Council Approves Amended Ordinance for City Parks

After being hassled about for the past three council meetings, an amended ordinance governing the placement of parks in a new subdivisions received council approval Tuesday night.

The ordinance, which provides that a developer set aside a certain amount of land for a recreational area or pay a specified fee, has been contro-versal because of the burden upon the developer and the percentage of land to be set aside.

A compromise Tuesday night put the ordinance onto the books and allows the wheels to once again start turning so developers can begin to work.

Upon recommendation of Mayor Wayne Marsh, the percentage of land to be set aside for recreational use was changed from seven percent to five percent and the amount of money or fee was changed from nine percent to eight percent.

While developers are still grumbling, they are at least in a position, where they can make some plans for the coming construction season.

Back to Drawing Board Sale of Land Puts Kink Into Sewer Plan

It's back to the drawing board as far as a proposal for upgrading the city's sewage lagoon system is concerned.

Dennis Hirschbunner, representative of Bruce Gilmore Associates, city engineer, told the city council Tuesday night that because of certain developments a proposal for city lagoon expansion and land application has to be ditched and a new study made.

The council agreed to the supplemental study which will cost about $9,000, with the city picking up about $1,237.50 of the tab and the state and the Environmental Protection Agency the remaining amount.

Hirschbunner said the proposal which has been discussed with the council and which calls for expansion of the lagoon system and land application of the water, is no longer feasible since land which had been selected for application has been sold.

LET'S TALK IT OVER

With DAREL FUELBERTH

Usually, when we list a piece of property for sale, we expect to advertise it. Sellers feel that something is being done to find a buyer, so they are pleased. Actually, according to surveys, only about five percent of home buyers buy the house they saw advertised.

This is where our expertise as a broker will benefit you. We interview each prospect we meet and learn what he really wants and needs in the way of housing. We determine what he can afford to pay. Then, we match his needs with available property for sale and he finds and buys a house that exactly fills his needs. It may be yours, if you listed your house with us.

It pays to have the benefit of our experience and "know how" if you're even thinking of a real estate transaction. It costs you nothing to "TALK IT OVER" with us.

Kunzmann Pro Dream Now Happy Reality

Many high school and college basketball players dream of one day becoming a professional but an elite few ever attain that goal. For Connie Kunzmann, former Wayne State Wildkitten, that dream probably seemed all but impossible until April of 1978.

Kunzmann graduated from WSC in that month and only one month earlier, the Women's Professional Basketball League was being formed. Shortly after graduation, the Wayne State star signed with the Iowa Cornets, the first team franchise in the WBL.

The Cornets play a 34 game schedule in the eight team league. Iowa, Minnesota, Chicago and Milwaukee make up the Midwest Division and the Eastern Division consists of New York, New Jersey, Houston and Dayton.

For Kunzmann, it wasn't an easy road, but now she's on her way to the league leading Cornets, averaging 14 points and 11 rebounds in each of the last seven games.

She has played in 22 games and is shooting 61.8 percent from the field for a season average of 8.2 points and 6.4 rebounds per game. She has also blocked eight shots, accounted for 11 assists and made 28 steals.

Houston leads the Eastern Division and the two teams could very well meet in April playoffs for the WBL title.

The WBL follows NBA rules, using a 24 second clock, 12 minute quarters and bonus situations. The basketball is one inch smaller than a regular men's ball, for easier handling. The league has three expansion teams for next year and hopes to expand to 12-16 teams.

For Kunzmann and the rest of the Cornets, basketball is a job "For all but one of us, basket ball is our only job," Kunzmann said. "We don't have time to even hold a part-time job with practices, games, travel, meetings and promotions. We keep pretty busy."

The members of Iowa's team represent various parts of the United States. They reign from Iowa, South Dakota, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Missouri, Michigan, Texas, Ohio and California. Kunzmann is an Everly, Ia. native.

All of the Cornets live in apartments in Des Moines and Ankeny. Their headquarters are in Ankeny while practices are scheduled in Des Moines and home games played all across the state. They play Dayton, Sunday, April 1 in the Sioux City Auditorium.

Kunzmann said that Iowa has been erratic this season. "We have had our ups and downs. We've played overtime games and yet beat teams by 44 and 50 points. We even lost one game by protest."

Iowa's team received its name

CONNIE KUNZMANN

"Cornets" from a combination of terms "corn" and "nets" — appropriate for an Iowa basketball team. The team travels by jet to most away games but uses its own bus to travel to games in Minnesota, Iowa, Milwaukee and Chicago.

Kunzmann credits much of the team's success to owner George Nissen of Nissen Manufacturing Company and head coach Dan Mullen from Saydel, Ia., who took over when first coach George Nicodemus was fired in early December.

The Cornets are featured in the movie, "Dribble" which recently premiered in Iowa. Iowa was scheduled to be on the road during most of March, flying to New York, Milwaukee, Houston, Des Moines and traveling by bus to Minnesota in a nine-day stretch.

Playoffs are set for April 10, 12 and 14 with championships beginning April 17.

Harsh Winter Was Hazardous To Nebraska Farm Pond Fish

Fish populations in many Nebraska farm ponds may have been wiped out or damaged by the severe winter, and their owners should check for fish kills as soon as the ice melts, according to the Game and Parks Commission.

Bob Thomas, chief of the Commission's Fisheries Division, noted that owners of winter killed ponds will probably want to make arrangements for restocking. But first, they must know if their pond has had winter kill, and if so, to what extent. The best time to check is right now after ice out.

Thomas recommended that pond owners note the species and sizes of fish killed, and try to make rough estimates of the numbers involved. They should then contact fisheries biologists at Commission district offices in Lincoln, Norfolk, Bassett, Alliance or North Platte.

Thomas also suggested that pond owners take some pictures — a few at fairly close range so that size and species can be determined, and a shot or two from a distance to show concentrations of fish. The pictures should help biologists assess damage to the pond, but the film should be processed immediately to avoid unnecessary delay.

Thomas notes that the past winter was the kind that is especially hard on farm ponds. The long duration of ice cover and the long time that snow covered the ice robbed the water of its oxygen, particularly in the smaller ponds, he said.

LAKE MCCONAUGHY
A fish kill at Lake McConaughy has been verified by Game and Parks Commission biologists in North Platte, but the extent of the kill has not yet been determined.

According to Monte Madsen, fish management supervisor for southwest Nebraska, dead carp and striped bass began showing up in the Otter Creek area of Lake McConaughy on February 25. Open water in that part of the lake held about 45 dead stripers and 100 dead carp. Madsen said that the dead fish showed symptoms produced by a bacterial disease called Aeromonas.

Specimens have been sent to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Services Fish Disease Control Center in Fort Morgan for verification of the diagnosis. According to Madsen, Aeromonas is the same bacterium that caused the white bass and carp die off over the winter of 1972-73.

Aeromonas is an ever present bacteria in the air, soil and water, but infects fish only when they are under stress," Madsen said. According to Madsen such stress can be brought on during winter months when long periods of thick ice and heavy snow covers a lake and adversely affects water quality.

"We are hoping that the die off is restricted to a small isolated area of the lake, but we won't know how extensive the fish kill is until the ice goes off. Until then we will be sampling fish in open water areas to determine their condition. Fishermen should not worry about eating fish that they catch in the lake as Aeromonas does not affect the palatability of the fish," Madsen said.

Are you working too hard for too little?

Being an independent housing contractor can be very rewarding... especially if you have a proven line of homes behind you.

We offer 60 standard catalog homes, plus we sell hundreds of custom designs annually in 18 states. We sell only through a network of local builders who are independent contractors. A dealership is not a franchise and no fees are required.

Midwestern Homes has sold pre-engineered homes of the finest quality materials since 1952. They enjoy better-than-average resale because of the design and quality.

Our headquarters and original factories are in Rapid City, SD. With the 1978 opening of a large factory in Pittsburg, KS, we now have available the opportunity for qualified builder-dealers in additional areas. This is one.

ALUMINUM NAILS: A BIG HIT

The building of a patio can provide much cherished convenience for the homeowner and certainly can add many years of basic beauty to a house, regardless of style.

And if the homeowner handles the work with care and uses the proper accessories like aluminum nails, a patio will not only be enhanced, but will prove a good investment: because home repairs with aluminum nails last longer, so a home looks nicer longer.

Aluminum nails don't rust. This means protection against staining and loosening in all kinds of weather.

Since aluminum nails don't rust, they don't streak. So there's no need for frequent paint touch-ups, as steel nails might require.

Use plain aluminum nails if you prefer, and paint right over them as you finish your project. But, you can also select from a variety of pre-painted nails that color coordinate with your home.

Many people have been using a cost-per-pound guideline for pricing aluminum nails. This is because they probably don't realize aluminum is so much lighter than steel.

You can get about three times as many nails to the pound if you're using aluminum, rather than steel. So budget yourself by the number of nails you need... not the weight.

Aluminum nails can be used efficiently and effectively on all exterior jobs you might find in your home, according to the Aluminum Association.

These include work on wood or asbestos siding and shingles, aluminum siding and trim, plastic panels, roofing, gutters, downspouts, and fencing.

Aluminum nails come in a great variety of sizes, ranging from 5/8" trailer nails to 7" gutter spikes. They have flat, finishing, casing, sinker, and oval head shapes.

Roofing and panel nails also come with diamond-embossed and stucco-embossed heads. They also have plain, spiral, screw thread, file grip, ring grips, square-barbed and combination thread shanks for greater holding power.

So if you're considering a patio or porch to enhance your home - consider aluminum nails.

term agreement. But, he said, the plan is feasible and workable.

In fact, City Administrator Darrell Brewington, told council members, he had scheduled a meeting Wednesday with a farmer who was interested in what the city had to offer.

Hirschbunner said the city would be financially better off if it could work out some sort of land application plan. "The EPA had agreed to pick up ten percent more of the cost of the project which would mean they would be paying for 92 percent."

He said if the land application plan did not come about, the city would have to consider a mechanical plant. The land application study is expected to take from two to three months to complete. The city has been warned since 1977 that it must meet revised EPA standards.

Authorities Probe Burglaries Monday

The Wayne county sheriff's office is investigating burglaries which occurred early Monday morning in Winside and Hoskins.

According to officials, windows were broken at Miller's

Campus Course

A "Teaching Language Arts" course, offered through the Wayne State College (WSC) Extended Campus Division, will be held in April and May at the J and R Ranch Motel in South Sioux City.

The course, worth three senior-graduate credits through WSC, will focus on the trends in teaching reading, writing, spelling, listening and speaking in harmony with valid concepts of child growth and development.

Registration deadline is April 13. For information or registration phone the WSC Extended Campus Division at 375-2200.

GW Market and Charlie's Bar in Winside and Wally's Bar and Grill in Hoskins to gain entrance.

Deputies said a cash register was forced open with a sharpening steel and butcher's knife at the market. However, there was no money in the cash register and apparently nothing else was taken.

Authorities said four liquor bottles, some beer, cigarettes six nickel rolls, eight dime rolls and more than one roll of quarters were taken at the Winside bar.

They said some food was taken at the Hoskins bar, but nothing else was reported missing.

Authorities said the break-ins happened after 2 a.m. Monday.

Parks

John Vakoc of Vakoc Construction Company, has been opposed to the ordinance but conceded to the compromise with a "let's get on with it" attitude. He explained a proposed development by his firm has been held up for about one year because of the ordinance. There is still some work to be done on the ordinance as it reads "any subdivision." Councilman Darrell Fuelberth, who voted against the adoption of the ordinance, pointed out to the council that an industrial park could be considered a subdivision and would fall under the provisions of the ordinance.

City Attorney Ken Swartz suggested the council go ahead and pass the amended ordinance and then discuss how they want to treat industrial subdivisions so the ordinance could be re-written to comply with their wishes.

Crossbred Sows Better Producers Than Purebred

It is short-sighted for swine producers to single out sow productivity — the number of pigs conceived, farrowed alive and successfully weaned — in strictly genetic terms, a Nebraska swine expert told those attending the National Pork Congress in Indianapolis Thursday, March 8.

Dr. William T. Ahlswede, extension swine specialist in the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources, University of Nebraska-Lincoln, noted that "the current intense interest in sow productivity" is in and of itself, "seems to be unwarranted." Sow productivity is important, but must be viewed in the context of the total production system. He rejected impressions emanating from publications and dialogue in swine circles that there is little but genetics involved in sow productivity. "Unfortunately, that is not so. But if it were, improving sow productivity would be a cup of tea," Ahlswede maintained.

He called on producers to view sow productivity "from a systems or enterprise profit point of view." He reminded that sows "contribute equally with the boar to the genotype of the offspring for growth, feed efficiency and carcass value."

Overall, Ahlswede said, the greatest potential in improving sow productivity genetically is through heterosis (crossbreeding) and choice of breeds with documented superior attributes in various areas.

"Crossbred sows have higher conception rates, farrow more pigs and wean more pigs than purebred sows," Ahlswede said flatly. In addition, crossbred pigs are more vigorous and more likely to survive than purebred pigs and get to market sooner, he continued, citing results of an Oklahoma State University crossbreeding study involving Duroc, Hampshire and Yorkshire breeds.

Under conditions like those experienced in the fall of 1978, heterosis can mean at least $100 profit per litter, Ahlswede said. The value of paternal heterosis — possible improvement in sow productivity from breeding a sow to a crossbred boar — is not well known, he stated.

Breed differences are known for pig gain, carcass value and feed efficiency, Ahlswede pointed out, and the wide range of breeds, public and private, which are available means producers can make a good choice to achieve the best overall performance.

The Oklahoma State study showed advantages in pig and sow performance by crossbreds over purebred pigs produced by purebred sows in litter size at birth and 21 days of age, three week weight and the number of days required to reach 220 pounds.

It is clear that producers need to choose a crossbreeding system that fits their management systems, maintains high levels of heterosis and uses breeds to advantage, Ahlswede conceded, but he noted "(this is) easily said, not so easily done."

"Like 'big' and 'fast' in football players, these things don't always come together."

He outlined advantages and disadvantages of rotational crossing schemes and terminal or static crosses in terms of producers' systems for farrowing (seasonally or continuous) and adding replacement gilts.

In summary, he said controlling breed composition and maintaining high levels of heterosis "will take advantage of most of the genetic aspects of sow productivity available to us." But he warned that poor choices among candidates for replacements in the sow herd can reduce sow productivity.

Commercial producers rely upon the seed stock industry to continue to improve genetically those traits which produce the most profits, Ahlswede said, but they also must select replacements wisely if they want to realize maximum sow productivity and profit.

If U.S. Beef Supply Declines Substitutes May Be Predicted

To prevent a future reduction in the demand for beef by consumers, producers should be aware of the current beef marketing situation, according to Dr. Al Wellman, Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources extension agricultural economist.

Based on the current demand situation, a significant decline in beef supply (which is likely to appear), could cause future marketing problems for producers, the University of Nebraska-Lincoln staff member said. A decline could lead to the introduction of beef substitutes and extenders which might alter consumer tastes, he noted.

Consumer demand for beef may not increase with a future increase in beef production, Wellman said, since the demand is lost to a substitute product.

"These substitutes and extenders have the capability of destroying some of the hard earned market share which the cattle producers have developed over the past quarter century," the specialist said.

Producers can defend their position through support of the beef check-off and other beef-oriented programs, which would provide the monies necessary for solving marketing problems when beef supplies again increase, Wellman said.

"Consumer understanding of the current beef industry situation will be hard to come by and may be impossible," he noted. "The consumer does not want to take into consideration the biological characteristics of the cow and other facts and facets of the cattle industry."

"The time, energy and money spent by the cattle industry in the next few years on cattle and beef marketing problems could be a most important factor in educating and informing the consumer about the situation in the cattle industry."

"Attempts to maintain the preference for beef, for the present and in the future, should be an important concern for the cattle producer," Wellman said.

The beef industry has a responsibility to try to produce enough beef to satisfy the demand for beef, which it has developed during the past 25 years, he said.

"When market conditions turn favorable, as during the past few months, those in the cattle industry tend to forget all about their marketing responsibilities and opportunities," Wellman noted. "At the very time live-stock producers are in a position to do something about marketing, they are least inclined to act."

To keep consumers eating beef, the industry might consider promoting increased beef imports, he noted, adding that use of imports to expand the supply of beef could, at least, maintain consumers' preference for beef.

He noted that the amount of foreign beef available for importation is limited, however.

"Some steps have already been taken to ease restrictions on beef imports, but there probably is not enough meat any where in the world to avoid the impending beef price rise."

"Even if imports are increased, consumers are going to see higher prices at the meat counter," he said.

"Having never before experienced such a huge gain in the consumption in so short a time, there is little basis for judging how much consumers will bid up price rather than reduce beef consumption. I doubt that we will ever find out because consumers in their frustrations over price may force government intervention in the market place," he said.

As beef consumption has increased, a larger proportion has been consumed in ground form, the specialist noted. Forty to 50 percent of all beef is ground, and two thirds of that ends up as hamburger, he said.

"Normally when beef prices rise, consumers can shift to substitute items and less expensive cuts such as hamburger," Wellman said, adding that a recent survey reports that 45-50 percent of beef consumed in the home is in ground form.

"I am sure the beef producer realizes that the coming squeeze is on hamburger," he said.

The cow needed to rebuild the herd is the main domestic source of hamburger meat, Wellman said, noting that beef supplies currently are being withheld from the market to rebuild breeding herds. The dairy herd, another source of hamburger, is only half the size it was 25-30 years ago, the specialist noted.

INSECT CONTROL GUIDE

An Insect Control Guide for Corn and Sorghum has been prepared by University of Nebraska Extension Entomologists and is available free from the Wayne County Extension Office by asking for EC 79-1509.

Insect control suggestions in this guide are based on University of Nebraska research, USDA recommendations, and label registrations. The suggestions are designed to benefit Nebraska farmers when they need control programs.

The guide includes control measures and application dates and rates of insecticides for use against corn rootworm larvae, cutworm, wireworms, and seed-eating insects, sod web worms, spider mites, and army worms. It also includes information on control of sorghum insects such as corn earworm, fall armyworms, greenbugs, and corn leaf aphids.

PLANT PROTECTION ACT

Seed of new crop varieties can be protected by law similar to legal protection of inventions under patent laws. Farmers and others selling seed are often not aware of this, and they may violate state and federal seed laws.

The Plant Variety Act gives the developer of a new variety ownership rights. This makes it easier for companies engaged in plant breeding to recover their investment. Producers of good varieties can keep others from using them without paying a royalty.

Under the Plant Variety Protection Act, new crop varieties can also be protected through seed certification. In this case, a label is attached to certified seed bags which says, "for sale by variety name only as a class of certified seed."

This just means it is unlawful to sell by variety name non-certified seed of a protected variety. Let's take an example. A farmer buys certified Stout oats (a protected variety) from which he produces a crop. He can increase the Stout oats for his own use. It would be unlawful for that farmer to advertise and sell that Stout oats by variety name, however, because it is no longer certified seed. Protection applies only to seed uses, not to feed or other uses.

A complete list of protected varieties of spring wheat, winter wheat, spring barley, oats, and soybeans is included in the 1978 Certified Seed Directory, available from the Wayne County Extension Office. Some protected oat varieties are Stout and Wright.

TGE

This is the season of the year when TGE is most commonly seen in pigs. Swine producers should be aware of some of the ways you can avoid infecting your sow herds with TGE virus which will cause heavy death losses in baby pigs.

1. Many TGE outbreaks can be traced to the recent purchase of feeder pigs. It has recently been found that TGE virus can be carried by feeder pigs for as long as 104 days after they have recovered from the infection.

2. TGE is very contagious. Pork producers should adopt the two-box system — one pair to wear at home when doing chores with the swine herd.

3. Restrict all visitors from contact with the pigs and sows for three weeks before farrowing begins and until weaning time.

50,000 Nebraskans Raising Brooders

For many years, the "cheep-cheep" of baby chicks shipped in to maintain Nebraska farm flocks was a familiar sound in post offices in early spring. Specialization has resulted in a few large egg producers and no commercial broiler industry per se in Nebraska, with many farms having no chickens at all.

Nonetheless, an estimated 50,000 Nebraskans still raise broilers in Nebraska, according to Dr. Earl Gleaves, Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources extension poultryman.

Some producers are "old hands," and others are just "getting into the game" of producing broilers. Especially for newcomers, Gleaves has come advice on raising broilers.

Commercial hybrid strains of poultry that have been specifically selected and bred to produce meat are the best broilers to use as broilers, he advised.

Such breeds are available — along with the older, standard breeds — at most hatcheries, the University of Nebraska-Lincoln staff member said.

In deciding upon how many birds to raise, producers should determine how many broilers they need for their own freezers and how many they plan to sell.

They must also consider the amount of money and effort they wish to invest and the amount of room available in their brooder houses, Gleaves said.

Gleaves recommended a minimum of one square foot of floor space per bird, adding that birds generally will do better if they have two square feet of floor space each. A 10-foot square brooder house will accommodate 50-100 birds efficiently under this formula.

Producers should allow one linear inch of water space and three linear inches of feeder space per bird, the specialist noted.

Broilers will grow faster and consume less feed if they are kept inside the brooder house — if it is dry and clean — at all times, Gleaves said, adding that housing requirements are about the same for birds that are confined and for those that are let out occasionally.

Gleaves recommended a properly blended and well-balanced broiler ration as the cheapest diet available for broilers. Buying a commercial feed might be necessary in order to feed a properly balanced ration, Gleaves said, noting that the producer with the proper equipment and a market available where he can buy the necessary vitamins, minerals and additives, could mix his own feed.

Producers are sometimes tempted to use ground grain as feed for broilers because it is usually available on the farmstead, but this practice — along with the practice of using a general chick starter — should be avoided, Gleaves said.

An NPPD transmission line crosses Roger Paulman's property southeast of the Gerald Gentleman Station. Here's what he has to say about it:

"We know we have to have more electrical power and we know the power lines must go somewhere...we use a lot of electricity ourselves. The NPPD people have gotten along with us and we've had few problems. Moneywise, they treated us right, and the transmission line avoided our center pivots. We're getting along with NPPD."

For Roger Paulman, Jr. and many Nebraska landowners, an NPPD transmission line on their property is a symbol of cooperation that recognizes the increasing demand for electricity.

1 cup boiling Water
1 pint Pistachio Nut Ice Cream, softened
1 cup crushed Pineapple, less 1 tablespoon

Hints

Cakes and Frosting

1. When creaming butter and sugar for a cake, a little hot milk added will aid the creaming process.

2. For a fine textured cake, add 2 tablespoons boiling water or 1 teaspoon lemon juice to the butter and sugar mixture.

3. Cracks and uneven surfaces may be caused by too much flour, too hot an oven and sometimes from a cold oven start.

4. Cake that is dry may be caused by too much flour, too little shortening, too much baking powder, or baking at too low a temperature.

5. A heavy cake means too much sugar has been used or the cake has been baked too short a period.

6. A sticky crust is caused by too much sugar.

7. A coarse grained cake may be caused by too little mixing, too much fat, too much baking powder, using too soft of fat and baking at too low a temperature.

8. Cakes may fall because of insufficient flour; under baking; too much sugar; too much fat; or not enough baking powder.

9. Uneven browning may be caused by baking cakes at too high a temperature; crowding the oven rack (allow at least 2 inches around pans); or using dark pans (use bright finish, smooth-bottomed pans).

10. If cake has uneven color, it is caused from not mixing well. Mix thoroughly, but do not over mix.

11. Two tablespoons of cream added to boiled icing just before spreading it on the cake will prevent it from cracking and falling off when cake is cut.
