Tougher Food Stamp Rules Proposed by USDA

People applying for food stamps could be asked to provide more proof of information in their applications under a rule proposed recently by the Department of Agriculture.

Currently, all persons applying for food stamps must document their income, social security number and certain medical and utility expenses. Persons who are not U.S. citizens must prove that they are legal aliens who have been admitted to this country for permanent residence.

States also are permitted to require all applicants to provide proof of their liquid assets. In addition, states must require proof of a number of other eligibility factors, such as rent or household composition, whenever the information provided by an applicant is questionable.

The proposed rule would give states authority to conduct additional verification by allowing states to require proof from every applicant of all shelter expenses, all child care expenses and household size. The proposed rule would allow states to require documentation of these factors, whether or not the information supplied by the applicant appeared questionable.

In addition, the regulation would put into effect a provision of food stamp legislation enacted in May, 1980, that allows states to develop a profile of the type of food stamp cases and eligibility factors that are most subject to error. States would then be able to require verification of all information in food stamp cases that fit into these categories shown to be "error prone."

"The error-prone profile can be an important management tool," Assistant Secretary Carol Tucker Foreman said. "States should be able to use it to target their certification efforts toward the information and cases most likely to cause errors. This can help to promote administrative efficiency while reducing errors at the same time."

Other changes in the new regulations would expand the authority of states to conduct home visits, to contact persons who may have information about applicants, and to require verification of household identity and residency in every case. The changes would also permit more verification of information provided by destitute households seeking emergency food stamps.

The proposed rule is the latest in a series of Departmental and Congressional efforts to tighten food stamp management. Starting June 1, the Department required states to obtain social security numbers from applicants to facilitate cross checks of information about applicants. Other rules put into effect at that time required persons disqualified for food stamp fraud to arrange to pay back the value of the stamps they had received before being allowed to rejoin the program. These changes were authorized by Congress last summer.

While the new proposal should help reduce food stamp errors, Assistant Secretary Foreman expressed concern that the rules could have limited impact in those states that lack the staff to conduct sufficient verification.

"We are worried that some states do not have enough staff to check out information on food stamp applications with sufficient thoroughness," she said. "No matter what the verification rules are, the job cannot be done properly if states are short on staff."

Women's League Heads Drive to Boost Senate Salaries

CAPITOL NEWS
By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association

Nebraska's state senators receive $400 per month in salary, and have not had a raise since 1968.

Voters have had plenty of opportunities to boost the salary. Seven times since 1968 citizens have refused, most times by rather lopsided margins, proposed constitutional amendments that would have provided improved remuneration for the legislators.

In this spring's primary election voters rejected an amendment that would have created an advisory board to recommend salaries for the state senators and for some other elected officials.

Earlier this summer, Sen. Don Wesely of Lincoln invited the Nebraska League of Women Voters to head a petition drive to increase senatorial salaries.

The league's board now has voted to take the lead in formation of a coalition to work for that objective.

The campaign will aim to place the issue on the 1982 general election ballot.

Wesely was elated at the league's decision to become involved. He said it seemed that no matter what type of salary increase proposal the Legislature might place on the ballot, the voters would refuse to endorse it.

Just how many organizations will participate in the campaign is not known at this time. But Ann Wilson, legislative chairperson for the league, said a pledge of support has been received from DiAnna Schimek, state Democratic party chairman, Martha Richardson of the Junior League, and Ilga Dambro, chairman of Common Cause.

Mrs. Wilson said other organizations and groups will be asked to join in the effort and that the amount of the proposed salary increase will be decided by the coalition groups. She wants to have the coalition's first meeting within the next three to four weeks.

Placement of a proposed constitutional amendment on the ballot requires the gathering of more than 49,000 valid signatures from a minimum of 38 counties.

Governor asks review

Gov. Charles Thone has requested state agencies to examine their procedures for safeguarding state property.

The staff of state Auditor Ray A.C. Johnson has noted problems in some state agencies in inventory control. Among agencies mentioned in reports from the auditor's staff were the Department of Public Institutions, the Game and Parks Commission, the Department of Correctional Services, the Legislature and the Educational Television Commission.

Auditors said they had not found any major identifiable losses but concluded procedures for control of inventory offered no guarantee property is not being lost or stolen.

In a memo to all the state agencies, Thone said he was concerned and noted that materials and supplies bought with government funds "belong, in effect, to the citizens of Nebraska."

He added agency directors are responsible for the safekeeping of the materials and supplies.

"I strongly encourage each of you to undertake an immediate review of your agency's internal procedures to insure that all reasonable safeguards are being implemented," Thone said in his memo. He added: "If problems are identified, I would expect you to take the necessary corrective actions."

The Department of Administrative Services has a uniform computerized inventory system but agencies are not required by law to convert to the system. The governor urged them to do so and said agencies under his direct control will be expected to make the transition.

Lubeck Denied Rehearing

The Nebraska Accountability and Disclosure Commission has voted 6-0 against giving attorneys for Ralph Lubeck a rehearing on a commission order that Lubeck be criminally prosecuted.

Two commission members were absent when the vote was taken and another member abstained because she was not present at a hearing for Lubeck in July.

Lubeck serves as an elected Nebraska Public Power District director and is an appointed member of the state, Board of Educational Lands and Funds.

An investigation last spring showed he apparently billed both agencies for some of the same travel expenses in 1979.

On July 22 of this year, the commission found Lubeck had apparently double-billed the two agencies on several occasions and directed that he be prosecuted under the law.

On July 30, one of Lubeck's attorneys — Steven Seglin — said it was not appropriate to prosecute because there was no evidence indicating real criminal intent.

Among other allegations by the attorney was that the commission decision violated constitutional provisions and exceeded the commission's authority or jurisdiction.

The commission's general counsel, Bernard Wisnow, said Lubeck's attorneys have filed an appeal of the decision in Lancaster County District Court in Lincoln.

Special Session Talk

Sen. Dave Newell of Omaha has suggested a special legislative session should be called to eliminate the state treasury surplus.

He has written Gov. Thone a letter in which he said if the surplus were used, that would certainly lessen the run on the surplus dollars in the state treasury during the next regular session of the Nebraska Unicameral.

According to Newell, many special interest groups are "eyeballing" the surplus "longing with spending proposals."

What the Omaha legislator would like to do is create a $20 million state fund from which each incorporated municipality would receive an annual share.

That share would be based on the proportion of each municipality's population to the population of all municipalities in the state.

Newell said the fund would replace the city sales tax on food and also provide property tax relief.

Announces Settlement

Attorney General Paul Douglas has announced receipt of $55,000 in settlement of an action the state Justice Department's Antitrust Division brought against Levi Strauss & Co. of California.

Douglas said $50,000 will be distributed to Nebraska consumers who bought Levi Strauss Jeanswear products in 1974 and 1975. The other $5,000 will be used to defray expenses of the investigation and prosecution.

Levi Strauss was accused of fixing and establishing the retail prices of jeanswear and other Levi brand clothing sold in Nebraska retail outlets.

The company denied any Nebraska laws were violated but agreed to pay the $55,000 and also agreed to allow Douglas access to its records for two years, the attorney general said.

Late in September claim forms will be available in all county courthouses in the state and in his office, Douglas said. Only individuals — not businesses — will be eligible for any money from the settlement.

WAY BACK WHEN

30 years ago
August 31, 1950: Gordon Francis, Coronado, Calif., son of Mr. and Mrs. G.C. Francis of Winside, has been named editor of the Coronado Journal Compass. Cement footings will be completed by the end of this week on new grain storage bins for corn crops of the 1948 and 1949 seasons. The bins, operated by the Local Production Marketing Association, will be constructed near the Gus Koll farm, one-half mile south of Wayne. After months of work, planning and preparations, Wakefield Community Hospital is finally moved into the new building. On Thursday, Aug. 24, the actual moving took place. Patients, four that day, were moved by ambulance. A group of men, farmers and townspeople used their pickups and trucks to move the equipment.

25 years ago
September 1, 1955: Between 950 and 1,000 students is the enrollment prediction for WSTC when the regular fall session gets underway Monday. This was the forecast this week of Dean of Students Milton J. Hassel. Two Wakefield 4-H members, Ivalyn Johnson and Jeannette Anderson, were presented National Lutheran God Home Country Awards at services Sunday morning at Salem Lutheran Church. Wayne gunners will have an opportunity to sharpen their shooting eye Monday when Wayne's Izak Walton will hold their first trapshoot of the season at Wayne Airport. Plans for construction of a National Guard Armory at Wayne were revealed to the city council at a meeting Tuesday night by Guard Commander Kenneth Whorlow. He told the council the project has been approved by the Defense Reserve Facilities Board and can get underway as soon as a tract of land in the city is made available for construction.

20 years ago
September 1, 1960: Roger Lee Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Johnson, Wakefield, had the grand champion fat steer at the Dixon County Fair. Inability to restrain himself from kissing a glamorous movie star earned a watch for a Wayne youth Wednesday in California. Glen Houdersheldt, Wayne, told Emcee Bob Barker there should be more television shows like "Truth or Consequences." Houdersheldt appeared on yesterday's telecast and was awarded a watch for kissing guest Diana Dors three times.

Leland Herman, Wayne, is the Volunteer Beerman for Congress Committee Chairman in Wayne County. Herman will direct the county campaign for Ralph F. Beerman, Dakota City, Republican candidate for Third District Congressman. Nebraskans will have a chance to see a couple of fancy sky shows during September. The earth and moon will cast shadows on each other making a lunar eclipse Monday and a solar eclipse Sept. 20.

August 26, 1965: Second Lt. Larry Cada, Clarkson, has been graduated from Kessler AFB, Miss., as a communications officer. He is being assigned to Tinker AFB, Okla. Cada graduated from Clarkson High School and was commissioned in 1964. Dr. Donald E. Guinourd, counseling psychologist at Montana State College and a Peace Corp training officer, will address Wayne State faculty members at their opening meeting Sept. 2. A Wayne Newcomers Club is to be organized. All women who have moved to Wayne in the last few months or who will move to Wayne soon are welcome to join. Idea of the club is to help the women get acquainted in a town where most of them will be among complete strangers.

10 years ago
August 27, 1970: "I Just Love Baseball." That's the response you get from Henry Weseloh of Wayne when you ask him what he thinks of the sport. For that reason — plus serving as ticket taker for 20 years — the Wayne Baseball Association Saturday night presented Henry with a plaque. The Laurel High School band was one of 57 marching bands taking part in the annual Shrine bowl parade and football game last Saturday. Carl Scheel, Wayne, has been hired by the City of Wakefield as Chief of Police. He replaces Eugene Church, who moved to Oakland. Roger Lueders, Wausa, has received a Master of Fine Arts in music education from the University of Northern Colorado at Greeley. He is a 1966 graduate of Wayne State College.

Inflation Worst Threat To Nebraskans: Thone

"Many problems are facing our state and nation, but inflation remains as the greatest domestic threat to Nebraska and America."

"After some months when the cost of living rose at an annual national rate of about 18 percent, the Administration economists are now telling us that inflation can be held to 10 percent in the coming year."

"It was only a few years ago that we were worrying about inflation rates of 2-3 percent. Because of compounding, a 10 percent rate of inflation is more vicious than it would appear on the surface. With a constant 10 percent rate of inflation, an item that now costs $1 would cost $2 after 7 years and $3 and 3 months and would cost $59 in 10 years!"

"The federal government is the chief cause of the problem. Federal deficit spending is the greatest single factor in causing inflation. Then, to rub salt in taxpayers' wounds, the federal government takes greater bites from wage earners' raises brought on by inflation."

"When a typical wage earner gets a raise, he doesn't just contribute the same percentage of a larger paycheck to the feds. Most often, he or she is thrown into a different tax bracket where Uncle Sam takes a higher percentage of taxes from all of that person's earnings."

"The result is that there's presently no way for the typical taxpayer to keep up with inflation. Let's look at what happened to a typical middle class family since last year. If a family of four with one wage earner made $19,500 in 1979 and got a 9 1/2 percent increase, that family would have $21,275 in gross income in 1980."

"But typically, federal, state and local taxes, including Social Security, would have increased from $3,791 in 1979 to $4,308 in 1980. Even with a $1,258 net take-home increase in earnings in 1980, the total earnings would buy 5.1 percent less goods and services than the lower 1979 income."

"Along with throwing taxpayers into tax brackets where the federal government takes higher and higher percentages of the total government, the feds are also raising Social Security taxes each year. Whereas $1,587.67 is the most any employee pays in 1980, the maximum will be $1,975.05 next year."

"Meanwhile, the federal government will probably have a $60 billion deficit for the fiscal year that ends September 30. The next fiscal year was earlier touted by the Administration as the year of the balanced budget, but now it looks as though there'll be at least an $80 billion deficit, bringing our national debt close to a trillion dollars — or a thousand billion dollars!"

"Only through a massive cutback in federal spending can America escape from the spiraling inflation whose chief cause is the federal government's reckless red-ink spending."

A Letter From
Gov. Charley Thone

April 21, 1980

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank The Wayne Herald for the articles and support they gave me when I was trying to earn my way to Europe.

It really made me feel good to know my community was backing me up — the Women's Club, the Chamber of Commerce, KTCH, Wayne High, friends and relatives.

I feel our tour was a success as America's youth in concert was an organized and talented group which got a very good response throughout Europe. I again would like to thank The Wayne Herald and KTCH for the coverage — without it I would never have made it.

OUT OF OLD NEBRASKA

by the
Nebraska State Historical Society

Nebraska Labor Day — 1889

Researchers of the Federal Writers' Project, working in the Nebraska State Historical Society collections in the 1930's, produced the following article about the origins of Labor Day in Nebraska:

"In 1889 the State legislature of Nebraska passed an act providing that the first Monday in September should be known as 'Labor Day,' and should be deemed a holiday in like manner and to the same extent as the legal holidays already provided for, the act to become effective June 1, 1889.

Several cities in Nebraska celebrated the day on Sept. 2 with parades and speeches. The largest celebration was in Omaha. Omaha held a gigantic parade, the first division of which included the marshal of the day and aides, Omaha Guards' band, chief orator ex-Senator Charles Van Wyck, labor union and press representatives, 92 members of the Central Labor Union, 150 bricklayers wearing aprons, 100 plasterers, 120 members of the Typographical Union carrying banners of Omaha dailies.

"Second division: Paritarch Militant band, 250 carpenters with a float depicting the practical side of their work, a special brigade of German carpenters, iron machinists, plumbers and gas fitters, 300 painters and a group of blacksmiths.

"Third division: Swedish corner band, 800 Knights of Labor with the banners, 8 hours for work, 8 hours for recreation and education, 8 hours for rest; and 'An injury to one is the concern of all.' Van Wyck spoke on the concern for labor. His speech was followed by baseball and dancing.

"In Kearney the day was celebrated by closing business houses and decorating the city. There was a procession of members of various trade unions, with many merchants also represented. The program closed with speeches. Kearney was in the midst of her boom period at that time.

"In Lincoln the day was observed by a parade of about 300 men representing most of the labor unions of the city. The Cadet Band headed the procession which ended at Bohanan's Hall, where Frank Ransom of Nebraska City, father of Labor Day in Nebraska, spoke. He gave a history of the law and advocated thorough organization of working men.

"Nebraska City had planned to celebrate the first Labor Day in Nebraska, but the committee appointed did not meet with financial encouragement from the citizens and gave up the plans. Mr. Ransom of Nebraska City, founder of the holiday in Nebraska, left his home to speak at Lincoln. Said the 'Omaha Bee,' 'Mr. Ransom, like the prophet of old, seems to be without honor at his own home.'

"The honor of establishing a nation-wide labor holiday, however, goes to no one individual. The idea of Labor Day originated in New York City when a grand parade of Knights of Labor was held on September 5, 1882. In 1883 a similar parade was held on the first Monday in September, and in 1884 it was decided it should be known as Labor Day. Workingmen's organizations all over the country began agitating to State legislatures to declare the day a legal holiday, and on March 15, 1897, Colorado led the way, followed by New Jersey, New York and Massachusetts. Labor Day is now a legal holiday in all the states and in the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Hawaii and Alaska."

'80 Phone Books Now Available

Wayne area residents will soon receive this year's edition of one of the most widely-used reference books, the telephone directory. Northwestern Bell will distribute new directories to Wayne and surrounding communities through today (Monday).

This year, 2,600 directories will go out to homes and businesses in Wayne, 400 to customers in Winside and 825 to customers in Laurel. Directories also are being bulk-mailed to telephone offices in regional communities not served by Northwestern Bell.

Ken Berglund, Northwestern Bell manager in Wayne, said one directory will be mailed to each home in the area that has telephone service, unless customers have requested additional books in previous years. Northwestern Bell customers with more than one telephone who need extra books can obtain them through the area telephone office in Wayne.

The Customer Guide section of the new directory includes the following service additions and changes: telephone services for disabled persons; new Northwestern Bell business office telephone numbers for business customers; and, after Nov. 6, new telephone repair service numbers for both business and residence customers in Wayne, Winside and Laurel.

The cover of the 1980-81 directory depicts a Midwestern winter scene from a century ago. Grand Island photographer LaVern Fuller of Bailey Studios recreated the 1880 scene, set in the Railroad Town at Grand Island's Stuhr Museum of the Prairie Pioneer.

Year Has Been Exasperating for Pork Producers

Nebraska pork producers have experienced an exasperating series of changes in market prices since the first of the year.

Butcher hogs started the year in the high $30 range in Omaha, dropped to the high $20s during April and May and into June and then rebounded into the middle and high $40s in the summer. These changes in market hog prices make planning and protection for individual producers difficult, and they make managing cash flow almost impossible.

Bill Ahlischwede, extension swine specialist in the UNL Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources, said that one strategy for dealing with a confusing market situation is to concentrate more effort on efficient production.

One reason that this strategy may be attractive is that individual producers cannot influence the market. Ahlischwede said however, individual producers can exercise considerable control on production costs by managing to improve feed efficiency and scheduling production in a cost saving manner.

Ahlischwede stressed that he is not encouraging producers to expand, but rather to zero in on production practices at whatever level of production they chose.

After a period of drastic changes in price like we've just encountered, Ahlischwede added ed, "we just don't have much confidence in predicting the future market." Faced with this uncertainty and the prospect of higher corn prices due to the hot dry weather, attention to feed efficiency and production economies is warranted, he said.

Opportunities for improving production efficiency and feed utilization are available to most pork producers in both the short and long run, the swine specialist said. Opportunities to immediately improve feed efficiency include: adjustment of self feeders and feed handling systems to reduce feed waste, careful scrutiny of weight of market hogs and early identification and culling of open sows.

Mid-range strategy for improving feed efficiency includes creative choices of feedstuffs, supplementation levels and providing improved environments for growing finishing pigs.

Longer range strategies for improving feed efficiency rely upon improving the genetic merit of the pigs. Boars selected from sources who have been improving feed efficiency can be expected to help reduce feed costs. Closely following crossbreeding programs with appropriate breed choices also can reduce feed costs.

Production scheduling offers many pork producers an opportunity to improve the efficiency of the movement of pigs through their operations. Evening the flow of pigs through a production unit can reduce the cost per pig for facilities and management as well as providing a stable supply of pigs to the market. Production scheduling requires careful control at breeding time to insure that farrowings are properly spaced. This ensures an even flow of pigs through the facilities and helps prevent bottlenecks and production problems due to stress caused by over-crowded facilities.

The long range outlook for pork production in Nebraska looks good, according to Ahlischwede. However, market fluctuations should be expected in the short range, he continued. "Since the fluctuation in market price has been coming more quickly than the length of the production cycle, pork producers are unable to respond effectively to those fluctuations. This imbalance of response time with market price change is the reason producers should pay more attention to controlling production costs and relatively less attention to the wild fluctuations," he concluded.

Corn, Sorghum Samples Show High Nitrate Level

Thirty-five to 40 percent of corn and sorghum samples submitted by Nebraska farmers and analyzed in the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources Department of Agriculture Biochemistry laboratory equal or exceed the rule-of-thumb toxic level for nitrate content.

That's the word from Professor Robert Hill, biochemist in charge of the laboratory, who said the toxic level for cattle is 2,100 ppm (parts per million) nitrate-nitrogen, on a dry basis, in the total ration.

Sampling techniques are important in getting an accurate analysis for nitrate content, Hill emphasized.

A sample should represent the whole field as well as possible, he advised. "If the sampling is to be done by hand, select about a dozen stalks from various places in the field - good as well as bad; tall as well as short."

"Chop them with a corn knife and mix well. Remove about one pound of material and submit for analysis," he continued.

"Stockmen who consider feeding drought-damaged corn likely to be high in nitrates must exercise careful management and control the amount of such feed available to cattle, Hill stressed.

Nitrate is taken into the plant along with moisture drawn from the ground. The water passes up through the stem to the leaves and evaporates, leaving the nitrate to accumulate in the lower part of the stalk.

"Since the nitrate level is highest at the time of flowering, anytime a plant is harvested near the flowering stage (pollination time for corn), there is a good chance for a high level of nitrate," the IANR staff member said. Later, as the plant produces seed, the nitrate-nitrogen is incorporated into protein.

Since the nitrate accumulates in the lower portion of the stalk, the likelihood of high nitrate levels in green chop can be reduced by raising the cutter bar 8-10 inches.

"When plants are pastured, cattle ordinarily will eat only the leaves or tender tops of the plants, leaving the stalk which contains most of the nitrate. In green chopping, no such selection is made," Hill pointed out.

The hazard of high nitrate is not necessarily past when green-chopped forage is harvested correctly, Hill stated.

"If green chopped forage, containing a moderate level of nitrate, is allowed to remain in a pile or feed wagon so that it heats, nitrate may be converted to nitrite by bacterial action."

"Nitrite is about 10 times as toxic as nitrate - so a safe feed may suddenly become toxic."

Hill also warned of the possibility of toxic levels of prussic acid in immature sudans and sudan hybrids.

"Samples of these plants should be analyzed within four hours of harvest, and because this is a rather lengthy procedure, most laboratories need the sample by noon on a given day," Hill said.

"If it is impossible to get a sample to a laboratory within four hours, then the sample should be frozen as quickly as possible and kept frozen until it reaches the laboratory," Hill concluded.

Heat Damages Crops, But Creates Records for Wheat

The hot, humid summer that meant disaster for some crops created a record wheat harvest in Nebraska, but producers should look out for diseased seed and take caution in storing the grain before it is sold.

Duane Foote, executive secretary of the Nebraska Grain Improvement Association and extension agronomist at the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources, said the record crop is generally of good quality.

The 1980 Nebraska wheat crop is estimated at a record 114.7 million bushels by the Crop Reporting Service up slightly from the 1958 record of 113.3 million bushels.

The per acre yield of 37 bushels was three bushels more than last year but five bushels lower than the record 42 bushel per acre yield in 1971, Foote said.

Wheat growers in the state harvested 3.1 million acres in 1980, which was 97 percent of the planted acreage - "the highest percentage in recent years," Foote added. Harvested acreage has been less than 90 percent during the past three years.

In test weights, the harvested crop showed protein content may average nearly 12.5 percent statewide.

Hot, humid weather in late June and continuing into July hastened maturity statewide but particularly in the west. Test weights were excellent in the east and west, Foote said.

Protein averaged 13 percent or better on early material in eastern Nebraska. Baking quality of the new crop is reported to be from good to excellent, Foote said.

The good quality of most of the record crop may be marred by some problems with stinking smut or bunt, Foote said. There appears to be a slight increase in the number of samples showing up with smut or bunt.

"Although the disease is found only occasionally, it could become increasingly prevalent if farmers do not treat their seed wheat with a fungicide," Foote said.

The disease reduces yields and lowers the quality of harvested grain. Seed from smutted wheat should not be replanted because healthy kernels would become infected and spread the disease.

The disease is discussed in NebGuide G-74-169. Bunt or Stinking Smut of Wheat," and several fungicides for treating small grain are listed in the publication.

Seed treatment, Foote said, can be applied at reasonable cost and is good insurance against losses in yield and quality.

Some of the wheat from the record crop must be stored before it is sold, Foote said, which means added responsibility for the producer.

"Even though harvest conditions were good and most of the wheat would have been harvested at safe moisture levels for storage, any stored wheat needs attention," Foote said.

"During warm weather the wheat should be checked weekly to make sure there is no change in its condition. After it is determined the wheat is probably going to remain in good condition, it should be checked at least every two weeks."

NebGuide G-74-418, "Checking Condition of Stored Grains," gives additional tips.

Harvesting Squash
Summer squash skin should be soft and easily dented with a thumbnail at harvest time. Harvest fruit before they mature so that vines keep producing.

Winter squash and pumpkin should be harvested when the fruit is full sized, well colored and the skin sufficiently hard to resist denting by the thumbnail. Slight cuts and bruises will heal, but the fruit should be handled carefully to avoid bruises or excessive damage.

Winter squash should be cured 10 days at 85 degrees F. in high humidity, then it will keep from 10 to 12 weeks if stored between 50-60 degrees F.

Leaf Scorch

The expected high tomorrow will be 95 degrees, with southeast winds sound familiar? These conditions over the past couple of weeks can cause a physiological disease in trees known as leaf scorch. When these climatic factors occur, water may be lost through the leaves faster than the roots can replace it. The results of this rapid loss is a burned or scorched appearance, usually beginning on the outer margin of the leaf and progressing inward, toward the main veins. In the tissue between the veins are also evident. In severe cases, this area is killed and the leaf eventually becomes brittle and drops.

Other conditions can add to the severity of leaf scorch. Among these are shallow soils, confinement of the root system, roots which girdle the crown of the tree, drought and a diseased root system. Trees planted near the south wall of a building may suffer due to the extreme exposure from the sun and reflection from the building. Also, trees that are suffering from iron chlorosis are extremely susceptible to this disorder.

Most trees are susceptible to leaf scorch. Ash, maple and oak are the most commonly involved species, although birch, dogwood, elm, horse chestnut and linden are also highly susceptible to scorching. Firs, pine and spruce often show leaf scorch as a brown discoloration of needle tips. Maples seem to be a particular problem in the Wayne area.

To minimize the amount of scorch, lightly fertilize trees that are low in vigor and keep the plants well watered. Recently transplanted trees should be watered faithfully during hot and dry periods.

I might point out that you may have problems with leaf scorch during very hot weather even though you water regularly. This is because the roots can not replace the moisture in the leaves as fast as it is lost to evaporation due to the hot weather.

requirements with an emphasis on fiber content of the feed," Owen said.

The reason for this work, he explained, is the continuing problem of mastitis and metritis (infection of the reproductive tract), which both appear to be related to the fat cow syndrome. This syndrome is a primary result of feed rations deficient in fiber, Owen said.

Studies were conducted to minimize these problems as well as avoiding off-feed conditions and low fat tests in milk. He added that high fiber feeds generally resulted in low costs.

With fiber diets, it was found that soyhulls were a good source of fiber, he said, adding that during early lactation, intake and milk production increased significantly when this roughage was used.

Improved Feed Rations Topic at Dairy Expo '80

Updated reports on improved feed rations for cows and experiments with calf weaning ages were presented to dairy producers during the Dairy Expo '80 at the University of Nebraska Field Laboratory near Mead Wednesday, Aug. 20.

It was one of five updates by UNL Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources staff members to inform dairymen of recently completed tests, as well as research now underway, according to Dr. Foster Owen, extension dairyman. The reports coincided with tours of the dairy farm to give those attending an opportunity to discuss various experiments underway.

One such experiment involved comparing a three week weaning age to a nine-week age, Owen said. It has been suggested that early age weaning may lead to a higher susceptibility to pneumonia. Furthermore, calves at the Mead farm seemed to experience a higher incidence of pneumonia than researchers thought to be normal.

Evaluations of different antibodies were conducted during the calf life to determine how weaning time affected susceptibility to diseases. Evidence has yet to prove that an older weaning age tends to make the calf more resistant to the disease, Owen said. When the weaning time was changed from 21 to 31 days, essentially no difference was noted in calf growth or the amount of stress it suffered, despite weaning during the severe winter months.

Starter feed rations have been the focus of another research area, according to Owen. "It is important that if (the feed) is palatable, yet of high quality so the calves can get on it quickly," he said.

Built-in roughages were evaluated with different levels of treated corn cobs. Improved intake and better weight gains were achieved at a 12 to 24 percent level, Owen said that because of this experiment, the starter feed used at the farm contains 15 percent treated corn cobs.

An environmentally controlled building with a low energy calf house with a lower than normal temperature was examined and advantages of the low energy house were discussed.

There was little difference in terms of performance of calves in the building. Calves in the low energy house seemed to have a few more respiratory problems, however, the low energy house used about half as much heating fuel than the other one, Owen noted.

Owen also commented on individual and six pac housing for young calves, stating that the advantage of the six pac housing is less outside work in bad weather for the producer. Yet, both individual and larger units as well as half way houses are movable. Half way houses are for animals just past weaning and not over six months old.

"With milk cows, the latest study has been in nutritional requirements with an emphasis on fiber content of the feed," Owen said.

The reason for this work, he explained, is the continuing problem of mastitis and metritis (infection of the reproductive tract), which both appear to be related to the fat cow syndrome. This syndrome is a primary result of feed rations deficient in fiber, Owen said. Studies were conducted to minimize these problems as well as avoiding off-feed conditions and low fat tests in milk. He added that high fiber feeds generally resulted in low costs.
