Rudy Froeschle Wins Free Press Essay Contest

(Editor's Note: Rudy Froeschle of Wayne is this year's Free Press Essay Contest winner. The event is sponsored by The Wayne Herald in conjunction with the state Newspaper Association Managers.

This year's theme is "A Free Press Safeguards My Freedom." For his winning entry, Froeschle will receive $100 from The Herald. His entry will be submitted to the Nebraska Press Association for statewide competition.

The state winner will be announced Jan. 26, with that entry placed in competition on the national level. Froeschle's essay is reprinted here.

"Congress shall make no law...abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press...."

Funny thing about this and the other guarantees in the Bill of Rights. It offers protection from only one potential source of mischief: Congress.

Now if we read "Congress" to mean "our government," we can appreciate a unique inference regarding a free press in our system. If we are bothered by criminals, we call on the government. If a property dispute arises, we turn to the government. If another nation threatens, our government takes care of the situation. And yet, our government is specifically told that it can make no law abridging freedom of the press.

Why? Why is a private entity given a constitutional guarantee of "hands off?"

The answer is deeply rooted in English and American history, and boils down to this: only a press which does not labor under a threat of government interference can fulfill the basic need to protect the other freedoms. It is the "watchdog." If you will, of the government.

After all, it is the government that has police powers. The government has courts. The government has subpoena power. The government has jails.

So if citizens ever have to be protected from the government, who can do the job?

Our founding fathers were not strangers to English history. They were well aware of the problems of preserving personal freedoms in the face of governmental pressures. As English subjects and as Americans, some had personally experienced problems in maintaining their freedoms. They cared deeply and thought, discussed and read about freedom. The same problem stayed in front of them: how do you guarantee freedom from the very government which, by definition, must be strong enough to preserve peace and "assure domestic tranquility?"

Their experience, knowledge of history and common sense all pointed to the same solution: free speech and a free press offered the surest means to guarantee individual freedoms. As long as the means to communicate with the general population was beyond governmental restriction, they reasoned, freedom could be preserved.

The light of publicity, or the threat of it, was to be the primary safeguard for individual freedom.

The founding fathers had seen first hand the power of the press before and during the revolution. They had also seen the power of government.

They had seen the inevitable course of human nature: the errors, the foibles, the deceit which corrupt the dealings of the powerful.

They didn't believe that journalists were any purer or nobler than politicians or clerics or farmers; they simply realized that the press, if free from harassment, was best suited to the purpose of keeping check on those in power, while at the same time informing the citizenry. History and common sense converged to bring the point home at a very appropriate time.

In 10 years, we will celebrate the bicentennial of the Bill of Rights. It is debatable whether or not that is long enough to measure the success of the free press experiment; but this much is not debatable: a free press has been fundamental to preserving individual freedom and democratic government for the past 200 years.

Even with the benefit of 200 years of hindsight, second-guessers are without a respectable guess on how to better maintain a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

Former Student Taken to Norfolk

Evaluation Of Mental State Near

The former Wayne State College student who caused a scene at Ramsey Theatre Nov. 20 was transferred to Norfolk Regional Center Saturday for mental evaluation.

TERRY OBERST, 29, a student here from 1975-77, was scheduled for arraignment on a charge of criminal mischief Thursday. However, it was unclear late Tuesday afternoon whether or not he would be available for the hearing in County Court here.

A report on his evaluation is expected this week. It will be determined from the evaluation whether or not charges will stand as filed or if a mental health board will be convened.

The criminal mischief charge was filed by County Attorney Budd Bornhoff after Oberst damaged a drum and piano in Ramsey. In addition, however, Oberst is alleged to have threatened several persons — both law officers and civilians — with physical harm.

HE REPORTEDLY waved a lengthy butcher knife, which he later handed to Wayne State College professor Dr. Bob Johnson, for about 30 minutes. Oberst also allegedly threatened several persons with a rock and a deer antler.

After about an hour of profanity, jibberish and nonsensical yelling and talking, Oberst was subdued by five officers, handcuffed and taken to Wayne County Jail.

Pesky Fire Damages Shufelt's

FIRE VIRTUALLY DESTROYED the Allen Shufelt home at 314 W. First St. early Wednesday afternoon despite a two-hour effort by firemen. Wayne Volunteer Fire Department personnel were called to the smoke-filled residence shortly before noon and were still on the scene at 2 p.m., extinguishing smoldering ruins within the house. Although the home was not leveled, most of the interior was gutted, particularly the rear of the home where the roof finally was burned through and partially collapsed. It was unclear where the fire started, since flames occasionally flickered through windows in the front, sides, rear and basement of the home. Witnesses first on the scene said smoke was pouring out of a back door and from a basement window. There also was extensive smoke and water damage throughout all but the southwest corner of the house. The Shufelts were shopping when the fire broke out and arrived home to find their house in ruins. Neighbors and firemen carried as many undamaged personal belongings as possible through the front door while firemen fought small, pesky fires through basement windows and on the roof in the rear of the home. Ironically, the Shufelts were in the process of remodeling another home a short distance from their now-burned residence and were able to move several items there.

Detailed Records Recommended

Consumer Tips Given By Attorney

Keeping a thorough record is the best defense — or offense — against an unscrupulous insurance agent, used car dealer or landlord, an Omaha attorney said at Wayne State College Tuesday afternoon.

SAM VELESKI, managing attorney for the Legal Aid Society of Omaha, told students in the WSC family economics course they should keep all receipts, papers, documents, etc. involving any purchase of goods or services. If it appears a consumer is being frauded, the documents will be the best means of convincing a judge that the consumer is not at fault, he said.

Veleski said two problems he frequently finds is that consumers do not have necessary information handy or available when a problem arises, and that consumers have not kept an accurate and complete file of their financial dealings.

SPEAKING IN THE last of a series of lectures on contemporary issues in consumer economics, Veleski said all signed documents, warranties, receipts, promissory notes, agreements, etc., should be filed where they easily can be located if a consumer matter arises. In addition, he told the group, a diary should be kept of a problem once it arises.

Immediately after someone realizes a problem may exist, he should begin to recall on paper the exact details of the transaction, whether it be for renter's insurance, a landlord-tenant situation, purchase of a used car, or whatever. These notes on conversations with the other party and copies of letters sent to the other party will be valuable if the problem reaches court.

VELESKI ALSO suggested that the consumer write a letter to the other party once any type of unfavorable situation arises. The letter should state the consumer's side of the story and should state exactly what the consumer expects. This letter, also, should be filed with other important papers. "I want you all to realize that an attorney will not suffer the burden of the case. The best we do is take your money and give you some resolve" about the situation, he explained.

"The more you can do for yourself — keeping records, for example — the more efficient use you can make of another expert," such as a lawyer or even a judge, the University of Nebraska at Lincoln graduate said. People need to become more involved in the legal and consumer processes.

As an example of how consumers, especially in the Omaha area, are bilked or cheated, Veleski cited some unethical used car dealers. The attorney warned students never to sign any contract or agree orally to accept anything, as is. This eliminates any warranty, any promises and does not give any hint there was even any conversation between the buyer and seller.

VELESKI SPENT several minutes detailing potential problems involving landlords, particularly if no lease is involved.

A renter can only occupy a residence from month to month if there is no lease. In addition, a renter is subject to being asked to leave with only 30 days' notice, the Omaha attorney said.

On the other hand, the law requires that a renter give written notice of leaving. The attorney suggested that renters give notice for the next month or two days before rent is due. This way, he explained, a renter will not be forced to leave in the middle of the month even though rent is paid until the end of the month.

REGARDING DAMAGE deposits, Veleski said the deposit is supposed to be held for damages and should not be used for rent. Also, he offered, a renter does not have to pay for reasonable wear and tear on an apartment or house. The landlord has to show more damage than when the renter moved in, Veleski said.

The Legal Aid Society attorney also outlined the legal aid society program, explaining that it is set up for low income people who otherwise could not afford an attorney.

Legal aid can help if any civil legal problems are involved. These include landlord-tenant situations, when welfare is cut off, when a person wants a divorce, when a person's check is garnished, when someone's car is repossessed, etc.

LEGAL AID cannot handle criminal or misdemeanor cases (unless approved by the Court). Legal aid also cannot handle traffic court cases and cases where someone would be suing someone else for money.

Veleski said legal aid lawyers are real lawyers. They are permanent, full-time employees who are committed to seeing that poor people get good, competent legal representation. They are specialists in the areas of the law that most affect poor people.

And, he added, eligibility is determined by these factors:

IF THE TOTAL household income is below the poverty line, if someone receives either Aid to Dependent Children (ADC) or Social Security Income (SSI) and someone is age 60 or over, and the SSI or ADC income meets the special requirements which apply.

Speaking of People

HOMEMADE FOODS SUCH AS brownie mix, pancake mix and granola make great gifts when packaged in a variety of airtight containers and topped with a ribbon for a festive holiday look. Jars of home preserved food items also are unique holiday gifts for friends and relatives who may be too busy to take extra time in the kitchen.

Favorite Homemade Foods Make Great Holiday Gifts

The warmth, aroma and anticipation of baking in holiday kitchens entice curious noses of the young and old. Hot steaming soups and meats, fresh breads smothered with thick jam, or mugs of hot cocoa remind us of past holiday fun.

Traditional homemade foods made with a sprinkling of mother's love add their own flavor to the holiday festivities.

Some of those special homemade traditions are food gifts to friends and relatives who may be too busy to take extra time in the kitchen.

CANNED FOODS, homemade "convenience mixes" and snacks are three suggestions from Teresa Shaffer, extension food specialist at the University of Nebraska.

"Canned foods make good gifts because it is something people may not take the time to do for themselves," she said.

Although the number of food preservation recipes is limitless, Shaffer suggests canning food items that are good buys in December. These include poultry, pork, apples, cranberries, cabbage, pumpkin, citrus fruits and late season vegetables.

ONE RECIPE idea is for apple jelly. Jelly is made from fruit juice and is a sweet treat, especially homemade. The recipe calls for:

- 4 cups apple juice (about 3 pounds apples and 3 cups water)
- 2 tablespoons strained lemon juice, if desired
- 3 cups sugar

TO MAKE apple jelly without added pectin, use about 3 pounds tart, firm apples. About one fourth of the apples should be underripe. Sort and wash apples, remove stems and blossom ends and cut apples into small pieces. Do not pare or core.

Put apples into a kettle, add water, cover and bring to boil on high heat. Reduce heat and simmer until apples are tender or about 20 to 25 minutes.

Put cooked apples into a jelly bag and allow to drip or press to remove. Strain pressed juice through two thicknesses of damp cheesecloth with squeezing. Measure 4 cups of the juice into a large kettle. Add 3 cups of sugar and lemon. Stir to dissolve the sugar. Place on high heat and boil rapidly at 220 degrees F (8 degrees F above the boiling point of water).

REMOVE FROM heat and skim off foam. Pour jelly immediately into hot container. Fill ing glass to 1/2 inch of top and cover with a one eighth inch layer of paraffin. Cool jar on a metal rack or folded cloth, then label and store in a cool, dry place.

OTHER recipe suggestions include grape jelly and orange grapefruit jelly made from frozen concentrate, pickled pears, cinnamon spiced apple rings, cranberry conserve and canned turkey and chicken.

Packaging can "spice up" the homemade gift too. Shaffer said giving a hostess wine jelly sealed with paraffin in wine glasses provides two gifts in one—a homemade gift and a pair of wine glasses. A calico or gingham ribbon, a cap made from fabric remnants, an original label and a bit of imagination all add finishing touches.

HOMEMADE "convenience mixes" and snacks are another idea for gifts from the kitchen. The mixes must be stored in large airtight containers.

A variety of convenience mix recipes are available, including gingerbread, muffin, brownie and pancake mixes.

The pancake mix recipe calls for:

- 10 cups all purpose flour
- 2 1/2 cups instant nonfat dry milk
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1/4 cup baking powder
- 2 tablespoons salt

COMBINE ALL ingredients in a large bowl. Stir together to blend well. Put in a large airtight container, label and store in a cool, dry place. Use within six to eight months.

Be sure to include the recipe for Perfect Pancakes with your gift.

- 1 1/2 cups pancake mix
- 1 egg, slightly beaten
- 1 cup water
- 3 tablespoons vegetable oil

PUT PANCAKE mix in a medium bowl, combine egg, water and oil in small bowl. Add egg mixture to pancake mix, add more water for thinner pancakes. Blend well. Let stand five minutes. Cook on a hot oiled griddle about three to four minutes until browned on both sides. Makes 10 to 12 four inch pancakes.

A FAVORITE snack that can be made at home is country style granola. Shaffer said the recipe is from the Farm Journal's Homemade Snacks. The recipe calls for:

- 5 cups old fashioned rolled oats
- 1 1/2 cups wheat germ
- 1 cup shredded coconut
- 1 cup chopped peanuts
- 1/2 cup whole wheat bran
- 1/2 cup brown sugar
- 1/2 cup vegetable oil
- 1/2 cup water
- 2 teaspoons vanilla

STIR together oats, wheat germ, coconut, peanuts, wheat bran and brown sugar. Combine oil, water and vanilla, pour over cereal mixture and mix thoroughly. Turn into 15x10x1 inch pan, or other large, shallow pan. Bake in 350 degree oven one hour, stirring every 15 minutes. Cool and store in tightly covered container. Makes about 10 cups.

Every time we gather to celebrate Christmas we're bound together in new and deeper ways. That tender tug at our hearts tells us that Christmas is not just something that once happened — rather it's a blessed event that's happening here and now among us."

Randy's Recap

According to Randy Hascall

THIS HAS BEEN one of those weeks when nothing seems to go right. Murphy's Law wins again.

That's probably how the Nebraska football team felt after losing to Oklahoma. Hopefully, things will start to improve by this weekend.

TONIGHT IS the big night. Most wrestling and basketball teams across the state open gym action tonight, tomorrow or Saturday. For the next three or four months, these teams will compete.

It looks to me like most of the teams in the area should have average teams. A few seem to be weak this year but on the other hand, there should be a handful of really good teams.

On paper, it appears that our five school coverage area will have at least one good, strong team in each sport. Time will tell.

WITH THE END of the fall sports season come the all-state teams, chosen by Nebraska's two largest and most popular daily papers, The Omaha World-Herald and The Lincoln Journal Star.

Last Monday, I reported in this column that Lisa Peters of Wayne and Lisa Erwin of Allen were named respectively to the Class B All-State honorable mention list and the Class D All-State honorable mention list. Those two girls were pictured at that time.

This week, all state volleyball selections for The Omaha World-Herald and all-state football selections for both papers were released.

THE VOLLEYBALL TEAM chosen by the World-Herald was published in their Sunday edition and two other area girls were named to this honorable mention list.

Junior setter Jill Zeiss, of Wayne, was named to the Class B honorable mention list along with teammate spiker Lisa Peters, who also was named to the Lincoln Journal list last week.

The Class D honorable mention list had setter Colette Kraemer of Allen listed along with spiker Lisa Erwin also was named to the Lincoln Journal list last week.

Those four names were the only ones in the five school area that I could find in the All State lists. Congratulations to the ladies.

THE ALL-STATE football teams vary as far as honorable mention candidates are concerned. The differences are that Wakefield has two players represented in the World-Herald list and none in the Journal and Winside has one representative on the Journal's list and none in the Herald's.

Winside, which finished third in Class C 2 final ratings, is well represented in the selecting.

Brian Foote, a 5-6, 135 pound senior, was named to the Class C 2 first team offense as a kicker. His teammate, 5-8, 175 pound senior middle guard Brad Roberts was selected to the first team defense.

Those two Winside standouts were named to the first teams by both papers.

The Omaha World-Herald honorable mention list includes Alan Echtenkamp and Jeff Hallstrom of Wakefield and Randy Smith of Allen. The honorable mention list in The Lincoln Journal names Randy Smith of Allen and Joel Broekemeier of Winside. Congratulations to those players.

TOUGH LADIES, PREPARE! In order to find out who is the toughest woman in Sioux land, the Sioux City Municipal Auditorium and Tony Drake Productions are cooperating to organize "The Tough Woman Competition."

Early in 1980, the auditorium was the site of the "Tough Man Contest." Now, women have demanded equal rights.

The matches are scheduled tonight (Thursday) and tomorrow at the Sioux City Auditorium. Starting time is 8 p.m. both nights. Ticket prices are $8 for ringside seats and $5 for general admission.

A total of $1,500 in prize money is being offered. For more information call the auditorium at (712) 279-6157 or Tony Drake after 5 p.m. at 258-3071.

Promoters of the event are looking for more women to participate in the competition so if any readers are interested, this might be your big chance.

NEW HYDRA-PUSH™
SPREADER DESIGN
HELPS ELIMINATE
FREEZE-UP PROBLEMS

John Deere introduces a better way to spread manure the new 450 Hydra-Push Spreader with 217 cu-ft capacity (heaped, single beater). Hydraulic pushoff design replaces the conveyor chain, thereby eliminating the chance of conveyor chain and flights freezing down during cold weather spreading. Piggy-back hydraulic cylinders move the front pad of the floor and blade, pushing and carrying manure to the beater. The cleanout stage is eliminated so you can finish spreading faster than with conventional spreaders. Sides and floor on the Hydra-Push Spreader are bonded with a corrosion-proof material—manure won't freeze or stick to it. Spreader sides and floor are scraped clean as the blade moves the load to the beater. The 450 Hydra-Push spreader has fewer moving parts than conventional spreaders maintaining maintenance.

Stop by today and see the new 450 Hydra-Push Spreader!

Regional Vet School Issue Still Up in the Air

CAPITOL NEWS

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association

To build or not to build. That question has lingered in the minds of legislators ever since a proposal to build a regional veterinary school first surfaced years ago. Today the issue is still unresolved, at least in the minds of some lawmakers.

The Legislature's Education Committee this fall gathered considerable information on the merits of having such a facility, and on locating it in Lincoln.

Witnesses came from Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and Nebraska. Each state except Nebraska has or will have its own veterinary program. Nebraska "contracts" with other schools to take its veterinary students.

Some witnesses came armed with offers to accept Nebraska veterinary students in their programs. Other indicated they would, or could, open up more slots in their programs for Nebraska students. Although none of the out-of-state visitors really said so, they seemed to be interested in talking Nebraska out of going ahead and building its own veterinary college.

The vast information collected at that fall hearing has apparently aided the committee in taking a position on the issue. But the position may seem inadequate to some, especially vet school supporters.

Committee members recently decided they will not, as a committee, propose any vet school legislation to the 1981 Legislature. The decision, however, doesn't prevent committee members or other legislators from proposing their own legislation next year.

The committee had various options to consider during its deliberations. Among them was repeal or modification of a 1979 law that outlined procedures and conditions that would have to be followed or met if the vet school proposal got off the ground.

The 1979 law, which is now on the books, hinges on an Old West Regional Commission proposal to build the proposed vet college in Lincoln, associated with the University of Nebraska.

In deciding against preparing any committee sponsored legislation, committee members seemed to agree with Kearney Sen. Martin Kahle, who said, "We're better off just to cool it for a moment."

"The (NU Board of) Regents already has the power to do what some of you want to do," Kahle told his colleagues.

Committee chairman Gerald Koch of Ralston was joined by several others in supporting the need to increase the emphasis on research, something that vet school supporters say would occur if the regional college were built.

But Koch said money, and not legislation, is what's needed to increase the emphasis on research.

Despite the committee's action—or inaction—vet school proposals still may surface during the 1981 session. Sen. Loran Schmit of Bellwood, for example, has said he would ask his colleagues to approve a $15 million appropriation to build a vet school in Lincoln.

In addition, Fairmont cattle feeder William Krejci, a supporter of the proposed vet school, is leading a campaign to attract a $2 million to help the project.

The fate of the proposed vet school may still be unknown, but it is fairly certain now that the Legislature's Education Committee doesn't plan at this time to take an active role in settling the issue.

PSU stand firm
The flap at the Nebraska Public Service Commission over the alleged desk-rifling incident is back in the news again

Early in November, PSC Executive Secretary Terry Kubicek told the commissioners he was working late one night when he heard a commotion in Commissioner Jack Romans' office.

Kubicek said he went to investigate and watch briefly as Commissioner Eric Rasmussen of Fairmont allegedly rifled through the papers on Romans' desk. Kubicek said PSC staff attorney Jack Finnigan stood by during the alleged incident.

Well, the commissioners decided to punish the staffer by suspending him for one week without pay and placing him on probation for two months. A formal reprimand was placed in his file.

Finnigan soon announced his intention to appeal, but quickly found out there was no one to appeal to. If appeared that the commission's disciplinary action represented the last word in the matter. He went back to the commission last week and asked the commissioners to reconsider their action. But he didn't have any luck.

Commissioner Rasmussen, who claimed he and Finnigan were looking at a Ronald Reagan campaign poster in Romans' office, made a motion to reconsider. But his motion died for lack of a second, and it appeared Finnigan was stuck with the action that had been taken against him a week before. He probably could go to court, but he said he didn't plan to. If he did, however, he predicted a court would rule that the commission has to give him some kind of recourse.

Thone's new aides
The last few weeks have brought about some staff reassignments in the executive wing of the state Capitol.

And the reassignments for the most part seemed to be welcome at least by the Statehouse Press Corps. Things just haven't been the same at the Capitol since Thone aide Randy Moody, a former newsmen, left to head the Missouri River Marketing Office.

Moody would wander by the Capitol press office often to drop off news releases, see how things were going and just generally "keep in touch." Since Moody went over to the State Office Building for his new assignment, that once common press-to-Thone link has been missing.

But Gov. Charles Thone may have filled the gap with the recent appointment of Don Stenberg as the governor's assistant.

Stenberg is a frequent visitor to the Statehouse press office, and he seems to get along well with reporters. He always seemed to be accessible in his former capacity as director of the Policy Research Office, although reporters had few occasions to call on him there.

Stenberg, an attorney, also seems to get along well with state senators and lobbyists, not to mention state officials. His elevation to Thone's aid should benefit once the hectic days of the 1981 legislative session arrive.

Succeeding Stenberg at the Policy Research Office is Larry Bara, who served as Stenberg's deputy. Bara is no newcomer to state government. He has spent more than nine years working in the state offices, with most of that time spent in the Department of Economic Development.

Bara has been deputy director of the Policy Research Office since January, 1980. Bara's successor as deputy director is Betsy Palmer, who until Dec. 1 was chief of the human resources division of the Policy Research Office.

Thone had words of praise for all of his appointees, and said Mrs. Palmer's promotion was in line with his policy of elevating qualified women to key positions in his administration. Thone added that Mrs. Palmer's appointment was in support of his overall affirmative action program.

"WELL, WITH THE RISING CRIME RATE — AND ALL THAT CLATTER ON THE ROOF — HOW WAS I TO KNOW...?"

Transition Will Set The Tone

by Rep. Doug Bereuter
New Leadership
This transition period between the November election and Jan. 20, when the new President takes office, is a time when the tone is set for the incoming Administration and Congress.

ingness to reach out to a cooperative relationship with Congressional leaders from both sides of the aisle, with the Supreme Court and with the District of Columbia political and business community.

The new President, at least initially, will face a very friendly Senate controlled by his own party. The Democratic majority in the House may present some problems, but Mr. Reagan has some advantages there, too.

Another consideration is a new coalition emerging in the House of southern and western Democrats, who have already shown themselves to be conservative in fiscal and budgetary matters. This coalition, calling itself the "Redneck Caucus," is likely to side with Republicans as Mr. Reagan tries to put his economic and fiscal policies into effect.

Mr. Reagan's efforts to curb inflation, reduce unemployment, limit the growth of the Federal government and increase productivity depend in large part on changes in tax law. That's why these committees are so critical. House Speaker Tip O'Neill has indictated that he will try to stack the deck in the Ways and Means Committee (as well as the Rules and Appropriations committees) by insisting on a 2-to-1 plus 1 ratio in favor of the Democrats.

Such representation would be grossly unfair, considering the fact that Republicans will hold 44 percent of the House seats in 1981. The Speaker is also twisting the arm of Dan Rostenkowski, who stands in line to become chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, following the defeat of Al Ullman of Oregon.

O'Neill's game plan for committee ratios may fall anyway, since Senator Howard Baker, soon to be Senate Majority Leader, has said he will "play hard ball, too." If the House Republican minority's rights to equal treatment need to be protected.

So, in a sense, the new President's mandate is, at least in some part, a negative one — a repudiation of the Carter Administration. Nonetheless, he has a rare opportunity to set a bold, new course to get the country back on track. Apparently, he believes that cooperation instead of confrontation will bring the greatest success.

Boxing in Omaha — 1887
Over 20 years before heavyweight boxing champion Jack Johnson fought well-publicized sparring matches in Omaha in 1910, another pugilist named Johnson (Henry, the "Black Star") put in an appearance there. In 1887 boxing was not recognized as a reputable sport, and matches were held secretly outside the city.

"(Headlines) A One-Sided Prize Fight. Colored Pugilists Indulge in a Battle in the Early Morning Hours. The Black Star on his Muscle. A Brace of Black Bruisers."

"For some days past Mr. Henry Johnson, a pugilist, not a paper fighter, but one of those shoulder hitters that some people have read of in days gone by, has been in the city. He has met many men in the ring, and defeated them, and as a consequence, 'Fistiana' has given him the name of the 'Black Star'."

"Shortly after coming to this city, a match was made between him and a coffee-colored youth from South Omaha named Elliott Edwards, and the match came off yesterday morning just over the Sarpy County line. Very secretly it was given around that a fight to the finish was to occur. Consequently, lovers of sparring sport gathered together, and quite a large number left this city at midnight, southward bound."

"A ring was pitched on a nice little meadow. There was a creek running nearby, two or three coves (wooded areas) in an inviting distance (not city cops of course), a white-painted farm house on the left, a herd of cattle to the right, and a barbwire fence to the rear, as some of the party can swear to now, if their tailor does not forfeit his word of honor."

"The ring was pitched in good style, and as the grey dawn was breaking, and the chilled crowd were wishing that there was a bottle holder about."

"Elliott Edwards was escorted from his carriage. He stripped very favorably and looked in the best of trim. Mr. Miller, a well-known sport, attended to him, and wrapping him up warmly, he waited the appearance of his antagonist."

"The delay was not long, for the Black Star, accompanied by Tom O'Brien, jumped into the ring amid the cheers of the crowd. It was still a grey dawn. There was no sunlight to steal the dew from the trees about or lick it up from the prairie grass. Yet those around were certain that blood would have to color that dew before old Sol corrallied it."

Firemen Called

Allen-Waterbury Volunteer Firemen were called about 1:45 p.m. Friday afternoon to the Marilyn Karlberg farm where two hay stacks brought in last week from the field were on fire.

High winds caused sparks to land on all the farm buildings. Karlbergs lost a granary full of oats, a garage and shop, along with a weed sprayer, motorcycle, hay bales, plus many small farm utensils and tools.

Due to the high winds and the threat of loosing the house and barn, firemen were assisted by the Martinsburg and Wakefield departments.

Little-Known SSI Provisions Detailed

Persons in Northeast Nebraska nearing retirement age should know that a decision to postpone retirement could result in increased future social security benefits, Dale Branch, social security district manager in Norfolk, said recently.

"A worker who will be 65 years old before 1982," Branch said, "will receive an increase in social security benefits of one percent for each year—or one-twelfth of one percent for each month—from age 65 to 72 that he or she does not get benefits."

For workers who will not reach 65 until 1982 or later, the corresponding increase in benefits will be three percent a year or one-fourth of one percent a month. This credit applies even to workers who received reduced benefits before age 65.

Another provision is the special minimum retirement benefit for individuals who have worked under social security for at least 20 years. The special minimum benefit is designed for people who have had low earnings during their working years. The amount depends on the number of years of coverage.

In 1980 the minimum for a worker retiring at age 65 with at least 30 years of social security-covered employment is $252.80. The amount will be increased automatically in future years as the cost of living rises.

For more information about delayed retirement credits, contact the Norfolk social security office, located at 1310 Norfolk Ave., Norfolk. The telephone number is 1-800-642-8310.

USAF Reserve Scholarships

High school seniors who are interested in beginning their college careers with Air Force Reserve Officers' Training Corps Four Year College Scholarships should apply this fall, according to Col. Hugh D. McCracken, Jr., Air Force ROTC registrar.

Applications for four year scholarships starting in the 1981-82 academic year must be submitted to Air Force ROTC headquarters at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala., by Jan. 15.

About 1,560 college freshmen will start their college classes tuition-free this fall as members of Air Force ROTC. A four-year scholarship provides for payment of full tuition, books and most fees, plus a $100 monthly stipend during the academic year.

According to Colonel McCracken, students interested in Air Force ROTC scholarships should contact their high school guidance counselors or the Professor of Aerospace Studies at a local college or university hosting Air Force ROTC, or they can write to the Office of Public Affairs, Air Force ROTC, Maxwell AFB, Ala., 36112.

Spitze Honored Recently

WAYNE COUNTY Extension Agent Donald Spitze (right), was honored at the annual meeting of the Nebraska Cooperative Extension Association in North Platte, Nov. 20. Late this summer, Spitze received a Distinguished Service Award from the National Association of County Agricultural Agents (NACAA) at its annual meeting in Oklahoma City. At the North Platte session, Spitze formally was presented the NACAA award plaque by Roland Cooksley, Holdrege, outgoing president of NCEA.

Organic Farming Is Philosophy

Organic farming is more a philosophy than a technique or a technology, a nationally known agricultural economist said here Oct. 24.

Harold F. Breimyer, professor of marketing and policy at the University of Missouri-Columbia, discussed economics of that philosophy in Lincoln at one of four meetings held nationwide to discuss the U.S. Department of Agriculture's recent report on organic farming.

Americans should minimize the potential impact if the country moves in a major way toward organic farming, Breimyer said. "From the individual farmer to the economy as a whole, agriculture would be sharply different from what has been promoted in the last 30 years," he said.

"It is important to look at organic farming as a system with impacts in many related areas," he said. Breimyer said he would expect more integrated farming with both crop and livestock production on individual farms. Livestock need to be close to where crops are grown for the most economical and feeding of grain and use of animal manures, he said.

"Less regional specialization in food production should be anticipated," he said, with more diverse and self-sustaining farm units around the country. "Rising costs of energy for everything from fertilizer to transportation militate in favor of diversity and less shipping of foodstuffs across the country."

As organic farming methods are incorporated into conventional systems, agriculture will become more labor intensive, he predicted. Farmers will intensify their use of land and labor rather than capital to maximize gross output, he said.

"A shift to organic methods would mean a need to change national economic policy," he said. "Economic policy, mostly tax policies, favors capital-intensive agriculture. Incentives are changing, reversing the trend of the last 50 years. It would be wise if we change our thinking along with it."

What farmers regard as good and important also would have to change, he suggested. Tradition is a tremendous force, he cautioned, adding that altering the status and prestige attached to big tractors and harvesters may be the highest hurdle.

Breimyer told USDA officials and others attending the meeting that it isn't fair or practical to compare costs of conventional and organic farming simply on the basis of costs and returns.

To some extent costs that were external to conventional agriculture are internalized in organic farming, he said. Such practices as soil conservation and reducing pollution hazards are integral parts of farming organically, he said, while in much of conventional agriculture they are external and forced onto society.

With worldwide pressure to increase food production and the advent of grain for alcohol production, the U.S. could see a decrease in grain fed to livestock in order to maintain export stocks, he said. Livestock production would be more forage based, he noted. "With or without organic agriculture, there is some pressure away from feeding of grain to livestock."

Breimyer cautioned against regarding organic agriculture as a magic solution. Rather, he said, it is part of the total picture. "Organic agriculture might achieve its greatest contribution even as it loses its separate identity," he said.

Electronic Marketing May Alter American Commodity System

Will electronic marketing systems revolutionize the American system of buying and selling agricultural commodities as many proponents claim?

A flurry of activity in many quarters and a national symposium on electronic marketing sponsored by Texas A&M University, U.S. Department of Agriculture and the North Central Regional Research Committee on the Organization of the U.S. Food System furnish proof of interest in a new approach to traditional marketing methods. But perceptions as to the future of electronic marketing vary widely, according to Dr. Ralph D. Johnson, a U.S. Department of Agricultural Economics and Statistics Service (ESS) agricultural economist.

"Electronic marketing, as the term is loosely used at present, can mean anything from a telephone conference call to a highly sophisticated communication system capable of making thousands of transactions or sales per day between buyers and sellers located almost anywhere in the world," Johnson said. However, in general, the primary characteristics of electronic marketing are:

Transactions or sales are made through a single or central point.

All buyers and sellers regardless of size or location have equal access to the market.

Products are offered for sale and sold on the basis of grades and/or standards rather than personal inspection.

Dr. Johnson, who has been working on development and adoption of an electronic marketing system for livestock for more than 10 years, views the impact and benefit of the National Symposium on Electronic Marketing of Agricultural Commodities, held in Dallas, Texas in March, and the September published proceedings, as "a mixed bag."

Johnson, who is stationed in the Department of Agricultural Economics, Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources, said he is pleased that

USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service and the Secretary of Agriculture "recognize the potentials of electronic marketing and are willing to commit a substantial amount of resources to its development."

"In addition to AMS staff time, this commitment amounted to $847,000 in matching grants in 1978 to 1979 and $439,000 going into matching grants in 1980. One million two hundred and eighty six thousand dollars is a very significant three year commitment to electronic marketing and I comment AMS' Administrator Schlei and Secretary Bergland for their support of this concept."

"It is most unfortunate," Johnson said, "that the National Symposium demonstrated a general lack of understanding on the part of the various participants (some 400 attended) with respect to the requirements of a marketing system that is both physical and price efficient."

Six different marketing methods or proposals were discussed and several were demonstrated at the Symposium, Johnson said, and they varied widely in physical and pricing efficiency.

However, Johnson declared, none is as conceptually advanced as the electronic auction marketing of hogs that was developed by the Ontario, Canada, Pork Producers Marketing Board in 1961 or the adaptation of the Ontario marketing method for the marketing of fed cattle that he developed in 1971 and was published as Nebraska Experiment Station Bulletin N 520.

Johnson said "none of the six electronic marketing methods unveiled at the Symposium is conceptually capable of maximizing physical and pricing efficiency as are either the Ontario electronic auction market or the Nebraska adaptation."

Johnson said the more serious conceptual defects in the six methods involve the pricing process. He said "several of the methods use the offer (seller) and bid (buyer) matching pricing process, which in addition to being physical and price inefficient, also virtually guarantee that the producer will receive less for his product than its competitive price."

Johnson contrasted the offer and bid matching approach and the auction pricing method: The former requires considerably more resources and is considerably less competitive than the latter. "Since sellers want to get all they can for their product, their first offer to sell usually will be higher than they will receive or what they expect to receive. The buyers, on the other hand, want to buy as cheaply as they can and as a consequence, their first bids usually will be lower than what they will have to pay. Given, then, that the initial offering price is usually too high and the initial bid price is too low, both prices quite likely will need to be revised several times before they are matched and a sale is made."

"The adjustment process requires not only the attention of both the seller and the buyer of their agents, it also requires a capability of accepting offers and bids, matching offers and bids, withdrawing and re-entering offers and bids, and providing a number of offerings and bidding aids, e.g. a listing of offers, bids and sales. The time and operational requirements of an offer and bid matching pricing method is significantly greater and hence significantly more costly than that of the auction method of pricing."

In addition to not being physically efficient, Johnson said, the offer and bid matching methods of pricing is conceptually incapable of being price efficient. "This pricing method to a large degree ignores the fact that competitive prices are not and cannot be determined only by buyers bidding against buyers. The seller, once the product has been produced, has absolutely no price negotiating role in determining the competitive price of his product."

Individual producer involvement in the competitive pricing process, e.g. specifying an offering price, biases the pricing process against the producer and invariably results in a lower price than that resulting from buyers bidding against buyers."

"Since buyers accept only offering prices that are equal to or less than what they can or are willing to pay, the producer has absolutely nothing to gain; but, may very well receive less than he would have received had he not specified an offering price," the economist reasoned.

Johnson also listed several additional shortcomings that adversely affected the physical and/or pricing efficiency of the various electronic marketing methods described at the Symposium. These include: the liveweight pricing of slaughter animals, an excessive number of seller terminals, an over reliance on the part of the seller with respect to product value, insufficient emphasis on the need for a highly qualified marketing staff, the simultaneous bidding on several offerings, failure to notify all buyers simultaneously of the selling price, and the lack of an overall plan for expanding their initial service area into a national product market.

The National Symposium quite likely may have done more harm than good, Johnson speculated, because of "the lack of consensus or understanding of the requirements of a marketing mechanism that is both physical and price efficient, and the fact that none of the electronic marketing methods discussed are as conceptually advanced as the Ontario Hog Producers Marketing Board method developed 20 years ago, or the ESS UNL adaptation for fed cattle outlined 10 years ago."

Low Cost Solar Use Is Examined

Questions about establishing a solar collector on an existing farm building at a low cost have been answered in part by research carried out by University of Nebraska ag engineering staff members.

Dr. James DeShazer, professor of agricultural engineering, presented a paper on this topic at the American Society of Agricultural Engineers Energy Symposium recently at Kansas City, Mo. Co-authors for the paper were Dr. Dennis Schulte, associate professor of agricultural engineering and Dr. Bobby Moser, associate professor of animal science.

According to DeShazer, a solar collector was installed on a farm building without added thermal storage. This reduced the winter heating bill by 25 percent. With an active solar system, additional energy was necessary to bring the energy into the building such as the use of blowers. With this consideration DeShazer estimated the total energy consumed would be reduced to eight percent.

To use solar energy efficiently, a storage system should be used for active collectors. A passive system (such as windows) doesn't need this storage but the temperature may become too high during the day and too low at night. Additional mass may be necessary to prevent this," he said.

After all the experiments were completed, researchers concluded that the total heating bill was essentially reduced by 25 percent with a variety of insulations under Nebraska weather conditions.

"The savings can't be measured at the fuel tank. A total energy budget along with the electric bill must be added together to determine how much is saved," DeShazer said.

It's Christmas Tree Time

When the holiday season approaches, Christmas trees are one of the first things that come to mind.

And it's not too early to start thinking about buying a tree. Many of the choose-and-cut Christmas tree farms in Nebraska open the weekend after Thanksgiving and stay open, mostly on weekends, until their supply runs out or until Christmas, whichever comes first.

Joe Range, extension forester and assistant state forester in the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources, noted that there are 50,000 to 60,000 fresh trees available from more than 20 Christmas tree plantations in 14 Nebraska counties. He added that those are only the known farms — there may be more.

If you want to choose and cut a fresh tree but don't know where to find a tree farm, Range said to check with your local county extension agent for a listing of tree farms. Many farms also advertise with signs by the highway.

"This year, more than 300,000 live trees are expected to be used by Nebraskans," Range said. This figure includes pre-cut trees sold from lots.

Christmas tree buyers apparently have been choosing a lot of Scotch pines in Nebraska, Range said, as it shows up as the most popular species. "The needles are not extremely long, the tree looks symmetrical and full," he explained. Austrian pines also grow well in Nebraska so it has been another good-selling species. "There's also a renewed interest in fir trees, but they are not easily grown here. They are sold on already-cut lots, though," the forester said.

If you look at a tree and wonder why it costs as much or as little as it does, Range said a few factors influencing cost of a tree include its symmetry — most people look for a triangular-shaped tree; the tree's fullness; the species; and the height. Another factor which would decrease value would be a lack of branches in one area of a tree.

Once that tree is chosen and carried home, Range stressed "water, water, water" as the most important way to care for the tree. It should be kept in water at all times and, if not brought into the house right away, should be kept in the shade and out of the wind.

"It really is preferable to keep it in a cool, moist place until ready to decorate," he said. As for additives to the water, Range warned that many things tend to dry out a tree rather than delaying its drying, so plain water is the best thing to use. Some fire-retardant chemicals may dehydrate a tree. Under certain situations, trees in public places require fireproofing. Check with local fire chief for details.

If you buy a spruce for a Christmas tree, added caution should be used, as this species tends to dry out much more quickly than other varieties. Range said a spruce may last only two weeks or less before a shower of needles falls.

Buying and caring For Christmas trees

Select and buy your tree early if you want a particular kind of tree. Keep in a cold, shady area until ready to put in the house. If you have a spruce tree, wait until just before Christmas to put it up. It will shed its needles before the season is over if it is put up too early. Most other kinds of trees can be put up early.

Always shake tree well before bringing in house to get rid of the dead needles. Make a new cut at the base to expose new wood. Place in a stand that will hold water. Add water to the tree as long as the tree uses it. The water helps to keep the tree fresh and fire resistant.

Nebraska Public Power District

GENERAL OFFICE
P. O. BOX 499, COLUMBUS, NEBRASKA 68601
TELEPHONE (402) 564-8561

Dear Electricity User,

SUBJECT: 1981 Electric Rates

Increasing electric rates is one of the least pleasant responsibilities of a utility and having to increase rates beyond what had been expected is even more difficult.

No one likes to pay higher prices for anything — even something as vital as electric energy. The fact is a combination of unforeseen events happened to Nebraska Public Power District during 1980. In addition, the current inflationary spiral has, and will continue to result in higher costs for fuel, labor, material and supplies. The combination of these factors forces us to raise rates in 1981 in order to meet the financial obligations required by our bond indentures.

These troublesome events were not only costly during 1980 but we will continue to experience related costs during 1981.

Blade problems in the Brown-Boveri high pressure turbine at the recently completed Gentleman Station Unit No. 1 coal-fired plant near Sutherland and disc cracking in the Westinghouse low pressure turbine at the Cooper Nuclear Station near Brownville forced a reduction in the energy output of those two low-cost generating facilities and required us to make modifications to certain plant equipment.

We also had to replace some lost generation from our Sheldon Station coal-fired plant near Hallam when that facility was forced off the line for a time due to the failure of a large transformer. There also was the cost of replacing the transformer.

We purchase some electricity from the Omaha Public Power District's new Nebraska City coal-fired plant and our rate-making process failed to include all the costs which were incurred at that plant and at our new Gentleman Station. This was partially due to inexperience with the start-up of such large generating facilities. These costs include fuel oil for start-up of the boiler, operational costs and maintenance costs.

In the aftermath of the Three Mile Island nuclear incident, we have been required to spend millions of dollars for additional safety features at our nuclear plant. Operation and maintenance costs to meet environmental standards, such as those for electrostatic precipitators at Gentleman and Sheldon Stations, continue to be a major drain on our revenue.

Both our retail and wholesale customers used less kilowatt-hours of electricity than we had anticipated due to the milder than normal weather during the first six months of 1980. This resulted in revenue being considerably below what we had budgeted.

All of these unusual events created the requirements for additional dollars but, unfortunately, no utility is capable of budgeting for the unexpected type of costs that beset us during 1980.

Although the inflation that is making a shambles of your budget is doing the same to us, we've made substantial cuts in our 1980 and 1981 budgets. This includes such areas as administration, transportation and construction and we're going to go on doing everything we can to offset the unexpected costs, short of losing reliability. That's a promise.

We don't expect you to like the higher rates we will have to charge, we just hope you will understand that we have no alternative.

Sincerely,

D. W. Hill

Arthritis Strikes More Women

Rheumatoid arthritis strikes women three times as often as it strikes men, according to Dr.

John A. Hurley, member of the Medical and Scientific Committee for the Nebraska Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation.

"We don't know why rheumatoid arthritis discriminates against women," he said. "There is no evidence that hormonal differences between men and women have anything to do with it, but no one is really sure."

Other forms of arthritis are even more discriminatory. Systemic lupus, for example, strikes nine times as many women as men. On the other hand, ankylosing spondylitis (arthritis of the spine) and gout are more commonly seen in men.

Although the causes of these kinds of arthritis are unknown, treatments are available to relieve pain, to prevent unnecessary crippling and to allow a productive life in most people who have them.

For more information about arthritis, contact the Nebraska Chapter of the Arthritis Foundation. Their address is 120 North 69th Street, Omaha, Neb. 68132.
