Several fine performances were turned in both offensively and defensively by this week's group of nominees for star of the week. Because he led his team to a victory and kept its hopes alive for a high conference finish, Clark Benne of Wayne State College was selected as this week's star. Benne carried the ball 13 times for 117 yards to lead the Wildcats to a 20-0 win over Emporia State. He scored two touchdowns of runs of five and two yards.

Other players who were nominated for the award for last week's performances were Brian Foote of Winslow, Brian Marquardt of Laurel, Randy Smith of Allen and the offensive line of Wakefield. Wayne coach Lonnie Ehrhardt said he had three or four players who played well and couldn't single out one player.

Urban Government Discussed By Bereuter

United States Congressman Doug Bereuter was at Wayne State College Thursday to talk to Cliff Ginn's urban government and politics class. During that time, Bereuter talked about urban government and intergovernmental relations.

Bereuter graduated from Harvard with a degree in urban affairs. He has been interested in intergovernmental relations for some time. He has acted as a federal/state relations coordinator and is a member of several other committees.

In terms of intergovernmental relations, Bereuter said the congressman often acts as an ombudsman. The reason for this is that "the federal structure and the intergovernmental structure is so complex and confusing that constituents ask their congressman for assistance in sorting out what is going on."

A major area of intergovernmental relations is grant programs. "Grantsmanship" is not a science, but it is an art," said Bereuter. "You have to understand it, you have to have timing and its effectiveness often depends on who you know." A grant consultant is "one who knows which phone to ring at what time," according to Bereuter.

There are three major types of grant programs. The first, general revenue sharing,

Bereuter thinks is a good approach. However, "there is little support in Congress for general revenue sharing because congressmen do not get credit for doing as much work, as in the case of categorical grants."

The categorical grant program is a way of trying to influence national priorities at a local level. The third type of program is the block grant program.

Following his talk, Bereuter opened the floor to questions. Topics ranged from lid spending to congressional corruption.

Bereuter also had a campus-wide talk Thursday afternoon. He is running for re-election to Congress.

FIRST DISTRICT Congressman Doug Bereuter spoke to the urban government and politics class at Wayne State College Thursday. A native of Ulaca and a graduate of Harvard, the state representative discussed intergovernmental relations and provided the students of Cliff Ginn's class a look at Washington politics.

Major General Edward C. Binder, the Adjutant General of Nebraska, awarded Staff Sergeant Thomas R. Lovell, III, the Nebraska Army National Guard Meritorious Service Medal for his life-saving efforts involving a serious automobile accident at Fort Benning, Ga., July 22, when he was visiting there on temporary duty.

Two vehicles had collided, with one vehicle overturning, when Lovell arrived on the scene. A large volume of smoke and steam was being emitted from beneath the overturned car, and it appeared a fire was imminent. Lovell jumped out of his car, ran to the scene, and helped push the crushed vehicle into an upright position. With total disregard for his own vulnerability if the gas tank had exploded, Lovell helped extract the two seriously injured occupants and moved them away from the smoking vehicle to safety.

He then assisted in bandaging and treated them for shock until the military police and an ambulance arrived about 15 minutes later. This award was presented in recognition of Lovell's courage in risking his own safety in the face of a potentially life-threatening situation.

Lovell is the son of Richard and Marcelline Lovell, of 1906 Boyce St., Hastings. He is a graduate of Hastings Senior High, McCook Junior College, Wayne State College and Central Tech College. He's Radio-TV Coordinator for Nebraska Army National Guard Recruiting in Lincoln.

Crop Surveys Planned

The Nebraska Crop and Livestock Reporting Service is asking farmers and ranchers to participate in the important end-of-the-season crop and livestock surveys this fall, according to Jack L. Aschwege, state statistician.

The Nebraska surveys are a part of the nationwide program of publishing accurate and timely agricultural statistics.

Aschwege points out that all individual farm information supplied will be kept confidential. The information collected from these surveys will be used in preparing state and county estimates of acreage and yield of all harvested crops, winter wheat seedlings, cattle, hogs, sheep and chicken numbers.

The first set of questionnaires concerning acreage and production of fall harvested crops and winter wheat seeding will be mailed in early November. Surveys will also be carried out in late November and early December to obtain information on livestock and poultry numbers and winter wheat seedlings. Many cattle producers will also be surveyed in late December and early January. Some farmers will be contacted by phone or personally visited, Aschwege said.

Farmer participation is voluntary but essential in providing reliable estimates on acreage and livestock numbers, he points out. These estimates are important if farmers, ranchers and their organizations are to have a sound basis for making and adjusting production, storage and marketing plans.

Aschwege said the Nebraska Crop and Livestock Reporting Service will release the State and National estimates for wheat acreages and production and hogs Dec. 23, 1980; annual crop production Jan. 14, 1981; Jan. 1 prospective plantings Jan. 21, 1981; and poultry and cattle Jan. 30, 1981.

Copies of the releases which provide Nebraska and U.S. data are available by request. The National report summaries are available after 3 p.m. on the day of release on a toll free telephone line. The number is 800-424-7964.

Open Letter to My Fellow Voters of District 17 For the Non-Partisan Unicameral:

I returned Fridays after three weeks of being out of Nebraska for medical treatment at Mayo Clinic. In catching up on the campaign news, I became so concerned with some of the arguments being expressed to influence our vote, that I decided to write this open letter to you. I am paying for it myself, so I'll be sure it gets published. I think it's that important.

Just so there is no mistake from the outset on how I stand, I have over the past several months studied the views of both Conway and Von Minden, the way they handle themselves, and their potential as leaders. At the beginning of the primary campaign I was acquainted with neither candidate. I now support Gerald Conway as the most effective person to represent us in the legislature, and I am concerned that we deal with true issues, not a lot of shallow ones.

There is not sufficient room to discuss all the arguments that seem misleading in this race. I will concentrate on two.

First, I have read in some of the papers and campaign literature that to represent us in rural Nebraska we need a farmer or at least a man tied primarily to farmers' interests. I would ask first, "Who is this farmer I am being asked to follow?" Had Ed Fahrenholtz, a farmer, won the primary, I easily could have voted for him in the general election because when I observed him I found a reasonable man of good will and intelligence, one who would listen to all sides and not become angry over different points of view. However, Ed did not survive the primary.

Now with Jerry Conway and Mr. Von Minden, the two surviving candidates, much is being made of the idea that we have only one who understands the rural viewpoint. I challenge that with my own experience. I was born on a farm. At the age of 8 I helped my family clear eighty acres of cockleburs from the land, learned to shock oats when I was ten. Later I became an educator and have been one for 40 years helping children, but do you think in that time I have forgotten the life of the farm? Or failed to keep pace with its change? That I have turned my back on the hard workers who so often make up the only group in our economy that loses money, at the same time they become more efficient and effective? I don't believe a man of Jerry Conway's intelligence has crossed off the influence of his early years either as if he had spent his youth in a sterile box instead of on a Dakota County farm.

It's fair enough also to ask in this election, "What educator am I being asked to follow?" Being an educator isn't a guarantee of effective leadership either anymore than being a farmer guarantees it. I've seen many educators who inspire confidence, and then I have seen others — and so have you — whom you wouldn't follow down a section road.

It's up to you to examine for yourself what kind of a leader Jerry Conway will make. As for me, when I have listened to Conway, I have heard a man who knows the broad realm of Northeast Nebraska's interests, from small business, the farm, the needs of senior citizens, water resources, gasoline and education. When he doesn't know, he has sense enough to say he has to study the question before committing himself. Yet this well-informed man will sit down and listen — really listen to you (not just pretend). Walthill Workshop Coordinated By Wayne State Arts Intern

Parents of Walthill Public School students and the general public will have a chance to view the artistic results of the Walthill Public School Art Workshop on Monday.

The open house to the final workshop day at the Walthill School is the climax of this two week event. Funded on a matching money basis through the Walthill School and the Nebraska Art Council, Walthill Public School students who are interested in visual art forms have been working side-by-side with a professional artist from Omaha to get an insight into what the real world of art can hold for them.

The intensified artist-in-the-schools/community program is sponsored by the Walthill school district in cooperation with the Nebraska Arts Council and Wayne State College.

The program included a select number of elementary, junior high and high school students and was designed to fit a four-hour daily workshop format.

The workshop was coordinated by Sandy Hillman, arts administration intern, of PACE (Program for Arts in Communities and Education) at Wayne State who said the visual arts covered in the workshop have been selected by the Walthill school administration and art instructors. They include, among others, drawing, painting and graphics.

Heading up the workshop is Paul Michael Otero, a professional artist who is the product of Boys Town and Kearney State College, who will be available during the open house for discussions and questions.

Otero, who first made his mark in the world of art by sketching tattoo transfers for servicemen in Vietnam, has received national recognition for his works which he terms basically as being autobiographical.

"I have always felt I could give more of myself to others through art," Otero explained. "I am interested in that person who thinks about his God, his life and his world. I am curious about that person's vision, his humanity. I am deeply interested in the hidden beauty of mankind."

Otero holds a master's degree in art from Kearney State College. He specializes in drawing, painting and mixed media and he has earned a reputation through exhibitions of his surrealistic works on the local, regional and national levels.

His method includes Renaissance and contemporary approaches to contemporary ideas. "I feel exploration is a fundamental process in approaching new ideas and with discipline, we can penetrate the world of art and ourselves," he observed.

Otero has illustrated publications for Dr. Jeffrey H. Smith ("From Corps to Core") and for poet Don Welch ("Handbook") as well as having taught drawing at the Joslyn Art Museum, Omaha.

In the artist-in-the-schools/community program, Otero has worked on a one-on-one basis with the students in the workshop. Ms. Hillman explained that the residency that developed from the workshop "was unique as those who participate in the program."

She went on to explain that the close relationship between the artist and the workshop members helped to "enhance an acute awareness of the visual arts which they (the students) might not otherwise receive."

Wayne State's involvement in this workshop is in line with the College's objective to enter into cooperative educational agreements with other institutions.

Election 1980 - Issues and Answers

Gary Vopalensky - Ward IV

Service Unit One since 1974.

In 1976, I finished first in the primary race for Councilman from the Second Ward, but had to withdraw from the general election as I moved to my present home. I also served this past year on the Wayne County Republican County committee.

1. Do you favor a city administrator for the City of Wayne? Why or why not?

1. No, the present financial condition of our city mandates that we demonstrate fiscal restraint. I believe that it is time for the City Council to become more directly involved in the business of managing the city.

Therefore, I propose a moratorium on the re-hiring of an administrator anticipating more direct involvement from the city clerk-treasurer and the council.

Incidentally, the concept of one individual assuming the administrator-clerk duties is provided for in the Wayne Municipal Code 1-313.

2. In spite of a projection that Wayne's population has actually decreased in the last decade, do you feel the Council is justified in planning an expansion of the city's water, electric and sewage systems? Why or why not?

2. The city, rather than expansion, should address the present needs regarding the

I am 29 years old and have lived in Wayne since 1969 except for 1973. I am married and my wife, Connie, and I have one child, Andrea. I was born and raised in rural Nebraska near North Bend. I graduated from Wayne State College and the University of South Dakota and have worked for Educational water, electric and sewer systems.

The past several years have seen the electric system overhauled drastically. The citizens have just been notified that the water and sewer systems are in need of major upgrading. I believe that one of the paramount responsibilities of the Council is the administration of the public works program.

Direct Council involvement with department heads should help alleviate such severe modification at the same time. We need to look towards the future from a cost-effective viewpoint.

3. Would you favor abolishing the state-imposed 7 percent lid limit or would you favor increasing the limit to a more reasonable level that would be in line with inflation? Please explain your answer?

3. The Council has been given a mandate by the electorate to live within the 7 percent lid. If elected, I would be able to do that as there is undoubtedly some "fat" in the budget.

But the constituency must realize that continued inflation over the next several years will mean that a reduction in city supported services and/or a shift to fee supported services is inevitable.

Another factor to consider is the possibility of the Council feeling they have to spend the 7 percent budget increase, even if it is not necessary to maintain service.

If the citizens would elect to abolish the lid, as provided for by state law, I feel confident that I would demonstrate an ability to make prudent decisions.

4. What would you consider to be the city's three most important challenges in the next decade, in order of priority please?

4. The three most important challenges facing Wayne in the 1980's are:

1. Fiscal solvency — It is time that our elected officials manage public funds with as much constraint as we must exercise in managing our personal finances.

2. Retaining young people in the community — one of our most precious resources in our young people, planned industrial growth that is attractive to this age-group is necessary.

3. Develop public trust — the time is right for the City Council and city employees to demonstrate respect for the citizens rights and privileges.

5. If the city finds itself in a deficit situation at the end of the current fiscal year, what would you propose as short-term or long-term solutions? Personnel, commodities or capital outlay?

5. Theoretically, the city should be able to maintain solvency, the 7 percent lid and cost-effective management would help insure it. Therefore, the deficit situation should be averted. If a deficit situation did occur I would propose that the two major areas of cutbacks should be in personnel and capital outlay.

The only way to save any appreciable dollar amount is by cutting personnel and combining positions, the suggesting of capital outlay refers to a freeze on the purchase of new equipment. Once again, though, prudent and proper fiscal management will insure that this situation does not occur.

6. Are you for industrial growth? What kinds of industry would you favor for Wayne? Should the costs be absorbed by the industry or the city or a combination thereof? (Costs refer to water, sewer, electricity, etc.)

6. Yes, the type of industrial growth that we need is that which does not place the citizens and/or the city in a vulnerable position.

I feel that we have some great local industries which have been developed by aggressive and foresighted individuals that has helped our economy a great deal.

I feel that the protection of our environment is important. The type of industry may also indicate a large surge in population which the city may not be able to handle (water, sewer, electric), another factor would be the possibility that a large industry could afford to pay much higher salaries than our present industries, thus depleting the workforce.

I do not want to see an industry which may take more from the city than it would return. I feel that the costs regarding water, sewer and electricity should be a negotiated item with the proposed industry.

7. What would you do to improve job opportunities in Wayne?

7. Selective industrial growth including expansion of existing industries would be the most expeditious vehicle for improving job opportunities.

I feel that this issue is being addressed through the efforts of the Wayne Industries organization. I feel that the City Council should be supporting of efforts to expand and/or attract industry.

Also, as the governing body of the city, the Council must be aware of the potential hazards of proposed industries and serve as a "watchdog" for the community.

The council must prepare the climate for attracting industry, but other issues are confronting the city and the development of job opportunities is best left to the private sector.

Jim Craun - Ward I

(Editor's Note: Jim Craun, a candidate for Ward I City Council, chose not to address questions posed by The Herald directly, but instead provided his opinions on several subjects.)

I am a senior at Wayne State College. I have worked at several jobs since moving to Wayne in 1976. I worked as a laborer for a roofing company, was employed at Region IV Services and have done farm work. I am single and have relatives living in Wayne.

I found the questions very interesting, but I don't know if I'm sure there is a direct answer to many of the questions.

I do favor a city administrator for the city. I believe there are too many independent offices connected with the city and its government for the City Clerk to effectively manage.

In response to the second question, many of the city plants are running effectively for the present, but if there is any population increase it would cause shortages in some areas. There is always an increasing demand for utilities, even without a large population increase.

I favor industrial growth. I would favor almost any agricultural based industry. I believe that industrial growth would also improve the job opportunities in Wayne.

There are many challenges for the city of Wayne. Among the most important would be the city budget and working to get the city to run more efficiently.

I'm certain many people have more effective solutions to these questions than I have, and I'm looking forward to learning a lot more about these concerns.

Proposed Constitutional Amendments

As prepared by the University of Nebraska
Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources

Amendment No. 1

Nebraska's Supreme Court Justices would be elected from the state's three Congressional Districts rather than from the current six judicial districts if proposed Amendment No. 1 to the state constitution is passed Tuesday.

But if passed, the amendment would not have any real effect until 1987, according to Wanda Leonard, extension community resource development specialist in the University of Nebraska Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

"Judges currently in office would serve the balance of their term or unless removed through retirement, resignation, death or re-election by the voters," she explained. If added to the Constitution, the amendment would become effective Jan. 1, 1981.

The bill for the amendment was introduced by Sen. Peter Hoagland of Omaha, who contends that "the drawing of Supreme Court judicial districts has produced unfair and inequitable districts. Six districts are now required under the Constitution and three of those districts cut into Douglas County in such a way that only one of the six judges come from Douglas County." Having judicial districts correspond with Congressional districts would more accurately reflect an equal lawyer population from which Supreme Court judges are selected, according to Hoagland.

Other arguments in favor of the amendment include: — Following Congressional district boundaries would not invite opportunities for gerrymandering or formation of districts in such a way as to give unfair advantage to one political party.

— With passage of the amendment, every major population group would be equally represented. Since the state was founded in 1867, only eight of the 51 justices appointed to the Supreme Court have been from the second Congressional District, an area that contains one fourth to one third of the state's population.

In contrast, opponents of the amendment contend:

— Population groups may be represented with passage, but geographical areas, particularly rural areas to the west, would not have fair representation.

— Irregularities could occur on drafting Congressional Districts every 10 years because of new census data just as easily as they could occur in drafting judicial districts.

In addition, other opponents of the amendment contend that Supreme Court judges should not be elected from any district but should be appointed, much like U.S. Supreme Court judges are appointed.

More information on the four proposed constitutional amendments is available from county extension offices, Leonard noted. Request Campaign Circular 297.

Current Supreme Court districts - one judge elected from each district.

Proposed Supreme Court Districts would be the same as Congressional Districts, with two judges elected from each district.

Amendment No. 2

The Commission on Judicial Qualification, the disciplinary body for Nebraska's judges, would have new powers and a different membership if the second proposed amendment to the Nebraska Constitution is passed in Tuesday's election.

Although it's the lengthiest of the four proposed amendments, it's also probably the least controversial, according to Wanda Leonard, extension community resources development specialist in the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources at the University of Nebraska.

Currently, the commission consists of seven judges, two attorneys and two citizens, with a chairman elected from that group.

"In the proposed amendment, membership would consist of three judges, three attorneys and three citizens, with the Chief Justice of the Nebraska Supreme Court serving as chairman," Leonard explained. Membership would be shifted from heavy weighting by judges to more equal weighting with attorneys and citizens, she said.

Additional powers are given to the commission in the proposed amendment. Currently, a judge can be removed from office for certain offenses. It's an "either/or" situation, according to Leonard, with the judge either remaining in office or being removed or retired.

The proposed amendment allows for gray areas, she said. "It would allow other means of punishment that would not be as final or as permanent as removal or retirement. These could be in form of a private reprimand or censure or removal from office without pay for a period of not more than six months, or other measures chosen by the commission," she said.

In the past, for example, a judge with an alcohol problem was either retired from office or the problem was ignored, she said. The amendment would allow for up to six months suspension which could be used for participation in an alcohol treatment or therapy program.

Leonard noted that proponents of the amendment argue that no judge or justice ever has been removed or retired by the commission. Some have violated prescribed rules and regulations, but not to the extent that they should be removed or retired, the supporters say. "The proposal allows intermediate levels of punishment," she said.

Offenses for which a judge could be disciplined are broadened in the proposed amendment. "Conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice" would be added to the current list of offenses. Those offenses are: willful misconduct in office; willful disregard of or failure to perform his or her duties; habitual intemperance; conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude; or disbarment from practicing law in Nebraska.

"The addition of the 'prejudicial conduct' clause says that a judge who conducts himself or herself in any manner harmful or detrimental to the administration of justice or who causes the judicial office to be disgraced or have a bad reputation shall be subject to some form of punishment," she summarized.

In addition, the state Supreme Court would be authorized to remove a judge whenever a felony charge is pending against him or her, and on its own motion or recommendation of the commission, the Supreme Court could remove a judge whenever he or she pleads guilty or no contest to a felony charge.

Provisions for suspension of salary during an investigation of alleged misconduct are included in the proposed amendment, along with back pay if the charge later is held to be unfounded, she said.

Because this amendment concerns the judiciary, it is very detailed and, specific, Leonard noted, since the Legislature cannot make laws affecting the judicial branch under the separation of powers. Proponents of the amendment say this exactness is a benefit and is itself an argument in its favor.

Supporters of the amendment also say that it is good that more citizens and attorneys and fewer judges would be on the commission, Leonard added. "The reasoning is that fewer judges on the commission would be less able to control decisions that would affect the livelihood and future of their friends and associates."

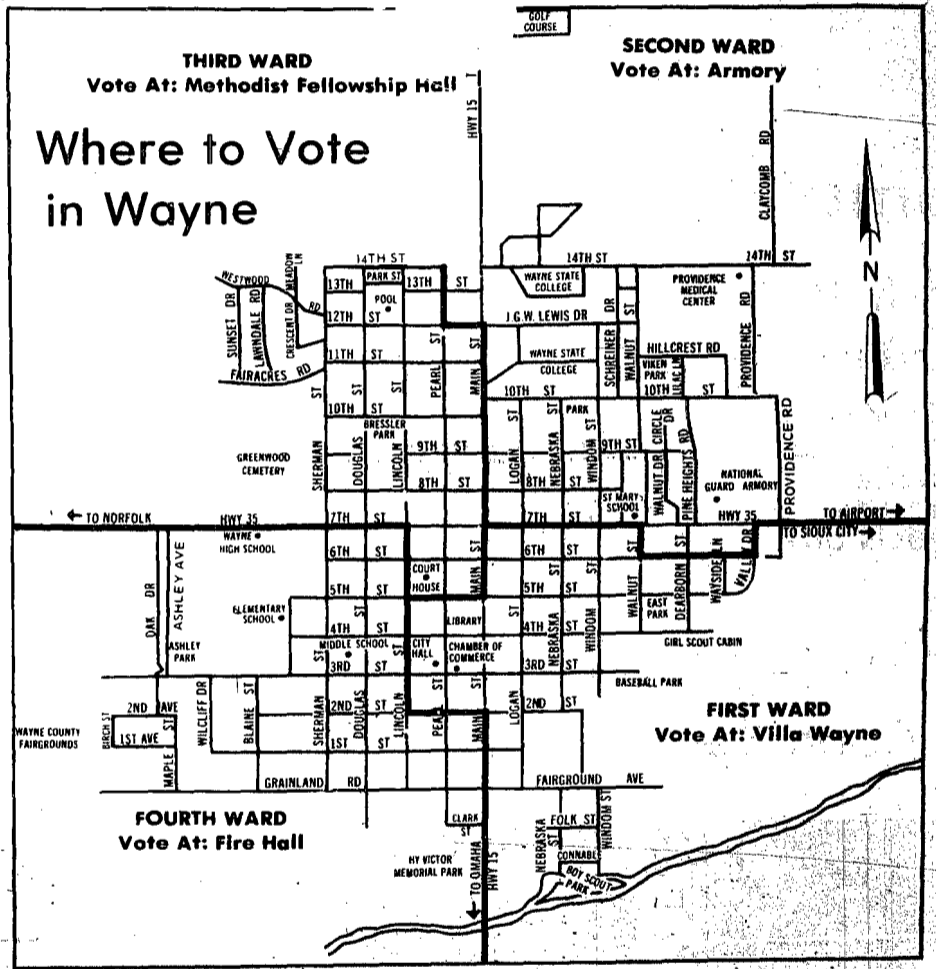

In contrast, Leonard said, opponents argue that "if we believe in a jury of our peers" then judges should be examined by a commission made up primarily of judges."

Another argument against the amendment holds that if a judge has committed a wrongful act, he or she should be removed, and not receive a "slap on the hand," such as a suspension as provided in the proposed amendment.

Leonard noted that women are for the first time acknowledged as part of the judicial system with the addition of "her" and "she" throughout the amendment.

More detailed information on the four proposed constitutional amendments is available from county extension offices without charge, Leonard said.

Election 1980 - Issues and Answers

Amendment No. 3

A proposed amendment to the Nebraska Constitution which didn't pass in 1978 will be on the ballot again in a slightly different form Tuesday.

"Tax incentive for energy conservation improvements" is back for another try, according to Wanda Leonard, extension community resource development specialist in the University of Nebraska Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

The 1980 amendment provides that improvements to real property designed primarily for energy conservation may be exempted from taxation. In the 1978 version, the Legislature would have been required to enact such legislation, Leonard said, instead of having the option. Currently, 38 states have some form of state tax incentive related to energy.

Also in the former amendment, "specific energy saving improvements were named, while the proposed amendment does not specify what improvements could be included," she said. The intent of the current proposal is to offer tax incentives for alternate energy systems which require a large expenditure at the outset, according to Leonard. "When coupled with increased value for tax purposes, it makes the improvement appear uneconomical."

"However, the wording of the amendment is broad enough to include such things as insulation and weatherstripping." This would allow persons who couldn't afford "big ticket" alternate energy systems to still receive some tax advantage, she said.

Opponents of the amendment say such tax incentive legislation would unfairly benefit those who could install the more expensive and efficient systems, rather than the "little guy" whose improvements might be more limited.

"The argument is that the owner would not only benefit from the energy-saving device itself and the tax exemption, but would further benefit from the undepreciated part of the investment when the property is sold," Leonard said.

Proponents counter that a precedent exists for special tax treatment, Leonard noted, since the constitution allows the Legislature to enact laws to exempt the increased value of land attributable to tree plantings along highways.

Another argument against the amendment holds that its wording is too vague, Leonard said. "Opponents argue that terms, conditions and restrictions should be more specific. They say the amendment as written would allow the Legislature to give a full cost exemption or credit, when a partial exemption or credit would provide sufficient incentive," she said.

Opponents further argue that the time period in which the exemption could be used should be stated. Those supporting the measure counter that the amendment is to give direction to the Legislature and allow it leeway to decide specifics, she reported. If the people did not like the legislation passed by the Unicameral, they could vote on the measure through the referendum process. Or they could use the initiative process to suggest specifics to be included in such legislation, she said.

More detailed information on all four of the proposed constitutional amendments is available free from county extension offices. Request campaign circular 297.

Amendment No. 4

The last of the four proposed amendments to the Nebraska Constitution may also be the most controversial of the proposals to be voted on Tuesday.

Its object is state support of schools, but many other issues may be inferred from its wording, according to Wanda Leonard, extension community resource development specialist in the University of Nebraska Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

The amendment reads: "The Legislature shall enact a method of financing public education in order to meet the state's responsibility to provide maintenance and support of a thorough and efficient system of common schools. The method of financing the common schools shall not rely on property taxes to such an extent that an unfair and excessive burden is imposed on the state's property owners."

The amendment contains a mandate for the unicameral to enact laws, Leonard noted. The bill to place the proposal on the ballot was passed on the last day of the last Legislative session. It was introduced by Sen. John DeCamp.

An assumption that can be made about the proposal relates to financing of public education, Leonard said. "If property taxes cannot be relied on to such an extent that an unfair and excessive burden is imposed on property taxes, one can assume that the continuing increase in the cost of education will be partially or wholly met with an increase in state aid to schools which is derived from sales and income taxes."

State aid to schools is now $95 million annually effective this October. Of this total $57 million is designated as foundation aid or a grant per student given to each district and approximately $3.6 million is incentive aid to districts to help defray part of the cost of employing teachers with more experience and/or more education. The remaining $34.4 million is equalization support to reduce inequalities among school districts because of differences in local tax bases. Prior to 1980, state aid had been $55 million annually.

The introducers of the constitutional amendment emphasize the words "a thorough and efficient system," according to Leonard. They suggest that because system is singular, a single system of schools with a single set of applicable statutes would be a legislative mandate.

Further, thorough is held to mean a complete and basic curriculum for all schools and students, according to proponents. Currently, curriculum is a local school board responsibility.

The word "efficient" suggests a form of accountability of the schools to the taxpayer. It also means that there be some form of competency measurement of the pupils to determine if the schools are thorough and efficient.

If the proposal is approved by the voters, Leonard said, "the Legislature will have to make changes in the method and means of school finance, and it will also be required to set standards for curriculum, staffing, facilities and other matters relating to public schools."

Leonard listed these arguments advanced by supporters of the amendment.

There needs to be a continual shift to state aid to support schools because property taxes are strained to the breaking point in support of schools. Property taxes also provide police, fire and roads and trying to support all these services on one kind of tax is too great a burden.

The 7 percent bid has required school districts to pare down any frills that may have existed before. Any additional pining without increased state aid will mean elimination of vital programs.

Significant property tax relief is not possible without more state aid to schools.

Shifting from property tax to state support derived from sales and income taxes shifts part of the cost of education to visitors and industry who benefit from dealing with educated persons. Industries and businesses who rent or lease property in Nebraska would thus share in the cost of educating their potential future employees.

Methods of testing the adequacy of our schools need to be adopted because we need to know if our young people are receiving a good adequate complete education.

Many additional arguments have been offered by supporters, Leonard noted, as well as many by opponents. Arguments against the proposed amendment include the following:

— Allowing the Legislature a free hand in determining the amount and extent of state aid may be too great a risk.

— State aid is taxes any way you cut it and a shift to state aid to support schools will just mean an increase in sales and income taxes.

— A thorough and efficient way of financing public schools may be by mandatory consolidation of some of the state's more than 1,100 independent school districts.

"Thorough and efficient" could mean new or additional minimum standards regarding curriculum or other attributes of a school system. Local control of the schools could be lost because of this, and because increased state aid could mean an equal or greater increase in state control.

More information on this proposal and the other three proposed amendments is available from county extension offices free of charge. Request campaign circular 297.

Small Percentage of Voters May Decide Amendments

Only 35 Percent Of Voters Make Decisions

A very small percentage of eligible voters could decide whether the four proposed amendments to be voted on Nov. 4 are added to the Nebraska Constitution. That is because of voting patterns and the percentage of votes required to pass an amendment, according to Wanda Leonard, extension community resource development specialist in the University of Nebraska Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources at the University of Nebraska.

Here's how it could work: A constitutional amendment becomes law when approved by 35 percent of those voting in the election. Therefore, a small percentage of voters can make the difference when it comes to amendments, Leonard said.

Based on 1978 data, only 74 percent of Nebraskans eligible to register to vote actually do register. And about 61 percent of those who register actually vote.

This means only 44 percent of the people eligible to vote actually did so in 1978, she said.

Assuming that 35 percent of the 44 percent voting in the election vote in favor of an amendment, then a vote of 15 percent of the eligible voters could determine the outcome.

From this example, it's evident that every vote is important, Leonard said, yet 26 percent of the eligible voters do not register to vote. Some of this lack of registration may be due to misunderstandings about the registration process, she said, as well as apathy toward government and elections.

Laws also encourage people to vote, Leonard noted. Any employee who does not have at least two consecutive hours between the times the polls open and close is entitled to leave his or her employment for two hours for the purpose of voting. The employee can't be penalized in any way, such as a deduction from wages.

Absentee voting is another option. It can be done up to 90 days preceding the election but not after 4 p.m. on the Friday preceding the election.

Persons who have moved to Nebraska recently may think they're ineligible to vote on Nov. 4, Leonard said. This is true for most candidates and issues, but they are eligible to vote for president and vice president. These persons can make themselves available at the election commissioner's or county clerk's office up until closing time of the polls on election day, she explained.

Laws also provide for opportunities for voters to become informed of issues to be voted on, she said. Sample ballots must be available at the county clerk's or election commissioner's office not less than three or more than 35 days before an election. Ballots also must be printed in a newspaper of general circulation not more than 10 or less than three days before the election.

In looking at sample ballots, voters will notice differences in the form of the four proposed constitutional amendments, Leonard said.

Proposed Amendments 1 and 2 are much longer than 3 and 4 because they relate to the judiciary. Under the separation of powers, the Legislature can't make laws affecting the judicial branch, so any provisions must be included in the state's constitution.

The first two amendments as they appear on the ballot and in the constitution if passed are specific, Leonard said.

Amendment 1 would change the districts from which judges are elected from the current six districts to the state's three Congressional districts, with two judges elected from each.

Amendment 2 provides for intermediate disciplinary action for judges, between the current options for retaining a judge or removing him or her from office if he or she commits some punishable offense. Each of the proposals contains other provisions, Leonard pointed out, but those are the major ones. Amendments 1 and 2 mandate changes, she added.

Proposed amendments 3 and 4 are brief by comparison with much less detail, Leonard said, because they enable the Legislature to make laws. Amendment 3, relating to property tax exemptions for energy conservation home improvements, enables the Legislature to make laws if it desire to.

Amendment 4 mandates laws to be made in regard to financing of public education and contains implications for determining what is a "thorough and efficient education," Leonard said.

More information on the proposed amendments is contained in a free publication available from county extension offices. Request campaign circular 2.

We Urge You to Take Careful Consideration When Voting Tuesday

MERLE VON MINDEN for State Legislature

Fred Mann Speaks for Merle Von Minden

Many of you supported me for State Legislature in the Primary election. I am pleased with the confidence you showed me then. I feel I had your support because of my background and my strong belief in LESS big government. Merle Von Minden shares these same beliefs.

I am sure you want local government and school decisions made here at home. I am a concerned opponent of Proposition 4 and feel we must be concerned about a young college professor with little experience, who has the support of NSEA, the AFL-CIO and the public employees union, serving us in the State Legislature.

Since you share these concerns, we must vote for Merle Von Minden for the Legislature.

Some Rules on Driving Front Wheel Drive

Thousands of motorists are driving a front-wheel car for the first time, and many more probably will soon.

Demand by the public for smaller, more fuel-efficient cars has encouraged both domestic and foreign auto manufacturers to offer several models of front wheel-drive cars. The primary advantage of this type of car is the packaging of the engine and transmission assembly in a smaller space. The sideways mounted engine, delivering power directly to the front wheels, doesn't require a long engine compartment and the drive shaft is eliminated. This allows the car to be smaller with about the same space for passengers and no space consuming hump in the floor of the car.

Many questions are asked — and conflicting advice offered — on how to handle a front wheel drive car. Some advice, based on test driving by car buffs, features techniques such as applying the brakes and accelerator at the same time to skid through a curve — applicable only to a professional race car driver.

For the lay person, everyday driver, the truth is that front wheel drive cars handle much like rear drive models, according to Rollin D. Schneider, University of Nebraska extension safety specialist.

Front wheel drive models were designed to drive like the long familiar rear drive car. However, the public would not have difficulty making the transition. Front wheel drive cars are tuned for family driving, manufacturers say, and it is difficult to feel a difference under ordinary driving circumstances.

However, in unusual conditions — such as wet or icy roads Nebraskans will be facing soon — front drive cars do have advantages, Schneider stresses.

The advantages comes from the distribution of weight in the design of a front drive car, which is heavier in the front because the engine and transmission or about 60 percent of the weight rest squarely over the front wheels, in comparison with about 45 percent of the weight of the typical rear drive resting on its driving wheels.

The result of this extra weight on the driving wheels is much better traction, Schneider said, which translates into a practical situation that front wheel drive cars are not as likely to get stuck in snow. If you do get snow tires, Schneider reminds, put them on the front wheels.

He summarized features of front wheel drive cars which will influence drivers and their driving of such models.

Front drive cars may accelerate faster on a slippery surface, but won't brake any better than rear drives.

Tires won't wear out as quickly on front drive cars because the driving tires won't slip against the pavement as much when you hit the gas pedal.

You can lose traction in a front drive car, and if you do, you can lose control as quickly as in a rear drive car. Tires lose their grip on the road when you give the car too much gas or if you've hit the brakes too hard — in either case you lose the ability to steer the car. A front-drive car can lose steering ability if you accelerate and make the front tires spin. And the rear wheels, with less weight over them, can lock up easier than the rear wheels of a rear-drive car when you hit the brakes.

When you feel your wheels beginning to lose traction, follow this rule of thumb, Schneider advises: stop pushing down on the gas pedal or take your foot off the brake — and then begin pumping the brakes.

If the rear end of the car begins to skid, you've got a serious problem. Try to regain directional stability by turning the steering wheel in the direction of the skid.

In some instances, you can pull a front drive car out of a skid by giving it some gas, because the front wheels actually pull the car forward and the rear of the car falls in line, Schneider says. But you can't do this if the front wheels have lost traction, he warns. "It will only make matters worse. Furthermore, it goes against the grain — and long years of conditioning for a driver — to punch the gas pedal when the car already is skidding," he remarks.

The best advice for driving a front wheel drive on slippery roads is the same advice given over the years for any car: slow down. Schneider concludes.

Government Overlooks Small Business: Bereuter

The federal government by "thinking big," overlooked small business potential in developing and marketing solar energy products, Congressman Doug Bereuter said recently in a talk before the Northeast Lincoln Sertoma Club.

"The Department of Energy, in its solar energy procurement policies, has shown a clear bias in favor of big business," Bereuter said. "As a result, small businesses have been placed at a distinct disadvantage, in terms of both developing solar energy products and marketing them."

Small businesses received only 14.5 percent of the total DOE budget for solar energy for fiscal year 1980.

"DOE's bias is unjustified. Small businesses have a proven record as the most vital and innovative sector of our economy. Their potential as leaders in the solar energy field is unquestionable, but apparently not yet recognized by those in charge of Federal assistance who insist on 'thinking big,'" Bereuter said.

Bereuter made his remarks before the Northeast Sertoma Club in Lincoln.

"The fact is, small businesses are more risk-oriented, compared to large firms. A willingness to take risks, often translates into technological breakthroughs."

Bereuter also said that emphasis should now be placed on marketing of commercially feasible solar energy products.

"The two most formidable barriers to increased sales of solar equipment are consumer uncertainty and economic barriers," he said, referring to findings contained in a report issued by the House Small Business Subcommittee on Energy on which he serves. The report is in part based on the results of a subcommittee hearing last year in Lincoln which Bereuter chaired and which focused on how government can help small businesses market alternative energy products.

"Consumers have very little access to information about solar energy equipment — cost, reliability, availability, financing, etc. Until consumers become familiar with solar energy, they will continue to have doubts about investing in it."

Bereuter suggested that the government sponsor a clearinghouse to provide consumer information on the practicality of solar technology.

"In addition to consumer uncertainty, solar technology is hampered by economic and financial barriers. Initial costs or steep downpayments are discouraging."

"But many people are unaware of low cost loans made available through the Energy Security Act. Individuals and businesses can also take advantage of new tax credits for using solar energy."

Bereuter also recommended regulatory streamlining to remove some of the paperwork and delays small businesses encounter in applying for Federal assistance for solar research and development. "Applicants face a mountain of paperwork and delays averaging 14 months before contracts are awarded. No wonder many small innovators throw up their hands in frustration and decide to forego a Federal loan or grant altogether."

The market for solar products extends overseas, according to Bereuter. Efforts should be made to encourage small businesses to sell their solar products abroad, he said.

Now Is the Time to Get Rid Of Rats, Mice As Winter Nears

Homes and farm buildings may have unwanted visitors this time of year as rats and mice seek food and shelter and as cold weather approaches.

Now is the time to take action to keep them out, according to Bob Timm, extension vertebrate pest specialist in the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

Preventing rodent entry requires closing any holes or gaps larger than one fourth inch across. A house mouse can squeeze through very small openings and any small hole or crack gives the rodent a starting place to quickly enlarge the hole by gnawing, Timm said.

Take a few minutes to inspect the outside of your home and farm buildings, he advised. Repair any holes, cracks or gaps with suitable materials.

Steel wool makes a good temporary plug, but permanent repair should be made as soon as possible with galvanized metal, concrete mortar or heavy gauge one fourth inch mesh hardware cloth, he said.

Avoid using wood, plastic thin aluminum sheeting or other materials which can be gnawed easily by rodents, he cautions.

Removing rodents' sources of food and shelter will discourage them from establishing residence. Clean up weeds, discarded building materials and debris from around buildings so rodents won't have a place to hide. Inside, keep stored feed such as dry pet food, bird seed and livestock feed in metal garbage cans or other rodent proof containers whenever possible.

When feed is stored in sacks, stack feed on pallets or shelves above floor level and keep feed away from walls. This allows easy inspection for rodent droppings or damage and it makes control easier to do, should it be necessary, Timm explains.

Where it is impractical to rodent proof buildings, or if rats or mice already are present, use of traps or toxic bait may be necessary. Traps are the method to try first in homes or where only small numbers of rodents are present. Standard wood-based snap traps are available at most hardware and home supply stores. They are effective when set properly and they allow you to remove the captured rodent from the building, he said.

Bait, traps with a mixture of peanut butter and rolled oats (for house mice) or a small piece of raw bacon tied to the trigger (for rats). Place traps against walls or in other sheltered locations where rodents are active.

Toxic baits may be necessary if rodents are present in large numbers, according to Timm. Most baits available for retail sale to the public contain anticoagulant drugs (warfarin or similar compounds) which cause death by internal bleeding, the specialist said. "To be effective, rodents must feed on the bait daily over several days time. As with all pesticides, toxic rodent baits may be hazardous to children, pets, and wildlife if used improperly, so follow label directions and store unused bait in a locked cabinet or room," he said.

If large infestations of rats or mice are present, a single dose poison may be needed first for efficient control. These materials are generally not available to the public, Timm explained, so for assistance, contact a professional pest exterminator.

Informational assistance and some types of rodent baits are available from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service — Division of Animal Damage Control in Lincoln (phone 402-471-5097). In addition, county extension offices have copies of two bulletins, "Controlling Rats" and "Controlling House Mice" available free of charge.

NOTICE TO FARMERS HE'S ONE OF US????

One of the 17th District Candidates — Merle Von Minden is running on the philosophy of "He is one of us" and "He will be here to listen to us" Both statements are very admirable, but let's look at a typical example of his real concern for the farmer while serving as a Dixon County Supervisor.

— Last Spring over 500 Dixon County Taxpayers filed protest with the Board of Supervisors in regard to the methods used to establish land values. How many meetings did this man who claims to be one of us even attend???

Is this man truly interested in the concerns of his friends and neighbors???
