Returnable bill supported

What? Pay a five-cent deposit on all beverage containers sold in Nebraska? Won't that result in higher prices for drinks and eliminate some jobs?

The answer to both of those questions is "no." What proposed returnable container legislation will do is focus on eliminating a major litter problem.

An initiative petition drive is now underway to place on the 1978 general election ballot an issue which would require that a five-cent returnable deposit be charged on all beverage containers sold in the state.

The petition drive began last week in Wayne County. The state-wide goal is to obtain 50,000 signatures by the time the Legislature convenes Jan. 14. Wayne County's proportionate share is 312, but response so far has been good and hopefully far more than a minimum number of signatures will be obtained.

Two major plans for litter control have emerged in the United States in recent years. The returnable container idea is called the Oregon Plan because of its state of origin.

Oregon's neighbor in the Northwest initiated the Washington Plan which imposed a tax on gross proceeds of businesses which produce products that contribute to the litter problem.

A Washington type bill, LB 220, was defeated in the Unicameral last year. It would have imposed a tax of .015 of 1 percent, or $150 per $1 million, on gross proceeds of industries which market litter-potential materials.

The $855,000 in estimated annual revenue which would have been produced was earmarked for litter container design research, production of motor vehicle litter bags, litter disposal research, and public education.

Such a tax may seem equitable at first glance, but businesses would have been taxed on gross proceeds, including items which do not produce litter. A restaurant, for example, could have been taxed because some of its carry-out containers end up as litter, but it would also have been taxed on sit-down meals which do not contribute to the litter problem.

The tax would have been passed along as part of the product's price, with the consumer ultimately picking up the tab.

The Washington Plan hasn't proven popular in its state of origin, according to the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality, which said 68 percent of the people in Washington now wish they had an Oregon type litter law.

In contrast, the Oregon DEQ said, 96 percent of the people in Oregon and 90 percent of those in Vermont participate by returning beverage containers on which they have paid a deposit. In Oregon, 88 percent of the beverage cans and bottles formerly disposed of as solid waste are now recycled.

It takes 20 percent less energy to recycle aluminum cans vs. making new ones from virgin material, and it is estimated that returnable legislation in Oregon has resulted in saving enough energy to heat 50,000 homes, according to the Michigan United Conservation Clubs.

The organization estimates similar legislation in its home state could save enough energy to heat 200,000 homes, and that if all 50 states adopted the Oregon Plan the nation could save 125,000 barrels of oil a day.

Oregon DEQ figures show there is little difference in beverage prices in Washington and Oregon. The department also said that in Oregon, 365 jobs with a $1.6 million added payroll were gained following implementation of the returnable law.

In addition to all of the apparent advantages to the Oregon Plan vs. the Washington Plan, there is a difference in their basic philosophy. The Washington Plan takes a general approach at litter control through a penalty — its tax. The Oregon Plan is aimed at controlling a specific and sizeable litter problem, not through a penalty, but through an incentive. That is a refreshing approach for government today, one which voters should consider when making up their minds about the petition drive. — Jim Strayer.

STRAYEr Thoughts

By Jim Strayer

I remember the first time I sat at a typewriter to pound out a STRAYEr Thoughts column. I had just inherited the job of editor at the Albion News and writing a personal column was one of my new responsibilities.

I was pleased with the name I decided on, but wasn't quite sure where to proceed from there. I had never written a column before and it was tough.

This one, however, is tougher than that first one, because it is the last one. By the time many of you see this in print, Kay and I will have moved to Columbus and I will be starting a new job at Platte Technical Community College.

There are countless people I would like to thank for their help and cooperation over the past two and one-half years. I started to make a list, but then I realized that wouldn't work. It usually isn't considered good form to take an entire page in a newspaper for a personal column, and if I listed everyone I should, that's about how much space it would take. So I will simply say "thank you" to everyone who has helped as I've made my rounds gathering news. Without your cooperation, it would have been impossible to do my job.

I would also like to thank everyone for their comments and the letters I've received since announcing my resignation, wishing Kay and me well. Your kind thoughts are much appreciated.

Special thanks go to everyone at the Herald. I've said it before on numerous occasions, but I would like to say it one more time. Putting a paper together is a team effort and I'm glad to have been a member of the team.

I suppose I should think of some really clever way to end this, but I haven't come up with anything. In the letterpress days of newspapers, stories set in galleys of type were separated with a thirty-dash. It is a time-honored tradition that news copy is ended with the numeral thirty, signifying the end of that particular story. The numeral, of course, does not normally appear at the end of the story published in the paper, but perhaps just this once it is appropriate to simply say...
