Frye said. "We put the finish on first, and build the shower stall around it."

He explained that the colored finish is sprayed on the waxed mold before fiberglass is applied to form the final product. The finish and fiberglass are chemically bonded into an inseparable unit which are removed from the mold, he said. "There is no way to remove the finish from a unit," he said. "You can sand through it or perhaps scratch it, but it is bonded to the finished product."

After the finish has set, a composition of chopped fiberglass strand, resin, and a catalyst are sprayed over the mold. The coating is then rolled and compressed by hand, forcing resin through all the fiberglass particles to form a strong bond. The resin used contains a fire retardant chemical, resulting in a material which is lire proof and meers ouilding codes for all states.

After the first coat of fiberglass is applied, corrugated cardboard is used to reinforce sidewalls, and balsa wood is used for the bottom. The reinforcing materials are sandwiched with another coating of fiberglass. The sandwich construction is strong, yet light, Frye said, and helps cut down on material costs without loss of quality.

After the second layer of fiberglass is applied, products are placed in 90 degree heat for about 90 minutes to cure before removal from the molds.

Removing the finished product is accomptished, by forcing air between the tub or stall and the waxed mold. After removal, edges are trimmed and sanded before going to the inspection room.

Products are inspected during each step of production, but they are scrutinized closely during final inspection and any necessary repairs are made before they are put in the warehouse.

The plant manager said he is pleased with the operation.

"We have nothing but optimistic—thoughts about the operation here," Frye

A century ago Nebraska was a land with few roads, and isolated settlers "stalked across the prairie along the line of least resistance like the buffalo had done for centuries." Townspeople, however, demanded more than trails for their streets and in Lincoln in 1881 a labor tax affecting all able bodied men, age 21 to 50, was passed by the city council obliging them to perform two days labor each year on the streets, provide a substitute, or pay a labor tax, in the early days of Lincoln's history, prisoners — if outfitted with balls and chains — were allowed to work on the streets to earn miney to pay their fines. In spite of these efforts the dirt streets were offen in miserable condition, and irate citizens complained that the capital city's Government Square resembled a swamp and the space in front of the Capital Hotel at 11th and P was like a harbor. The laying of wafer mains, gas pipes, sewers, and streetcar tracks required a great deal of time and money, but, at last, in 1888 and 1889 about eight miles of Eincoln's streets were peved — mostly with red cedar blocks, some with vifirified bricks. Unfortunately, cedar blocks were not durable, and other materials (such as concrete, brick, and asphalt) and combinations/of materials were tried according to records at the Nebraska State Historical Society.

Early in the 20th Century when people realized that wagons and carriages would be replaced by automobites, good roads and the materials necessary to build and mainfain them assumed far greater importance. A material highly recommended by State Geologist Erwin H. Barbour was Nebraska's green quartzite — "a rock of firm texture, great hardness, and enduring quality." In 1913 Barbour submitted a report entitled "Nebraska Green Quartzite: An Important Future Industry." in which he urged "Matthe many acres of native quartzite in Harlan and Franklin counties be utilized for building roads and other purposes. Excepts from his report follow: "In spite of the excellence of our native prairie roads, the time must come wh

Mat the many acres of native quartizite in Harlan and Franklin counties be utilized for building roads and other purposes. Excepts from his report follow: "In spite of the excellence of our native prairie roads, the time must come when large amounts of macadamizing material will be demanded. In the case of the main approaches to our cities and towns, there can be little doubt that conditions should be bettered. Proper draining, grading, and dragging will insure a good average country road, but as traffic increases, these improvements must be of a more permanent nature. "During rainy seasons, and immediately after sudden thaws, the unpaved streets of some of our villages, especially in the more clayey regions, as well as the main highways leading into our larger cities, become sloughs, which are practically impassable for a week or two at a time. This is an intolerable condition and sooner or later must be remedied. Muddy roads stand in restraint of trade and check rural and urban intercourse and traffic . . It is an economic waste for farmers to hauf millions of bushels of grain over muddy roads.

"Years ago, Omaha showed commendable public spirit by macadamizing, and even paving, certain important thorough-fares some fifteen to twenty miles beyond their city limits (Omaha's first road surfacing effort, however, had been with macadam in 1880 on 10th Street from the Union Pacific Depot to Mercy Street.) This stimulated traffic and helped to make Omaha a metropolis. The small town should improve its approaches.

"Nebraska has very little rock suited to road building uses. During the paving season, the demand for crushed rock exceeds the supply and many tons of flint are shipped from Missouri for purposes for which our green quantizite is perfectly, adapted.

retrieved from cobblestone streets and alleys in Lincoln. The Nebraska Stafe Historical Society has displayed quartzite which once paved O Street. Quartzite was also used for retaining walls and buildings elsewhere in the state. In recent years, quartzite produced by quarries in Franklin, Frontier, and Red Willow Countles was used as riprap for facing dams in the Republican river basin, but, according to the Conservation and Survey Division of the University of Nebraska, these eight quarries are now abandoned. In the past Indians fashlomed tools from quartzite, and perhaps, at some date in the future, man will again adapt this native mineral resource for his use.

OBSERVATIONS

A tough decision

The decision by John Vakoc to resign from the Wayne city council was a cause for some regret. While often disagreeing on specific council actions and at times on basic political philosophy, we have always respected the extensive research and careful consideration so apparent in his decisions.

and careful consuctions a specific probability and the control of the control of constituents without full representation in many issues, or risking the possible appearance of using his council seat for personal gain, Vakoc decided to give up the position. It had to be a tough decision to make, but it is probably a wise one.

Vakoc said he will continue to take an interest in city politics, now as a private citizen, and in the future possibly as a candidate again when circumstances permit. That is a good indication the community will continue to benefit by his leadership, and his interest is welcome.

YOU AND YOUR CAR

When purchasing a new car, the energy conscious consumer might consider a manual transmission, says the Automotive Information Council.

A manual transmission operated by an experienced driver can produce up to eight percent better gas mileage than an automatic in city driving. With a manual, shift from low to high as quickly as possible. First gear uses 30 per cent more fuel than a second gear and second uses 15 per cent more than third.

The council offers other suggestions to the driver who wants to get more miles to the gallon of gas.

Learn to use your car more efficiently. If you can, ride a blke, take a bus or walk to school, church or on errands. When you must drive plan multi-stop local trips. Car and van poots are more energy efficient than one car with one driver.

If you can avoid peak traffic periods, do so. If not, try to find surface routes so you don't waste precious gasoline sitting in bumper-to-bumper, stop-and-go traffic.

When you're driving, observe the 55 mph speed limit. For every five miles per hour over 50, there is a loss of one mile to the gallon. Avoid sudden starts and screeching stops. A steady foot on the accelerator improves mileage considerably.

Take care of your car. Regular tuneups can save up to 20 per cent in gasoline on a car that is badly out of tune. Check spark plugs, the carburetor, the air cleaner, the thermostat, and the tires.

While the public can do its part to conserve fuel, the automotive manufacturers are also making a major effort to make cars more energy efficient. Cars are fosing pounds. Lighter materials are being used. The industry is also offering a larger variety of six and four-cylinder engines.

Diesel engines are being tested and

LETTERS' Writer responds to councilwoman

Dear Editor:

i never anticipated I'd be writing another letter to the editor so soon. Having read your letter, counciliumman Filter, it leaves me no alternative. It seems I must set the record straight and let the readers know the facts.

We not only remain living in your ward, but did at the time you, Mrs. Filter, were campaigning for a seat on the council (Ward 2). Mrs. Filter, you were at our door speaking with my husband (I was in the background and heard the conversation). You said you were campaigning and visited with him awhite. My husband said we had not decided for whom we would be voting. He lold you, regardless who was elected, all he would expect of any council person was to use common sense. I, also want to inform you, Mrs. Filter, we exercise our right to vote, so feel we have a right to vote, so feel we have a right to voice our opinions and speak up when we feel there are injustices in the handling of our tax dollars.

right to vote, so feel we have a right to voice our opinions and speak up when we feel there are injustices in the handling of our-lax dollars.

Let's get down to the facts concerning the frash compactor and Mr. Russell's involvement. In our telephone conversation. I never asked you to sign an agreement with Mr. Russell or any one else. I did suggest, if the city council could not give us all the costs the compactor would entail, why expect Mr. Russell to be able to stafe landfill cost, at that time. To my knowledge, even at this date, the public does not know the costs involved in transporting the garbage from the compactor to the dump sight. You were concerned about giving a blank check to Russell, yet if appears a blank check may be given to an out-of-town party. Can't help wondering if the rates will be raised year after year. I, for one, would rather trust Russell with a blank check. After all, he does live here and should have a concern for the people in his town.

still seems incredible a suitable area (we are told it is best to do business at home). Apparently Mr. Russell. could find a site.

Now, I will respond to your statement that it seems I feel Russell is the only council member wanting to hold taxes down. "Actions speak loud and clear." According to the news media, Russell's name has come up many times questioning bills presented to the council on various projects, such as the black-topping of Victor Park, the repairing of the auditorium roof, the wiring project at Providence Medical Center area, to name a few. We haven't seen the name Filter very offeh.

I've been in contact with a number of parties in Ward 2 since reading your letter, none of whom have been contacted, either by knocking at their door or phones ringing, since your campaign.

In closing, I'd like to say I am sorry to hear of councilman Vakoc's resignation. Many of his decisions (not that I always agreed with him) were based on common sense. He will be missed. — Mrs. Willard Blecke.

But the bad set didn't shake Wakefield's confidence as the hosts came back with a 15-6 win. The Trojanettes and the Tijeers of Osmond will divide the crown with each team getting a trophy. Osmond, however, will represent the West half at the playoffs tonight (Monday) at Newcastle by virtue of a win over Wakefield.

Garbage could be a major national resource! Rather than pile up into problems for our cities, it can provide a new source of raw materials. Garbage also can be reclaimed as reusable steel, tin, aluminum, paper, and glass. All but 10 per cent of Milwaukee's remaining bousehold garbage is being reclaimed for these uses.

Garbage is a source of energy. In fact, as a result of American Can Company's Americology system, about 60 per cent of Milwaukee's garbage is being turned into a fuel and used by the local power company to generate electricity.
