Farmers Form Carroll Irrigation Association

By Randall Howell

In a first-of-its-kind move for northeastern Nebraska, more than a dozen Wayne County farmers have formed the Carroll Irrigation Association to computer schedule center-pivot units on their irrigated cropland.

Meeting in Carroll late last week, the farmer irrigators formally organized the association and hired Kristin (Anderson) Loberg, who farms with her husband Dan north of Carroll, as moisture block station installer and moisture meter reader.

In addition, Loberg, 22, the daughter of rural Wayne dairyman John R. Anderson, has been retained to assist the association members in gathering irrigated crop data for building computer models that will serve as keys for scheduling water application from their center-pivot units.

ACCORDING TO Don Spitzke, Wayne County extension agent, the formation of the association, while not unique in Nebraska, is a first for Wayne County and northeast Nebraska.

Spitzke said some irrigators in the southern and southwestern part of the state are doing the same thing.

Crops included in the Carroll association's 1981 growing-season project include corn, soybeans, alfalfa and grain sorghum, according to Spitzke, who said he was pleased with the variety the group's founders brought into the program.

tion, which faces a June 23 computer deadline, Loberg will be serving as a liaison between the irrigator and the extension office's AgNet computer.

ESSENTIALLY, the young farm woman will be reading moisture blocks in the irrigators' center-pivot-unit fields and plugging the data into a preprogrammed computer model for analysis and water application scheduling.

"We're real enthused about it," Loberg said. "We're real concerned about water conservation and we feel this is an important tool to get started."

Loberg said she is busy helping the farmers organize, write the contracts for association-funded services, and setting up moisture-block station installation schedules.

In addition, she said she is working closely with the irrigators to gather the necessary crop data required by the computer to build the field-by-field model used to calculate irrigation schedules for association members.

"HOPEFULLY WE can get that information this week and begin to install the moisture-block stations by next week at the latest," she said.

Loberg's liaison work is expected to continue through the later part of August — the end or near-end of the growing season.

She said the association still is signing up new members "with three or four" likely to join in the next day or so.

Moisture-block station installation must be completed, she said, by Saturday, June 12, in order to meet the computer deadline. Moisture blocks, which measure the amount of water in the soil, must be installed for 10 days before farmers can get an accurate reading of irrigation needs, she explained.

THE MOVE by Carroll area farmers to organize around a structure to manage irrigated cropland moisture needs, not only brings northeast Nebraska into the forefront of sophisticated irrigation scheduling, but also focuses attention of the need for improved water application, according to Spitzke.

According to the county extension agent, almost every irrigator uses some form of cropland water application scheduling, but few avail themselves of the latest data and most accurate techniques.

"Irrigation scheduling is simply a method of making the most efficient use of irrigation water," Spitzke explained.

"In some cases irrigators are using too much water, and in other cases they aren't

Tireless Tricycle Tot Rides for Winside

IT WAS A HOT and windy day in Winside, but that didn't hold back little Jamie Holdorf, the nearly 3-year-old son of Randy and Joni Holdorf, Winside, as he took on the high school athletic track Sunday. With the wind at his back, but without a tire on his front tricycle rim, Jamie pushed his pedals for a complete turn of the Winside High School track during the opening ride for Winside's bike-a-thon. Funds from the Community Improvement Committee project are earmarked to improve Winside's park, picnic and recreation equipment. The track was filled with village youngsters on two-wheelers Sunday afternoon during the ride for Winside. More photos Page 10B.

ESU Board Taps Wayne Men To Steer Evaluation Project

Education Service Unit One's internal evaluation has been launched with the selection of two Wayne men as co-chairmen of the project steering committee.

Waldo Johnson, former superintendent of Wausa School District, and Arnold Emry, professor of education at Wayne State College, have agreed to serve as ESU evaluation steering committee co-chairmen, according to Harry Mills, Unit One administrator.

Both educators appeared at the ESU meeting in Laurel Tuesday night to confirm their intention to share chairmanship duties for the duration of what is expected to be a top to bottom internal evaluation that includes the unit's board of directors.

WALDO, NOW retired and living in Wayne, was initially approached for the position, but turned it down last month for reasons that involved a question on his income limit under teachers retirement regulations.

The former superintendent also had expressed reservations, according to Mills, regarding an evaluation without guidelines.

Emry, a former teacher and principal in the Allen schools, was brought into the consideration during a May 27 meeting of the board's selection committee. Committee members included Mills, Kenneth Olds and Randy Shaw, both board members.

According to Mills, the internal evaluation is expected to begin this summer with a completion target date of November or December. However, several board members have suggested that the evaluation may take nearly a year to complete.

THE ESU also is facing an external evaluation project to get underway during the second semester of the coming school year, according to Mills.

While getting the internal evaluation off the ground, board members are planning for the external evaluation — an evaluation that will involve the use of personnel and resources outside the unit.

Early in May, board chairman William Wiese, who was not at Tuesday night's meeting, had asked the selection committee to present the board with the names of candidates for the internal evaluation at the June 2 session.

During a discussion on the internal evaluation Tuesday night, William Norvell questioned the reasoning behind the unit advisory committee's suggestion that superintendents within the district be avoided for membership on the evaluation committee.

MILLS SAID the committee simply questioned the wisdom of having any superintendent serve because the school district officer may evaluate only in terms of services to his district.

The advisory committee also questioned selecting any K-12 board members serving on the internal evaluation committee. According to Mills, the advisory committee members said they felt those board members would go to their local superintendent for advice.

Norvell indicated he was concerned about whether schools would be represented on the evaluation committee.

A discussion ensued regarding the "continued service" of board members Olds and Shaw — both members of the chairmanship screening committee.

"I WOULD see nothing wrong with board members serving on the (internal evaluation) committee," Olds said.

"My feelings are that we were to work with Mills on preliminary things for the evaluation," Shaw said.

Acting Chairman Darrell Merry suggested the question be resolved at the board's July meeting.

Both Johnson and Emry declined to comment specifically on the evaluation, asking that they be given an opportunity to meet with members of the board regarding the direction the evaluation is to take and the process for committee-member selection.

"I wouldn't want to make any comments until we have a meeting," Johnson told the board members.

"Our concern is what the board has in mind, then we'll have something to go on," Emry added.

JOHNSON SAID that whenever Wiese called the meeting, he and Emry were ready.

Mills agreed to contact Wiese to set up the meeting and briefed the board on some of the differences between an internal and external evaluation.

Board member David Hay said that, as he understood it, the original idea behind the evaluation was to involve people from inside and outside.

And, in reference to several points made by Mills regarding evaluations conducted in school districts, Hays said: "We're not a school... and we are not a school board. We're members of ESU One and the sooner we get that straight the better off we'll be."

BOARD MEMBERS then discussed a motion, introduced by Shaw, to give chairman Wiese authority to set up an advisory committee to work with Johnson and Emry on evaluation committee membership.

Hay challenged the intent of the motion. "Are we defeating our purpose already," he asked. "I won't vote for that motion."

Later Hay said he challenged the motion, which passed, because: "I believe they (the co-chairmen) are the ones who should decide who the hell is on the committee. We shouldn't try to tell them, what to do. They

Wayne Phone Center to Remain Open Despite Ma Bell's Reshuffle

Despite reports to the contrary, a Northwestern Bell Telephone official insists that the company's Wayne office will not be closed in the foreseeable future.

"We are not closing down the office in Wayne," Jim Parks, Norfolk based manager for residential and business telephone service, told The Wayne Herald Tuesday.

"We are doing quite a bit of consolidating for reasons of economics and because of deregulation," said Parks, who was in Wayne on business with Kenneth A. Berglund, local Northwestern Bell manager.

PARKS EXPLAINED that the telephone company has been forced — because of Federal Communications Commission regulations involving deregulation of utilities — to get out of the phone-set leasing business by the end of the first quarter of 1982.

"The company will not be leasing phone sets back to subscribers after April 1, 1982," Parks said. "That's the deadline we have to comply with from Washington."

He said deregulation, plus a statewide study by Northwestern Bell designed to consolidate, economize and upgrade the company's residential and business telephone service has prompted some shuffling.

Parks said that the company is shifting its residential service center for the Wayne area to Omaha on Oct. 1.

"THE BUSINESS telephone service center has been in Omaha for several years," he said, explaining that the residential service center, which is now in Norfolk, will be moved to Omaha.

"What we're really doing is consolidating paperwork," he added.

Parks said Wayne's telephone installation and repair service will remain in Wayne, as will cable maintenance service and central office personnel, including Berglund and a crew of five.

Pat Dale, who handles the customer phone-set service at Wayne's Phone Center Store and other bookkeeping work, has accepted a transfer to Sioux City, Iowa, after 12 years with the local office.

Dale's transfer is expected to take place in July, Parks said, reiterating that Berglund and the Wayne central office crew would remain.

NORTHWESTERN Bell's residential service reorganization for Wayne area customers is happening in conjunction with the transfer of some business-office services from Norfolk to Omaha, according to Parks.

Parks said Northwestern Bell is not only studying phone service efficiency and consolidation in the northeast part of the state, but also throughout its five-state region, which includes Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota and both Dakotas.

"We've been studying small Phone Center operations across the state for some time," he said. "We may have to close some and reduce hours in others. This (the Wayne) Phone Center also was studied."

Parks said Dale's acceptance of a Sioux City transfer "just brought us about to make a decision here sooner than expected."

PARKS SAID Wayne's Phone Center Store will stay open, but may face the possibility of reduced hours. "At this time there are no plans to close it," he said.

The Northwestern Bell official said the company would be looking to replace Dale at the Pearl Street store.

According to Parks, after Oct. 1, residential customers will simply call an Omaha number for service or installation. That order, he said, will be sent back to the Wayne exchange via computer, and "the work will be done by you local people."

Currently, Parks explained, the work is dispatched out of Norfolk and handled by Berglund's local crew.

"I BELIEVE the phone service will actually be better here because our record-keeping will be of better quality," Parks said.

"I feel it will be equal to and probably better than service in the past," he added.

A number of Wayne businessmen have expressed concern that the move from Norfolk to Omaha might spell a closing for the Wayne office.

Parks confirmed that the telephone company would have to get out of the phone-set leasing business soon. But, he did say that the company has the option of phone-set sales, though it cannot sell the equipment under the same roof housing telephone service.

So, that aspect of the Wayne Phone Center Store will close within a year.

Rescue Units Approved

Ed Craren of the State Health Department's Division of Emergency Medical Services recently inspected the Winside Rescue Squad and the Hoskins Rescue Squad and said they both meet or exceed the requirements for state licensure.

Items inspected include: ambulance equipment, record keeping, maintenance, sanitary procedures, and personnel training.

Annual ambulance inspections are required under a law passed by the 1975 Legislature to assure that ambulance services and rescue squads in Nebraska have the capacity to provide quality emergency medical care for victims of accidents or sudden illness.

Myers to Train in Manitoba

WSC Shares in Mutual Aid

Wayne State College was among 90 educational institutions sharing in over $61,000 generated by the Mutual of Omaha United of Omaha Voluntary Aid to Education Program.

Under the program, Mutual and United match donations made by employees to educational institutions of their choice.

Since the programs inception in 1960, the Companies and participating employees have joined to contribute more than $520,000 toward the betterment of higher education.

Employees donated a record total of $30,998.24 in 1980. This amount was matched by Mutual and United.

Anderson is a 1981 graduate of Wayne High School.

The Wayne Police Department will run a bicycle safety school June 10-12.

Open to children 6-12 years of age, the students will see a film on bicycle safety, ride around the Wayne residential area, and be tested in riding ability.

Certificates will be given to those who complete the school. Bikes may also be registered for 50 cents.

Dental Consultants Named

Dr. P. V. Byers of Wakefield and Dr. W. E. Wessel of Wayne have been appointed by the Board of Trustees of the Nebraska Dental Association to be the County Dental Health Consultants for Dixon and Wayne counties.

Three Newcastle Men Still Missing After Walking Along Missouri

Mark Schulte

David Kuhl

Vaughn Zerbe

Searchers hoped water temperature would force the bodies of three Newcastle men — reported missing and presumed drowned Monday — to the surface of the Missouri River sometime Wednesday.

The Dixon County Sheriff's Department, which has been on the scene since the Wayne National Guardsmen were reported missing at 8 p.m. Monday, said there was still no sign of the bodies at 11 a.m. Wednesday.

A special team of Omaha divers searched the rain-swollen Missouri throughout the night Tuesday for the bodies of Vaughn Zerbe, 18, David R. Kuhl, 19, and Mark Schulte, 19, all of Newcastle.

ACCORDING TO THE Dixon County Sheriff, Dean Chase, the young men were wading along a sandbar with three others — another man and two women — just before they were reported missing.

With six of them on the sandbar, two of the men stepped in to a water hole estimated by searches to be 35 feet deep. A third jumped into the water in a rescue attempt, but also disappeared.

Their companions made it to the nearby Palmer Lund farm to call for help, according to the Sheriff's Department.

Rescue units from both Newcastle and Ponca responded as did the Newcastle Police and Dixon County Sheriff's Department. Additional help arrived from the state Game and Parks Commission, the Wayne National Guard Unit and the Coast Guard.

A SPECIAL National Guard diving team was to have helped in the search, but developed equipment problems. An Omaha diving team took over.

Dixon County Deputy Sheriff Larry Mason coordinated Tuesday's search effort, working with about 40 volunteers from the various units.

According to Mason, a 3-inch rainfall Tuesday morning hampered the search, making the Missouri River water too muddy for divers. Mason said current was swift around the sandbar and that the river changes quickly at that point.

VAUGHN IS the son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Zerbe. David is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Kuhl and Mark is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Phil Schulte.

Both David and Mark graduated from Newcastle High School in 1980 and attend Northeast Technical Community College, Norfolk this past year.

Vaughn graduated from high school at Newcastle this year and had planned to attend NTCC this fall.

All three had joined the National Guard and spent last summer together at guard camp.

sheriff's log

A chain reaction vehicle accident in Carroll Sunday damaged three vehicles and sent two persons to the Providence Medical Center with minor injuries.

Lori L. Timperley, Hahn, Carroll, and a passenger in the car at the time of the 12:48 a.m. accident were treated for knee injuries and head bruises according to the Wayne County Sheriff's Department.

Hahn's northbound car, a 1981 Buick, struck the rear of a parked vehicle owned by Laura Fredrickson, Carroll on state Highway 57 between the two south intersections within the village, according to the accident report.

THE IMPACT sent the parked car, a 1979 Mercury, into a third parked car, another 1979 Mercury, owned by Janelle Fredrickson, Grand Island, the Sheriff's Department reported.

The Grand Island car was pushed across the street by the impact. It struck a tree.

According to the Sheriff's Department, Hahn fell asleep at the wheel and her vehicle veered into the parking lane on Highway 57.

Welcome Aboard... the Rainbow Express

It sounded like another "innocent" vacation Bible school program — you know, the ones only parents attend and tolerate because their little angels are spitting out a few lines of "Jesus Loves Me."

Wrong. One glance at the set sent suspicions about a run-of-the-mill program fleeing. And the moment that little Randy Quist (far right) stepped on the stage in a chicken suit and shouted, "Welcome Aboard the Rainbow Express," the suspicions were gone.

"The Rainbow Express" was performed by the entire group of vacation Bible schoolers at the United Methodist Church in Laurel. It debuted Saturday night and closed Sunday morning.

Every part of the school's curriculum, from the songs to the crafts to the Bible lessons, was fitted into the creation of the play, according to Ellie McBride, the show's organizer.

Work on the songs began last Easter. Finishing touches were added during the Bible school.

The play's theme was the story of Noah and his ark. Nine pairs of the youngest students were dressed as animals, ranging from skunks to elephants to bears, played by Amanda McBride and Joshua Erwin (top).

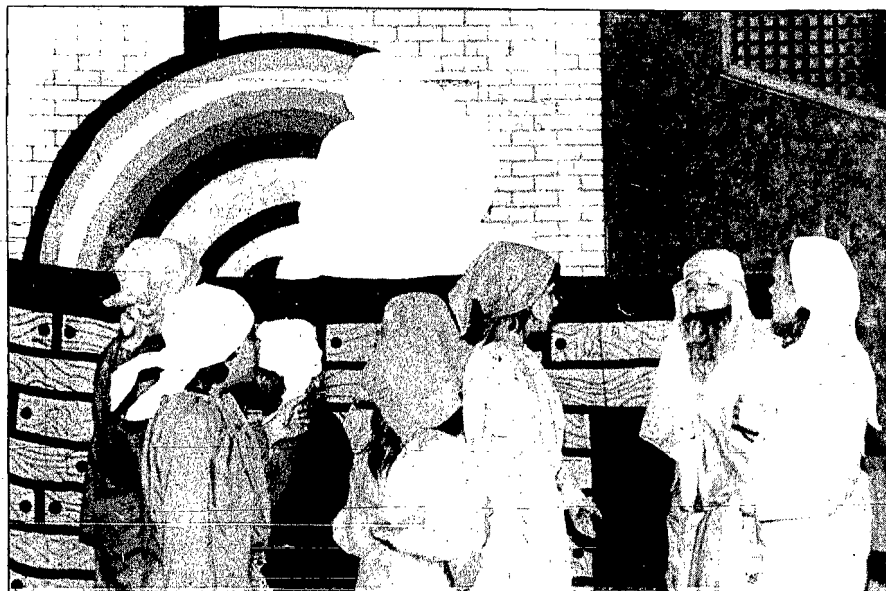

And Noah couldn't forget his insects. In fact, Harry Bug (bottom, played by Greg Ward) seemed a little flighty as he approached the ship. But he calmed down after Mabel Bug accepted his marriage proposal.

Nerves seemed to grow lazier as the ship sailed on with the endless rainfall. The sailors marched, danced, and tried to fish (Noah wouldn't let them as they needed both worms) to keep from being bored. And Mrs. Noah (below, played by Stacy Strawn) had problems just trying to keep the ship clean.

But Noah (played by Craig Crookshank) persevered in his faith, and finally the clouds parted to reveal God's rainbow (center).

Some Bolder Strokes for Older Folks

By LaVon Beckman

"It stimulates your mind," says Bonnie Freeman about her favorite pastime — painting — which in recent years has become more of a profession.

"It can be easier as you get older because you have experience to go on," declares the 72-year-old Oregon woman, who began painting seriously about four years ago following her retirement from nursing.

BONNIE, who is in Wayne this week visiting her sister, Leila Maynard, will display about 20 of her paintings at an art show sponsored by the Wayne Regional Arts Council.

The show, being held today (Thursday) and Friday in the Wayne Woman's Club room, also features art works by longtime Wayne resident Elaine Neiman, who also began painting as a hobby in recent years.

The public is invited to view art works by the two women from 4 to 8 p.m. Thursday and between the hours of 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. on Friday. A reception for the artists will be held at the show on Thursday from 6 to 8 p.m.

MRS. FREEMAN, the former Bonnie Mitchell of Wayne, left this area nearly 50 years ago and has made her home in Oregon, by way of California, since 1953.

For the past six years she and her husband Roy have lived in a rural area about 35 miles from Roseburg, in southwest Oregon, where both have plenty of space to pursue their hobbies.

Bonnie spends most of her free time painting in a private studio she set up in their home, and Roy enjoys tinkering in mechanics.

He can make a piece of working machinery from what looks like a heap of junk," smiles Bonnie, who also credits her husband of six years for much of the recognition she has received as a painter.

"I couldn't do it without him," says Bonnie fondly. "He certainly encourages me."

BONNIE began painting about 20 years ago. It wasn't until about four years ago, however, following her retirement from a career in nursing, that she seriously began developing her skills and immersing herself in her work.

Since then she has had several shows in Oregon has begun taking commissions as well as selling art works of her own creation.

Her largest painting, 20' x 30', hangs in Mt. Tabor Church, a large church in Portland, Ore. and depicts the book of Revelation. The congregation has asked Bonnie to do a companion painting and she plans to begin work on that when she returns to Oregon following her visit in Wayne.

ALL OF her paintings are done with oils and most depict the awesome Oregon landscape. Her show in Wayne also will include three small floral pictures, buildings, and a beach scene with blue heron.

Bonnie is continually expanding her painting skills and hopes to begin working this fall with watercolors and acrylics. She also has taken up portraits but isn't showing those yet.

For the past four years she has studied with artists Dennis and Lisa Porter, who are becoming very well known in art communities throughout the Northwest. The Porters both have degrees in art and reside in the Roseburg area.

Bonnie also attended an art seminar for a week last fall at Oregon's Diamond Lake, painting out of doors. "In the wild," "Painting outdoors," says Bonnie, explaining that the constant changes in light provide many different views of the same area.

HOW HAS the 72-year-old Oregon woman managed to receive so much recognition since she began painting seriously just a few short years ago? "I'm not too young," laughs Bonnie, "so I have to go faster."

"I'll be a good many years before Bonnie settles comfortably into her rocking chair. There's just too much to do," she says.

Bonnie has taken adult education courses for about the past 17 years, including classes in cake decorating and bookkeeping. She also does a great deal of work for her church and community, primarily in service programs.

THE ART show in Wayne this week will only be the second for Elaine Neiman. Her paintings were viewed by the public for the first time recently during a show at the Sunset Plaza in Norfolk, sponsored by the Norfolk Art Association.

Elaine, who makes it clear that she considers herself an amateur artist, has been painting since 1977.

She and husband Harry have resided in this area since 1952. Their home is located on an acreage six miles south and one west of Wayne.

Elaine doesn't spend as much time at her canvases as she like, in addition to taking care of her husband and home, she also works fulltime at Pamida's in Wayne. Harry is employed at Drier's Supply.

Because of the time factor, Elaine's paintings are done with acrylics, which dry much faster than oils. Although most of her pictures depict landscapes drawn from pictures she has taken in Colorado, she also is proud of a cowboy she painted.

Right now she's working on a picture of Gavin's Point but doesn't think she will have it completed in time for Thursday and Friday's show. Elaine says she, too, would like to take up portrait painting.

ALTHOUGH she's always been interested in art, Elaine says her first hint of encouragement came from an eighth grade teacher, who also was a "pretty good artist."

There were no formal art classes when she was attending high school, and it wasn't until recently that she had her first art lessons.

Her first painting was of her father's barn which was done during a class taught by local artist Marie Hagemann. Elaine also took an art class under the direction of Ted Blendenman, art instructor at Wayne Community Schools, and enrolled in a couple of art workshops held in Norfolk.

AS OF YET Elaine has never sold any of her paintings. Most have been gifts to her children, including Lorraine Johnson, who manages the Cameo Spa in Wayne, Linda Chamberlin of Kearney, and son Jim, a policeman at Bloomfield.

Elaine does most of her painting during her spare time in the evenings. Although she doesn't have a room set aside for her paint supplies, she says she would like to fix an upstairs room in her home into a studio. Of the nearly 30 paintings she has completed, about 10 will be displayed during the art show in Wayne.

NEARLY 30 paintings by two women artists will be exhibited at an art show in Wayne today (Thursday) and Friday sponsored by the Wayne Regional Arts Council. The exhibit features paintings by former Wayne resident Bonnie Mitchell Freeman of Oregon, pictured above, and Elaine Neiman, at right, who resides with her husband south of Wayne.

HER FAVORITE picture is the one of the cowboy. It hangs in a special frame of carved match boxes. The frame was made by a barber, who was deaf and dumb, and resided in her husband's hometown of Naper when he was a boy.

Elaine's other paintings are in frames handmade by her husband. Elaine says Harry has been as nervous as she in preparing for this week's art show. Both have spent late nights framing her paintings, many of which were re-claimed temporarily from her children's homes, especially for the show.

ELAINE'S painting has left little time for another favorite pastime, decorating cakes.

"I used to bake a lot of wedding cakes," says Elaine, adding that these days she barely finds time to bake cakes for special family occasions. Her last wedding cake, which served 300, was for her niece's wedding in Denver.

WAYNE GUY receives congratulations from teammates Brian Soderberg and Bill Warren as he rounds third after hitting a home run. Guy's solo homer came in the first inning of Saturday's game against Laurel in the Chuck Ellis Tournament. Wakefield's Legion won the game 7-1 and advanced into second round action. Heelan eliminated the hosts in the second round.

Wayne Midgets Ride Heavy Hitting, Maly Homer To Emerson Triumph

The Wayne Midgets picked up a big win in their first outing of the baseball season Monday by knocking off Emerson 10-4 in a Midget Legion doubleheader at Emerson.

Todd Pfeiffer and Todd Schwartz combined to throw a two-hitter and Wayne scored 10 runs on 7 hits. Schwartz led the offensive attack with three hits in four at bats.

KEVIN MALY BLASTED a three-run homer in his first appearance as a Midget to propel the Midgets. With Pat Melena and Schwartz on base, Maly knocked the ball over the outfield fence to provide the final three runs in the win.

Pfeiffer scored the first run of the game in the top of the first inning as he drew a walk, stole second, was sacrificed to third base and came home on a base hit by Schwartz.

Emerson tied the score in the bottom of the inning but Wayne pulled back in front with three runs in the top of the second. Chad Dorcey and Randy Gamble both walked and Shaun Niemann loaded the bases on a fielding error. A base hit by Todd Dorcey and a sacrifice fly by Pfeiffer brought in the runs.

THE MIDGETS added another pair of runs in the fourth as Todd Dorcey and Pfeiffer walked and Jeff McCright and Schwartz collected hits.

The 6-0 lead held up until the sixth inning when the locals added four more runs. R. J. Metteer scored the first run and Maly's homer provided the others.

Next action for Wayne is scheduled Friday at Winslow.

A pair of home runs propelled the Wakefield Juniors to their first win in opening round action of the Chuck Ellis Memorial Tournament, Saturday.

Wakefield eliminated Laurel from the 12 team field with a 7-1 victory in Saturday early game. The Trojans were then knocked out of the tourney by a loss to Sioux City Heelan in the following semifinal round.

LAUREL OPENED the game with an early run as Dave Marquardt collected a triple in the first inning. Joe Olsen clubbed a double to bring Marquardt home.

Wakefield rallied in the bottom of the first on a two-run homer by Wayne Guy. Mark Starzl led off with a triple and scored on a ground ball hit by Keith Roberts. Guy followed the play by rapping a long fly ball over the outfield fence.

Laurel was held scoreless the final six innings as Starzl struckout 12 batters and gave up only two hits in the last six innings.

The hosts struck again in the bottom of the third. Kent Roberts singled and Brian Soderberg came in as pinch runner. Starzl turned a bunt into a single and Keith Roberts knocked in Soderberg with a single.

THE WINNERS ADDED another run in the fifth and three in the sixth. In the fifth inning, Wayne Guy reached base on a fielder's choice and stole second. Mike Clay knocked in Guy with a base hit for a 4-1 advantage.

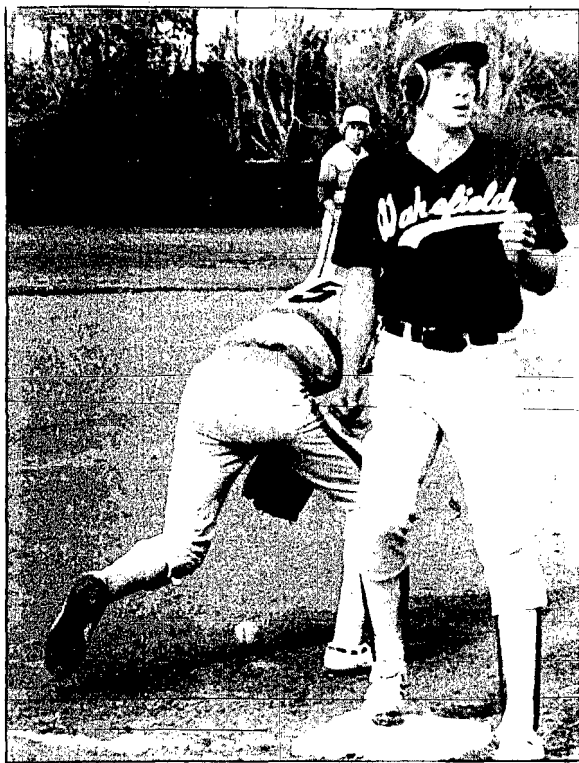

In the sixth inning, Dale Phipps singled and stole second and third. Soderberg drew a walk and Starzl ripped a long fly ball to left field. The ball was misplayed and rolled to the outfield fence. Starzl scrambled home and was credited with a three-run homer.

Starzl earned the pitching victory while Laurel's Lon Swanson, who struckout seven batters, was tagged for the loss.

The two teams are scheduled to compete in Raleigh Bishop League action tomorrow (Friday). Laurel's Midgets and Legion will play at Bancroft while Wakefield will host Wisner in Midget and Legion games.

Randy's Recap

By Randy Hascall

THE RALPH BISHOP League has opened another season of baseball and softball action. Team members this year for Midget and Legion baseball action include Wayne, Laurel, Wakefield, Winslow, Wisner, Emerson, Bancroft and Hartington.

Competition promises to be good again this year.

IN-DEPTH COVERAGE of all sports will again depend upon the cooperation of area coaches. I can't be at every game in the area every week, so I will have to rely on coaches reports for results of many games. Any coaches who would like to report results of any games from the Little League level through the Town Team level are urged to do so. We are interested in all sports activities and have a toll free number which can be used for long distance calls.

Captains of the teams in the Wayne slow pitch softball leagues are asked to call their weekly results into the Herald. We need scores each week in order to keep the standings up to date. All cooperation is greatly appreciated.

WAYNE PARENTS of recreation ball players are reminded that the recreation season will begin Monday (June 8). A schedule of practices and game times is included elsewhere in the sports section.

I RECEIVED WORD this week that Hank Overin has been selected to help coach the outstate all-stars in the annual all-star series between Omaha and outstate Nebraska Legion ball players.

The series matches some of the best players across Nebraska in head-to-head competition. Superb players from Omaha, North Platte, Lincoln, Grand Island and other parts of the state including our area College scouts and even one or two pro scouts are likely to be on hand for the series, hoping to find some talented, unknown stars who may someday make it big in college and possibly have a shot at big league ball.

Congratulations to Hank for being named to the coaching staff for the series.

AND FINALLY, thanks to everyone who called to inform me of locations of fox dens. I'm afraid I didn't get many good pictures but I did see numerous fox dens during the past three weeks.

Next spring, I hope to search out some fox dens again and spend considerable time watching and taking pictures of the critters.

The latest edition of "NEBRASKALAND" magazine has some fine photos of swift foxes in the western part of the state in case anyone is interested.

It's Not a Whale

NO, IT'S not a whale but it probably felt like one as anglers Craig Evans and Chad Longe reeled the giant fish in. The channel catfish was caught at Grove Lake in Antelope County and weighed 19 pounds, 8 ounces. The fish was 36 inches long and had a 23 inch girth. Craig, 11, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Evans of Winside and Chad, 10, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Longe of Winside. The two boys have applied for Master Angler Awards. Channel catfish must weigh at least 12 pounds for anglers to be eligible.

Wakefield Splits Two Games with Bancroft

Wakefield and Bancroft split Ralph Bishop League season opener Monday night. Wakefield claimed the Midget victory 15-5 but lost the Junior game 7-4.

In the first game, Wakefield took advantage of 12 Bancroft errors. The visitors scored seven runs in the second inning, three in the fifth and five in the sixth to put the game well out of reach.

Wakefield's defense held Bancroft to five hits.
Wakefield 070 035-15 4 3
Bancroft 000 203-5 5 12

In the Legion game, Wakefield scored four runs on seven hits but gave up 10 hits and 7 runs.

Pfeiffer, Wayne Blank Emerson

Tim Pfeiffer, after battling a sore elbow and mono-nucleosis during the high school baseball season, appears to have regained his pitching touch.

Pfeiffer, pitching in Wayne's Ralph Bishop League opener Monday night, fired a one-hit shutout as Wayne blanked Emerson's Juniors 9-1.

THE LONE HIT was a single in the fifth inning. One other Emerson player reached base in the seven inning game.

Pfeiffer fanned 15 batters and got the other six outs on two groundouts, two popouts, a flyout to right field and a pickoff play. Wayne's defense committed one error. While Pfeiffer silenced Emerson's bats, the Wayne hitting attack was going strong. The locals collected 9 hits and pushed across 9 runs. Leading batters were Kevin Nissen and Tim Pfeiffer with two hits each. Wayne scored its lead run in the first inning and was never threatened after that point. Doug Proett drew a walk, moved to second base on a called balk and scored two outs later on a base hit by Pfeiffer.

FOUR RUNS in the third inning virtually put the game out of reach. Todd Skokan singled and moved to second base on a passed ball. Jere Morris drew a walk and Nissen blasted a double.

With two outs, Pat McCright rapped a three-bagger to bring home two runs. Tod Heiler's double brought in McCright.

The fourth inning was nearly as profitable for the winners. Bill Vrtiska led-off with a single and Proett reached base on an error. Both runners advanced on a passed ball and Vrtiska scored on another passed ball. Morris walked to keep the rally alive and with two outs the right fielder dropped a fly ball by Pfeiffer and two more runs scored.

AL LINDSAY added the 9th and final run in the top of the sixth. He singled and moved to second on a base hit by Nissen. A passed ball gave Lindsay third base and an outfielder's error let him score.

Wayne's Legion is scheduled to play at Winside tomorrow (Friday) and at Laurel Monday.

Donations Buy PMC Unit

COMMUNITY DONATIONS provided funds which purchased an ultrasonic blood pressure device for use by Providence Medical Center personnel. The equipment sends ultra sound waves through the arm and records the change in blood flow through movement of tissue. It can be used anywhere there is an artery. The device will make it easier to check blood pressure in an ambulance when sirens make it nearly impossible to hear with a stethoscope. The unit, which was highly recommended, will be used by the PMC staff. Louise Jenness, director of nursing, tests the instrument on nurse Deanna Manz while physician's assistant Gary West watches. Mrs. Jenness said the hospital has wanted to purchase the unit for a long time and contributions were appreciated. Wayne organizations which donated money to purchase the unit are: VFW, VFW Auxiliary, Kiwanis Club, Lions Club, Eagles Club, Eagles Auxiliary, Jaycees, Jayceettes and the American Legion.

Early Morning Rain 'Just Fits In' Plans

Tuesday's early morning rain "just fit in" to farmers' plans, steamed to Ron Ring, who farms east of Wayne.

Wayne got 1.25 inches of rain Tuesday, according to Pat Gross at Triangle Finance. Winds gusted up to 40 miles per hour, said the National Weather Service in Norfolk.

For the most part, area farmers welcomed the rain. Ring said that he would have had to irrigate corn starting next week after cultivating.

While some farmers had already put up the first cutting of alfalfa, others were caught with hay curing in the field.

Hoskins said the timing for the rainfall was "very right". He reported 1.25 inches of rain there Tuesday.

"Some farmers were holding off planting large and grain sorghum because moisture conditions weren't right," he commented.

He also said that rainfall amounts were varied within three miles of his farm. Neighbors reported totals ranging from 1.10 to 2 inches of rain. Unlike Wayne, Meierhenry said that "it didn't rain very hard here. There was very little watering."

"None of the farmers reported crop damage or washout from the storm."

Farmers

using enough," he said. "Then again, they may be using the right amount at the wrong time."

SPITZE SAID the concept of irrigation scheduling is "not just to conserve water, but also for crop production efficiency."

He said irrigators need to be concerned about the best use of natural resources at the least cost, and noted that fuel costs alone are increasing to the point that farmers can ill afford to misuse it on a center-pivot unit.

Recent University of Nebraska-Lincoln figures show it takes $3.33 for fuel to put on a acre-inch of water, Spitze explained. Total production costs to put on an acre-inch amounts to about $433, based on a center-pivot unit operating on a quarter section, he said.

"That's a statewide average," Spitze said, explaining that an acre-inch is the equivalent of an inch of water over an acre of cropland. "Most center-pivot operations apply an acre-inch — depending on the equipment and well delivery — during single rotation of the irrigation unit, he said.

"NEBRASKA HAS been the leader in irrigation scheduling," he said. "But, the more sophisticated methods of scheduling, such as the computer-moisture block procedure, have only caught on in the last five or six years."

The center pivot was developed in Nebraska during the early 1960s. Today there are about 130 units in Wayne County alone — a figure that represents a 15 percent increase in units over last year.

Spitze said Wayne County's figure is small compared to the number of units operating in some other counties, such as Pierce or Antelope.

The capital investment — about $40,000 per unit depending on the kind of equipment ordered, particularly the power plant — alone points to the need for fuel and water-use efficiency through irrigation scheduling, explained the extension agent.

"Most farmers are using some method of scheduling," he said. "But until the Carroll group organized no one in northeast Nebraska was using the computer."

SPITZE SAID that UNL cost projections show it takes $2.72 per bushel to produce 130 bushel corn on irrigated cropland. That figure represents all costs delivered to the bin dried, including overhead and management, he added.

Since most farmers discount overhead and management, the figure that is more readily used is $2.56 per bushel delivered to the bin dried, he explained. The UNL figures represent a statewide average. Most irrigators shoot for 130-bushel corn, he said.

Within that price structure, Spitze explained, is the 7 inches of irrigation water pumped onto the field. "That 7 inches is a good average for this area," he said.

He explained that the application often ranges to 9 inches and that there are cases where it ranges anywhere from 5 to 12 inches.

If takes the average center-pivot unit about 3 1/2 days to apply an acre-inch, he said. "That's a normal pass" of the pivot on a quarter section, he explained.

"WHEN YOU talk about that kind of yield and those kinds of costs to produce it, you've got to talk irrigation scheduling," Spitze said.

"You simply need to know how much moisture is in the soil," he said. "And there are about five different ways to determine that."

The soil probe method is one. With it, the irrigator presses a probe into the irrigated field, withdraws a soil sample from the desired depth and tests the soil in an attempt to gauge the moisture content, according to the county agent.

"It's the cheapest method and can be good if the farmer does it on a regular basis," he said. "The trouble with it is that it's not very accurate because the soil can feel different under different conditions."

THE SECOND method is referred to as the checkbook method.

Here, the irrigator must keep track of the amount of moisture used each week, according to Spitze, who said the system involves extensive record keeping that produces a running total of moisture available and moisture deficit.

"It's a pretty good method if the farmer can keep records," he said. "Few of them do it well, and if they miss one time it ruins the whole system."

Spitze said even with good record keeping, the figures in checkbook scheduling are only averages. "Every farmer using it has to tailor it to the individual situation and he still needs to check the moisture content in the soil," he explained.

ANOTHER IS called the stage-of-growth method. This method relies heavily on when the water is to be delivered in the crop's development stage.

"That should always be a part of scheduling," Spitze said. "For instance, you can cut the yield in soybeans by applying too much water too early in the season," he said.

Spitze said he felt a more effective method was the moisture-block system that utilizes a key-block trigger.

Usually, he said, the moisture blocks are set at depths of 6 inches, 10 inches and 30 inches. The irrigator uses the key block to determine when to irrigate.

Early in the season, the 6-inch block is the key block. "When moisture readings drop to 50 percent on that key block in the driest part of the field, then irrigate," the county agent explained.

LATER IN the season, the 18-inch block becomes the key block, he said, noting that many farmers use the key-block method in conjunction with the checkbook method to strengthen the reliability of scheduling.

"It has the same downfall in that missing records throw the schedule way off," Spitze said.

The key block method represents a decided improvement over the other methods, particularly when used in conjunction with checkbook scheduling and stage-of-growth analysis, Spitze said.

He noted that many farmers fall down in the record-keeping aspect of the method, and accurate scheduling is jeopardized for the rest of the season.

"THERE IS a better method," Spitze said. "It's the use of the moisture blocks, plus use of the computer." (See story and photographs on Page 5B.)

"All the computer does is keep records for the farmer," he said. "All he needs to do is get the block readings once a week and get them fed into the computer. Then he knows exactly when to irrigate."

Using crop history — type of crop, planting date, length of growing season, type of soil, rainfall, heat, evaporation rate, wind, and location of the irrigation unit — combined with moisture-block meter readings, the AgNet computer computes.

It computes how much moisture is available for crop use and tells the farmer when to irrigate within a schedule that usually begins and ends on an earliest-date, latest-date start and restart date.

Spitze said the method is the most accurate developed to date and the procedure being used by the Carroll Irrigation Association's members.

Zorinsky Questions Reagan's Corn Sale Project

Sen Edward Zorinsky has questioned the Reagan Administration's decision to sell 4 million bushels of government owned corn stocks.

In a joint letter to Agriculture Secretary John Block, Zorinsky and ranking agriculture Democrat Walter "Doc" Huddleston expressed concern that the Administration may be sabotaging the USDA farmer held reserve by selling the corn.

The two Democratic Senators, both of whom serve on the Senate Agriculture Committee, said the Administration appeared to be worried more about the cost of holding the Commodity Credit Corporation grain, than about the depressing effect the CCC corn sales could have on crop prices and farm income.

ACCORDING TO Senator Zorinsky, the USDA is prohibited under current law from selling grain at less than 105 percent of the "call" level, whenever a farmer held reserve is in place. But, the Zorinsky Huddleston letter says "the Department of Agriculture apparently has interpreted the triggering of the call and the passage of the repayment period to mean that no reserve is in place."

That means the Reagan Administration call would sell corn back into the market at only 115 percent of the price support loan rate, about 15 to 20 cents a bushel cheaper.

Zorinsky also said that the department's decision to sell corn on a regional basis — and based on a lower regional call price broke with past policy. According to the Nebraska Democrat this could distort traditional differences in regional market prices and help further dampen corn prices all over the country.

THE NEBRASKA Agriculture Committee Senator said he wanted to know how the Administration justified selling any corn from CCC stocks when more than 400 million bushels of corn still in the farmer held reserve was available to the market.

should have whoever they want on the committee."

Before the discussion ended, Olds asked to make a comment. "All I want to say is that the board wants a complete evaluation of the unit. We've been in existence for 15 years and we want an evaluation from the board on down."

IN OTHER ACTION, Mills informed the board that the hearing on the proposed ESU budget for 1981-82 would probably be in August. Mills said he knew the special education section of this year's program would go over budget.

He also said the tentative budget for the next fiscal year would be presented to board members during the July meeting.

In a budget related matter,

Norvell said "At the risk of being thrown out of the meeting, I think the board should consider getting as much of that one mill (tax levy) as possible. He said it would broaden the burden and help the superintendents."

Norvell's reference was to that portion of the ESU budget raised by taxes, rather than the service contract funds generated through school districts.

HIS COMMENT also came on the heels of several ESU board meetings in which members discussed the budget problems being experienced by many districts in the unit.

Mills agreed with Norvell saying "We're going to have a cash flow problem in September."

Hay challenged the contention that by his calculations the unit should be more than $100,000 beyond obligations. He told Mills the unit was in trouble last year on cash flow because it spent $40,000 more than was in the budget.

"Besides, we have a $200,000 cash reserve and if that doesn't work, we can write warrants," Hay said. "That's my personal opinion," he said. "That's not necessarily what we should do."

Berneal Gustafson, former board treasurer, said "It's going to come close. I can see that."

BOARD MEMBERS also discussed the necessity of having the treasurer now John Portwood of Wakefield National Bank, present at each meeting.

Mills said language in ESU law seemed to require attendance at each meeting by the treasurer. Several members suggested that the law should be changed.

And several said they didn't feel it was necessary for the treasurer to attend every meeting as long as he prepared the report. "If he does the report, we can give it," Mills said.

In another board matter, Hay reiterated a concern expressed by other board members regarding the position of secretary.

NORVELL IS board secretary, but ESU staff member Larry Clay has been recording votes and the minutes for sometime to free the Laurel Insurance man to participate in the meetings.

In board discussions, it has been pointed out that regulations require the secretary to be a member of the board.

Norvell told the board he had no objections to being responsible for the minutes. "It'll be personally responsible for them from now on," he said.

Hay said he was only questioning the continuation of a practice that placed an ESU staff member in charge of board minutes.

BEFORE ADJOURNING, the board heard Mills express concern about ESU staffing. He said the unit is still seeking to hire four speech therapists, a half time psychologist, several resource teachers and a half time nurse.

"Some of the positions will be difficult to fill," Mills said. "We are not getting very many applications." Mills noted that some staffers had left the unit for better paying jobs elsewhere.

The unit has settled contract negotiations with its professional staff. According to Mills, the increase amounts to about 11.4 percent.

The board also approved extending contracts for three administrative staff members, Duane Tappe, Gary Vopalensky and Larry Clay.

MILLS SAID the extensions were needed to cover increased ESU activities during the summer months.

Tappe, director of special education, had his contract extended from 10 months to 11 months for special education summer programs.

Vopalensky, speech and hearing, and Clay, psychology, each had their contracts extended from 10 months to 10 1/2 months for member school districts, such as contract reviews, personnel, handbook revision, inservice development and scheduling.

Mills said that more and more districts are requesting "all types of services on a 12-month basis and the unit must meet those needs."

Lawmakers Continue State Aid to Education Debate

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association

Increased state aid to public schools has often been called a good property tax relief measure, and state Sen. Gerald Koch of Ralston recently used that reasoning in an attempt to win support for a $115 million school aid package.

But Koch's efforts, in many respects similar to previous attempts, failed. The Legislature already had approved the $115 million appropriation, only to have it vetoed by Gov. Charles Thone.

The veto prompted Koch, chairman of the Legislature's Education Committee, to champion an override attempt.

LAWMAKERS earlier had voted 28-17 to add $20 million to the already hefty $95 million school aid appropriation, and Koch no doubt was counting on that margin to at least hold steady when the time came for the expected override vote. But support for the $115 million school aid appropriation had definitely waned.

When the time came to vote on Koch's motion to approve the $20 million increase in state aid to education, over the governor's objections, the effort suffered a 17-31 setback. It takes 30 votes to override a veto.

The theory of Koch's argument that an increase in state school aid could help the property tax situation cannot be ignored. It would seem logical that increased reliance on state sales and income taxes could result in a like reduction in property tax support for schools.

But Budget Committee Chairman Jerome Warner of Waverly said the proposed $20 million increase in school aid would not reduce property taxes. Instead, he said it would only lessen the property tax hike that most Nebraskans can expect.

PLUS, WARNER said the proposed increase in state aid to schools would raise the 15 percent income tax rate at least 1 percentage point.

The state aid to education debate is not new to the Nebraska Legislature, which a year ago did override a gubernatorial veto of a school aid increase. By the time the Legislature was through, state school aid was increased from $35 million to $95 million—less than supporters initially proposed but more than Thone and some lawmakers wanted.

In addition, lawmakers were unable to override the governor's wishes on an Aid to Dependent Children appropriation.

Thone's life-item veto of $1.8 million in Aid to Dependent Children funds recently was the subject of an override motion by Sen. Ernest Chambers of Omaha. His motion failed 25-11.

If the $1.8 million had been approved, the ADC payment would have been $793 a month for a parent and one child and $71 a month for each additional child. Despite the veto, some improvement in ADC payments was approved.

As it now stands, ADC families will receive a basic payment of $280, up from the current $270, plus $70 for each additional child, up from the current $65.

BICKERING—Gov. Charles Thone, during most of his weekly news conferences in May, fielded a lot of questions about various legislative proposals that were on his desk or would be there soon.

But the governor during a recent news conference had a few choice words about the dispute over a hydroelectric plant on Kingsley Dam.

Disagreements between the two power companies involved in the project were termed "ridiculous" by Thone, who said he was concerned about the lack of progress on the issue.

The Central Nebraska Public Power and Irrigation District and the Nebraska Public Power District are planning to build the plant near Ogallala. But disagreements over a contract, specifically who would build the plant and who would finance it, caused delays.

The Legislature also voiced its concern over the negotiations, which on several occasions appeared stalled. The Legislature, through a resolution, suggested the two power companies schedule a joint negotiation session to resolve differences.

Thone complimented the Legislature for passing the resolution, which had several co-sponsors, including Sen. Rex Haberman of Imperial.

Although the Legislature's resolution was only a suggestion, it helped articulate the majority of lawmakers' views on the issue. And Thone, who sometimes is criticized for failing to take a position on issues, this time made his views known.

FOOD TAX—Nebraska lawmakers apparently had a major change of heart on a proposal to increase the state's food sales tax credit.

The Senators had voted 44-4 to support the increase, which Gov. Charles Thone "x'd" out with his red pen. Then, when it came time for an override attempt, only 23 lawmakers could be found who were willing to go against Thone's wishes.

The vote to override the veto was 23-25. The bill would have increased the food tax credit from $28 to $31 per person.

When he vetoed the bill, Thone said he felt the $28 credit was "more than adequate." And when it came time for an override attempt, enough lawmakers apparently agreed to lock in the $28 for awhile, at least until the 1982 session, when the issue could be considered again.

Another Farm First

Nebraska has been a leader in agricultural innovation and experimentation for more than a century.

And, the kind of derring do that has kept this state's farmers and ranchers in the forefront is visible throughout the countryside.

Last week, some Carroll farmers marched into agricultural history, in northeast Nebraska by forming an irrigation association.

The Carroll Irrigation Association, taking its lead from similar projects in other parts of the state, has been formed out of a concern for continuing maximum production of this area's fertile farmland while making every effort possible to conserve water.

The association's members put their money on the line to develop a systematic approach to sophisticated irrigation scheduling that is designed to bring center pivot operations into the computer age.

It's a first of its kind project for northeast Nebraska and the association members are to be commended for their concern—a concern that has led to a concerted effort regarding the scheduling of water being pumped onto corn, soybeans, alfalfa and grain sorghum.

Association members have hired Kristin Loberg to install and monitor moisture block stations on their irrigated cropland. Loberg will become an association computer liaison, supplying the Wayne County extension office with weekly moisture readings and advising farmers on irrigation schedules.

The new development in Wayne County underscores what most agriculture economists have known for years—that the family farm represents one of the most efficient and efficiency conscious sectors of this country's economy.

Rainfall or no rainfall, the future these farmers have made into modern conservation and production techniques—particularly in regard to the use of irrigation water—stands as solid testimony to the fact that Nebraska takes a back seat to no one when it comes to progress on the farm and in the field.

Perhaps other northeast Nebraska irrigators will take the formation of the Carroll Irrigation Association as a signal to join their fellow farmers in an agricultural adventure that goes to the heart of land stewardship.

Mixup on Mandate

The Nebraska Legislature is mandated by the State Constitution to provide for the free instruction in the common schools of this state of all persons between the ages of five and 21 years.

The Nebraska State School Boards Association must question whether the Legislature is complying with that mandate.

During the 1981 session the Legislature passed LB284, appropriating $70 million in lieu of tax revenues lost by political subdivisions when business personal property taxes were repealed. Then LB179 was amended to give the county treasurers $700,000 of the $70 million for collecting the taxes that had already been collected by the state. The cost to public schools was $430,500.

Next, although the distribution within counties of the $70 million was intended by the revenue committee to be based on 1979 property tax levies, the attorney general decided the base year should be 1980. The decision cost the public schools of the state an additional $1,750,000.

Then the Legislature passed an appropriations bill that would have increased state aid to public schools by $20 million—about half enough to offset the effects of inflation—but later declined to override the governor's line-item veto of that amount. The added $20 million would not have affected the sales tax rate and could not have increased the income tax rate by more than one percent. If preliminary estimates of the state's year-end cash balance are no more accurate than they were a year ago, no increase in either sales- or income-tax rates would have been needed.

In the meantime, the Legislature has not relaxed any of the requirements that have been placed on the public schools. The opportunity was there, in LB137, to transfer responsibility for residential care and related costs for retarded persons from the public schools to the far more appropriate agency for this purpose—the regional offices of mental retardation.

But the Legislature, in its wisdom, apparently decided that residential care was an educational function that could, like many other social problems, be solved only by the schools, with no added funding. Thus, again, the Legislature sustained the governor's veto.

To the editor:
We were disappointed at the display of pictures and the overall coverage shown on the Wayne High graduation.

Was the picture of a sleeping boy more important than the pictures of the valedictorian and salutatorian?

Have academic achievements been placed below the idea of a sleeping child being bored by the activities at graduation?

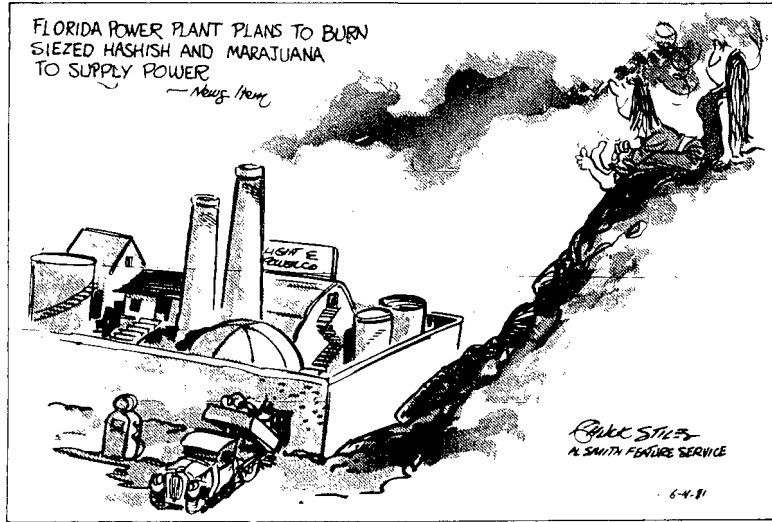

We understand that we are not from the neighboring towns other than Wayne—but yet aren't we as important?

But still the achievements of being top rank in a class is IMPORTANT!

We hope in the future that The Wayne Herald will show increased interest in the relevant activities of their own community.

Gasohol is on the Move in Nebraska

"Gasohol is on the move in Nebraska!"

During the first three months of 1981 while sales of gasoline in the state were down 10 percent from the same period of 1980, Gasohol sales were up 10 percent.

Several milestones will be observed during the week of June 8-13, 1981 which has been designated by me and by at least 11 other governors as "Alcohol Fuels Week."

"UP UNTIL now, all the Gasohol sold in Nebraska has utilized alcohol manufactured in other states. During "Alcohol Fuels Week" the first Gasohol will be sold containing anhydrous alcohol produced in Nebraska from Nebraska grain.

"During the week a ceremony will mark the sale of the 50 millionth gallon of Gasohol in Nebraska.

"Also that week distribution will be made of a new directory listing the approximate 500 service stations in Nebraska that sell Gasohol. When I became governor in 1979, only three stations in the state offered the governor

thone

product. The directory will be made available all summer to tourists going through Nebraska at all the Interstate 80 reststops. If you'd like a copy, you can get one by writing Gasohol Committee, Box 94831, Lincoln, Nebraska 68509.

"Alcohol Fuels Week" will be used as the kickoff time for the most intensive ever promotion of Gasohol. Nebraska outdoor advertising companies are donating space for 79 billboards and state television and radio stations will be giving free air time to promote Gasohol. There will also be a cooperative paid advertising campaign, and Nebraska members of Women Involved in Farm Economics (WIFE) have been persuading jobbers and service stations to participate.

"National Gasohol Week" posters will be displayed at 1-80 reststops and at service stations where the product is available.

"Since Gasohol is 80 percent gasoline and 10 percent alcohol made from agriculture products and since close to half of our gasoline is made from imported oil, each gallon of Gasohol used reduces America's dependence on foreign petroleum by about 20 percent.

"Development of an alcohol fuels industry in Nebraska will mean that dollars now being sent to the Middle East can stay right in our own state, creating new jobs and a healthier economy. Therefore, I will continue to push for production and use of alcohol and Gasohol in Nebraska."

Production Costs Beat Parity Plan

By M. M. Van Kirk
Nebraska Farm Bureau

Political argument over parity and cost of production as measurements of the economic wellbeing of agriculture has never done very much to help the average farmer and rancher keep his enterprise afloat.

The USDA's cost of production (COP) estimates are rapidly replacing parity as the basis for setting government price and income supports, a leading agricultural economist team has pointed out.

In a recent summary, they say that the major objection to parity is that it only reflects prices and price changes. Parity does not reflect technological change, changes in input costs or returns to labor, management or assets.

FOR EXAMPLE, parity as defined for the basic farm support programs of the 1930s, was the balance between what a farmer paid for his production items and what he got for his products when he sold them and related to one of the most favorable balance periods in U.S. agricultural history, the 1913-14 period just preceding World War I. This was quite applicable to the farming techniques and realities of the 1930s, but vastly obsolete in terms of the revolution that has come to farming and ranching in the last 50 years.

In the 1930s, soybeans were a minor crop and virtually unheard of in Nebraska. The use of hybrid seed corn was just beginning. Some farmers began experimenting with sorghum varieties in the mid-1930s as a drought resistant crop.

Fertilizer use was very limited and primitive by modern standards, as were insecticides. Mostly farmers relied on livestock manure, crop rotation and legumes such as alfalfa and clovers for fertility purposes. Irrigation was limited to reclamation sources generally and crop yields and annual production were half what they are today. In 1981, parity comparisons related to 1913-14's "golden age" are far from reality.

THE COST OF PRODUCTION (COP) measurements as linked to target prices and loan rates have the potential to reflect technological change and the changes in the costs of specific inputs needed to produce a particular commodity.

But economists point out that COP pricing ignores demand. If demand is increasing, the market price would be above production costs to encourage greater production. If demand is declining, the market price would be below the costs of less-efficient producers to discourage unwanted production.

Second problem with COP pricing is that it is based on actual yield which can vary greatly due to weather and other uncontrollable events. And the third problem, the economists note, in linking a target price or loan rate to an average COP, particularly one that includes land costs, is that a cost spiral can easily be built in.

As returns to land, family labor and management are guaranteed or increased through government programs, producers are willing to pay more to own land. Land prices increase, total costs of production increase and the government price support increases again the next year. A cost spiral is virtually assured.

ECONOMISTS generally agree that the implications of cost-of-production pricing include:

1. Continued spiraling increases of land prices, input prices, and the cost of production.
2. Damage to valuable U.S. farm export trade if pricing is above the world market price.
3. A potential misallocation of resources and production.
4. Higher and higher government program costs.
5. Accelerated farm consolidation and farm enlargement, because larger producers will receive proportionally greater benefits from price supports and stabilization.

Perhaps these are some of the reasons why government farm programs have done so little through the years in the battle to save the "family farm."

Families Sought To Host Students

Educational Resource Development Trust (ERDT), a non-profit educational foundation, is seeking host families for high school students from Europe and Latin America. ERDT has authorization from the U. S. International Communication Agency to bring high school students from abroad for either one semester or one year of study in the U.S. school in the district in which the host family lives, offering them the chance to participate in American family life in addition to furthering his/her education.

SHERMAN said the program presents a marvelous opportunity for cross-cultural exchange, especially for host families with teenagers living at home.

The students coming from abroad are carefully selected and are above-average academically as well as proficient in English. They arrive in the U.S. with ample clothing, pocket money, and insurance.

FOR further information, contact Don and Lois Cook, Box 83, Orchard, Neb., 68764. Nebraska ERDT representatives serve as coordinators for the high school exchange programs.

Carroll Cemetery Improvement Project

WORK WAS COMPLETED this week on a new, 8-foot concrete roadway through Haven of Rest cemetery in Carroll. The completed roadway, which features about 3 feet of rock along each side runs through the cemetery from the new south gate to an identical north gate just south of Carroll. Ken Eddie, chairman of the Village of Carroll Board of Trustees and the man who spearheaded the year-long cemetery improvement project, said Midwest Bridge of Norfolk did the work. It was financed by cemetery plot owners' donations. The new arch over the south gate was done locally, he said. The Carroll Cemetery Association operates Haven of Rest

KRISTIN LOBERG of rural Carroll demonstrates the procedures involved for installing moisture-block stations in a center-pivot irrigated cornfield. Loberg, who farms northeast of Carroll with her husband Dan, has been hired by the newly formed Carroll Irrigation Association to install and read the stations this summer. Basic installation procedures include (1) soaking the moisture blocks just before installation and after cycling them; (2) digging the three moisture-block holes with a soil probe; (3) preparing the bottom of the holes with water after crumbling the final inch of soil; (4) insertion of the cycled moisture block with a hollow conduit; (5) checking the installed blocks with a moisture meter; (6) knotting each of the three blocks for depth and anchoring the meter wires to a station stake; and (7) marking the moisture-block station with a flag for easy identification throughout the season.

Moisture-Block Stations Pivotal for Irrigators

An ever-increasing sophistication in irrigation scheduling has brought the computer into the corn and soybean fields of northeastern Nebraska.

With an increase in center-pivot irrigation by more than 15 percent in Wayne County alone this year, area farmers are finding it necessary to fine-tune water delivery schedules to maximize yield with a minimum of wasted water, according to Don Spitze, county extension agent.

The result has been an introduction of computer data to help guide irrigators in on-farm application, he said.

Use of the computer, which acts as a storage bank for data on crop growth, moisture and weather, is being combined with in-the-field moisture block readings to offer farmers — at least those who want to take advantage of it — scheduling that is far more efficient than several guess-and-by-golly methods.

FAR AND AWAY the best practical method for irrigation scheduling, according to Spitze, is the moisture block and computer system.

It combines the accuracy of in-the-field moisture readings with up-to-the-minute crop and weather data to produce a two-to-three-day irrigation start and restart range.

Basically, the computer, which is part of the AgNet system with access available to farmers through Spitze's office in the basement of the Wayne County Courthouse, a sorts through data — including readings from moisture (electrical-resistance) blocks — supplied by an irrigator. Last week, just before being employed by the Carroll Irrigation Association, Kristin (Anderson) Loberg, who — with her husband Dan — farms irrigated land north of Carroll, demonstrated the correct method of moisture block installation.

IN A CORNFIELD near Wayne, Loberg first selected a site for moisture block stations. Four such stations — with three moisture blocks per station — are established on a center-pivot system.

According to Spitze, the stations are usually along, but far enough into the field to be away from the access road to the pivot system's center.

Both he and Loberg cautioned against selecting a site that offered extreme conditions for moisture-block readings.

They described those extreme sites a low spots, which stay wetter than the rest of the irrigated field, and high spots, which are often much drier than the rest of the cropland.

"All plants must be up," Spitze said. "The moisture blocks need to be placed right in the row between healthy plants. In the case of corn, a level spot at each station with three moisture blocks lined up among four plants works fine," he said.

SPITZE SAID THE stations should be between the first and second towers and between the eighth and ninth towers on the pivot.

With four such stations, that means a three-block station on each (start and stop) side of the access road near the center of the pivot and a three-block station on each side of the access road at the extension of the pivot, he said.

Once the sites are selected, according to Spitze, process of installing the blocks begins.

"The blocks have to be cycled," he said. That involves alternately soaking and drying the blocks a minimum of three times before installation.

"THE BEST METHOD is to simply soak the blocks in a plastic pail of water for 15 to 20 minutes and then allowing them to air dry for 24 hours," he said.

Since the blocks must be wet on installation, they need to be soaked a fourth time just before placing them at the desired field depth, Spitze said.

For all northeastern Nebraska crops other than alfalfa, the three soil moisture blocks at each station should be installed at depths of 6, 18 and 30 inches, he explained.

The soaked soil blocks, which are linked to the field surface by wires for eventual meter readings, soon take on the moisture characteristics of the soil around them.

Actually electrical resistance blocks, the moisture blocks are made by casting either gypsum or nylon-impregnated gypsum around a pair of stainless steel wire or wire grids. The wires are attached to lead wires which, when connected to the meter, provide soil moisture content measurements.

WHAT ACTUALLY happens is that the electrical resistance of the wires in the block varies with moisture content. The meter, which reads the block, shows greater electrical resistance in drier soil and diminished resistance in moist soil.

For instance, the soaked blocks should read a 10 on the scale (Delmhorst meter scale) before being implanted, according to Spitze.

A simple soil probe is used to implant the 12 blocks — three at four stations — at the desired field depths.

The probe leaves a cylindrical hole in the soil for receiving the cycled and soaked blocks. Any installer should take at least an additional inch of soil beyond the desired depth.

FOR EXAMPLE, on the 6-inch hole, push the probe to that depth, withdraw the soil and empty the probe's receptacle. Then, re-insert the probe to take a final inch of soil.

That final inch at each implant should be crumbled by hand and dropped back into the hole, according to Spitze. Then, with the aid of a funnel and a hollow tube, the installer needs to place a quarter-cup of water in the bottom of the hole to form a slurry-like bed for the moisture block, Spitze explained.

The wire on the moisture block is then threaded through a 4- or 5-foot, rigid-plastic pipe (1/2- or 3/4-inch) until the block itself is firm against the base of the insertion pipe.

With the pipe acting as an implantation rod, the block is placed firmly in the bottom of the hole, according to Spitze. Dirt pulled from the hole is then tamped in — a 3/4-inch dowel works fine — over the top of the block until it is again level with the field surface, he said.

ACCORDING TO Spitze, the installer needs to take a meter reading immediately after installation to check the performance of the block. "It should read 100 percent after soaking and 100 percent, or nearly so, after installation," he explained.

If the block checks out, the installer continues to the next block at the station, but not before clearly identifying the block by its depth. Spitze said one of the simplest ways to identify the series of three blocks is to tie knots in the surface wire — one knot for 6 inches, two knots for 18 inches and three knots for 30 inches.

After all three soil-moisture blocks are installed correctly, checked for performance and identified, a wooden stake

Spring Market Lamb Show

The Nebraska Spring Market Lamb Show is scheduled for Saturday, June 20 at Fanner Park in Grand Island, according to Doyle Wolverton, extension youth specialist in the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

The show consists of youth and adult divisions and is open only to Nebraska residents. All 4-H and FFA members are eligible for the youth division provided they did not reach their 19th birthday by Jan. 1, 1981. The adult division is open to all persons 19 and over.

The Nebraska Spring Market Lamb Show is a terminal show, and all lambs exhibited are consigned to slaughter. Exhibitors may show to individuals and a pen of three or a maximum of three lambs. Only ewes and wethers will be allowed to show, he said.

Classes will be divided by weight and not by breed. Minimum dry weight is 90 pounds with no tolerance given, the specialist emphasized. Entries in the youth division must carry a 4-H or FFA ear tag before weighing.

Entry forms are due June 10, and the $1 per head entry fee is payable at weigh-in prior to the show. The show is scheduled to begin at 1 p.m.

For entry forms or more information contact Tom Drudick, Hall County Extension Office, 2925 West Station Park Road, Grand Island, Neb. 68801.

Organic Gardening Article Free

Concern for a healthful environment and growing foods without synthetic chemicals have increased the popularity of organic gardening.

Both backyard and commercial gardeners have adopted techniques which promote the growth of food organically.

A story outlining the benefits and drawbacks of organic gardening is in the Spring 1981 issue of the Farm, Ranch and Home Quarterly, available free from Quarterly Subscription, 106 Ag Communications University of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. 68583.

Rope-Wick Guidelines Available

The use of producer built rope wick herbicide applicators for non selective herbicides has grown rapidly. A new publication, (Nebuguide G81 555) "Guidelines for Constructing a Pipewick Applicator" is now available from Nebraska county extension offices. This will be followed soon by "Guidelines for Using Pipewick and Other Selective Applicators" (Nebuguide G81 562).

According to Stan Starling, Dixon County extension agent, the new guide contains numerous tips on selecting the best construction materials (for example, black pipe may pressurize the system, and some types of rope wick too slow, others too fast), design and mounting.

Cost estimate for materials is just under $100 with $47 of this spent for the recommended wicking rope.

Wildlife Planting Deadline Near

Time is growing short for planting the free seeds for wildlife, according to Ron Johnson, extension wildlife specialist at the University of Nebraska.

Under a cooperative program, the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission has provided these seeds to participating county extension offices throughout Nebraska.

"These counties will give the seeds to young people, sportsmen or others who request them for planting. However, time is short; the seeds should be in the ground no later than mid June, and sooner if possible," the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources specialist said.

According to Johnson, this program offers an opportunity for Nebraskans to have a special role in helping wildlife by providing wildlife with food and cover this next winter. It is also an opportunity for school or youth group projects.

Johnson notes that youngsters can photograph or sketch the planting process, observe the wildlife that use the food or make posters for county fair projects.

Western Water Supply Limited

Water supplies may be severely limited for much of the West this summer, according to the season's final coordinated report issued by the U.S. Departments of Agriculture and Commerce.

Streamflow will be very low throughout much of the West this summer. Norman A. Berg, chief of USDA's Soil Conservation Service, said that irrigation water supplies will be limited in most areas. Water shortages should be expected where supplemental reservoir storage is not available.

The National Weather Service of the Commerce Department's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration warns that if the summer weather is not usually wet, many of the West's reservoirs will be severely depleted by heavy demands during the 1981 irrigation season.

Surveys carried out the first of May revealed very poor mountain snowpack conditions. Many rivers already have reached their spring peaks and have begun to recede as much as a month early, Berg said.

The headwaters of the Colorado, the South Platte and the Arkansas basins, all in the central Rockies, are expected to experience near minimum streamflow.

Pseudorabies in Swine Herds

Sixty-three Nebraska swine herds were confirmed positive for pseudorabies by lab tests at the University of Nebraska Veterinary Diagnostic Center from January to April, 1981, according to the NU Department of Veterinary Science extension newsletter.

Dr. Clayton Kelling said this compares with 66 pseudorabies-positive Nebraska herds during the same period in 1980. Pseudorabies is the viral disease of swine that was detected most frequently at the diagnostic center during the first third of 1981, Kelling said.

One or more pseudorabies positive cases have been confirmed in 32 Nebraska counties so far in 1981. The counties are scattered over most of the state where there are significant hog populations.

$50 Million in Lost Yields

Spring Freeze Hurts Wheat Crop

Nebraska farmers could lose more than $50 million from lower wheat yields as a result of the freezing temperatures earlier this season, the Nebraska Cooperative Extension Service Ag Climate Situation Committee has reported.

Dr. Kenneth R. Bolen, assistant extension director, said the estimated loss is based on field inspections and analysis to date, indicating that more than 1/3 of the 3,050,000 acres of wheat in the state sustained varying degrees of freeze damage.

DAMAGE OCCURRING from one or more of the freezes in May occurred from southeast Nebraska to the Colorado line, Bolen said, and loss estimates compiled by NU agronomists and extension agents range from zero to 100 percent.

"It is too early to determine the full extent of the damage," he emphasized, noting that the next official estimate of crop production -- as of June 1 conditions -- will be released by the Nebraska Crop and Livestock Reporting Service soon.

The critical thing now, Bolen said, is for wheat farmers to get into the wheat fields, assess the extent and nature of any frost damage and make management decisions based on their individual circumstances.

Freeze damage varies from field to field and within fields, according to Dr. Don Hanway, Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources extension agronomist.

THE BULK OF the Nebraska wheat crop from Holdrege eastward has bloomed, he said. The later stage of development of wheat in the Nebraska Panhandle makes it impossible to determine the extent of damage there at this time.

As early as two days after blooming, persons can detect whether kernels are forming, the agronomist stated. Careful removal of glumes (hulls or husks) from the spikelets allows easy observation of kernel development.

Whitish heads are likely to indicate severe damage and probably sterility, Hanway said but discolored heads are not the whole story, he warned.

Some fields are obviously whitish, discolored and sterile. Others that have a normal appearance from the road may be found to be highly sterile upon close field inspection.

Different heads on the same plant were at different stages of development at the time of a freeze. Some can be entirely sterile, some partly sterile and some normal.

The degree of damage may vary widely in different parts of a single field and from field to field in every neighborhood. Farmer decisions can be made only on a field to field basis," Hanway stressed.

THERE IS A "catch 22" time factor for farmers to determine whether a wheat field is moderately damaged and are willing to accept lower yields at harvest, or confirm that a wheat field is lost for grain production and make a decision to cut the wheat for silage or hay and plant another crop, the committee pointed out.

Waiting a couple of days to make a final, accurate determination on a borderline damaged field is worthwhile, Hanway said. However, Ralph Neid, IANR extension climatologist, warned that the number of potential growing degree days remaining in the current crop season will make it necessary to plant replacement crops in many areas in early June if they are to be harvested for grain.

Farmers have a week to two weeks to make a decision and plant crops for grain, and slightly longer to decide to cut wheat for silage, he said. However, palatability of wheat plants declines as heads mature, agronomists stated.

The committee made these general recommendations on management practices, if a decision is made to destroy damaged wheat or cut it for hay or silage.

Platte River and east of Highway 281, if the presence of chinch bugs is confirmed in wheat before it is cut. In this high risk area, soybeans should be planted if possible.

In fallow areas, where frost-damaged or killed wheat is to be destroyed, begin to treat the ground as fallow for planting to grain sorghum next spring or to wheat in 1982. This means no harvested crop on these tracts in 1981. Plant present fallow land to grain sorghum now (subject to limitations posed by chinch bugs), rather than to wheat this fall. Another option: begin to fallow the frostkilled wheat now and plant back to wheat this fall.

Bolen reminded farmers who have decided to destroy a wheat crop to contact their county ASCS office before moving into the field, to check on provisions for disaster payments or federal crop insurance settlement.

THE COMMITTEE reemphasized recommendations made earlier by Bruce Anderson, extension forage specialist, and Bob Roselle, extension entomologist, in handling damaged wheat as hay or silage.

Hay from wheat or other small grain, plants in the late boot and flowering stages, which were most severely damaged by frost, is of better quality than most prairie hay. Silage from these grains will provide about 80 percent of the feed value of good corn silage.

Sunflowers can be seeded for silage production, and may be done immediately if moisture is available, seedlings as late as July can produce a silage crop.

Precautions will need to be observed in using freeze-damaged wheat for feed because many fields have been treated with chemicals for insect control. As an example, if wheat has been sprayed with endrin, it cannot be used for silage, forage or bedding.

Irrigators

should get a good reading. Spitzer said you can see it takes some time. That's why the stations need to be set up early in the growing cycle.

ONCE MOISTURE readings begin, the irrigator continues reading the three block stations each week. The moisture reading data is plugged into the AgNet computer, which is preprogrammed with such vital crop information as rainfall, heat evaporation, wind for the week.

Backing the current weather information used by the computer for determining the farmer's irrigation schedule is a weather model built on the previous 10 years.

Additional preprogrammed information -- data obtained from the irrigator -- includes type of crop, size, acreage and growth, planting date, length of growing season, type of soil, depth and location of soil moisture blocks, and capacity of irrigation unit.

All the farmer needs to do is get the block readings once a week, explained Spitzer. We feed it into the computer and within minutes he knows exactly when to irrigate.

IN AREAS OF

central and eastern Nebraska, where there is inadequate subsoil moisture, replanting wheat fields to soybeans or sorghum to be harvested for grain is chancy under present conditions. In the case of sorghum, low soil moisture reserves now should prompt farmers to reduce plant populations.

There is a potential for severe chinch bug damage to sorghum planted after wheat in the area of Nebraska south of the

Baa, Baa Black Sheep

WHEN THE WOOL gets thick and the weather gets hot it's time for all sheep to get their annual "hair cut". Each year in late May or early June, Wayne County 4-H members have their sheep sheared. The purpose of shearing is to keep the animals cool in hot weather and uniform at fair time. The sheep are weighed and identified to begin a rate-of-gain contest for the county fair. A new contest this year is the commercial pen of three competition. Last week, Wayne County 4-H members had their sheep sheared by Steve Gramlich who is 4-H sheep chairman in Wayne County and sheep superintendent at the county fair. The wool will be donated to purchase trophies for the competition. Darrin Spittgerber (left) practices up on his sheep shearing abilities with one of his lambs while Cynthia Waide watches as Steve Gramlich (right) finishes up on one of her lambs.

Farmer Coops Set Sales Records Despite Steady Numbers Decline

Farmer cooperatives' 1979 combined business volume of nearly $56.3 billion was a record high, even though the number of cooperatives continued to decline, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Randall Torgerson, administrator of USDA's Agricultural Cooperative Service, said the business volume was 29.1 percent higher than for 1977 and resulted from higher prices for many farm products marketed by cooperatives and for certain farm production supplies sold by cooperatives. He said the number of cooperatives dropped from 6,736 to 6,445 and memberships declined from 5.8 million to 5.7 million. Marketing volume, up 29.7 percent from 1977, totaled $41.7 billion. Marketing of all farm products increased with grain, the leading farm product, up 26.1 percent to $41.9 billion. But, Torgerson said, bigger gainers were livestock and livestock products, up 63 percent; miscellaneous products (hay, forest products, etc.), up 56.7 percent; and fruit and vegetables, up 37.7 percent. FARM SUPPLY volume of $13.5 billion increased mainly from increased sales of petroleum products, feed and fertilizer. Petroleum products rose 32.2 percent, to $3.8 billion; feed, up 12.5 percent, to $3.2 billion; and fertilizer, up 13.5 percent, to $2.8 billion. Other supplies (small hardware items, etc.) and farm machinery and equipment both showed an increase of 37.7 percent; and farm chemicals went up 36.8 percent. Volume of other services related to the farm business rose to nearly $1.1 billion, an 18 percent increase over 1977 volume. The leading state in combined marketing, farm supply, and related service volume handled by cooperatives was Iowa with nearly $4.9 billion, or 8.4 percent of the total. Minnesota ranked second, with nearly $4.3 billion and 7.6 percent. California followed closely with $4.2 billion and 7.5 percent. The decrease of 291 cooperatives between 1977 and 1979 reflects the continuing trend of merger, consolidation, and acquisition. Torgerson said: "This decline also resulted from an intensive effort to contact cooperatives that had not responded during recent surveys. In many cases, these organizations had been discontinued or no longer were operating as a cooperative," he said. MINNESOTA continued to have the most cooperatives with 741. Other states, in order, were North Dakota, 431; Texas, 411; and Wisconsin, 410. The national membership total of 5.7 million exceeds the number of U.S. farmers because some farmers belong to two or more cooperatives. The 1979 membership total was down 1.2 percent from 1977 membership, reflecting in part the continued reduction in the number of farms and farmers. Minnesota had the most co-op members with 551,666. Other states, in order, were Wisconsin, 347,985; Iowa, 322,759; and Illinois, 311,663.

Bibs and a Bonnet

KELLY NATHAN, the 18-month-old daughter of Stan and Cindy Nathan, Hoskins, was out and about last week in Hoskins with her grandmother Ann Nathan. Her lace-bordered bibs, complete with "girls are great" embroidered on the front, set off a smart bonnet to keep the warm, late spring sun out of her eyes. The twosome was checking out the new pumper being put through its paces at a water hydrant near grandmother's home.

Sheep Producers Slate Contest For Wayne County Fairgrounds

Northeast Nebraska Sheep Producers are sponsoring their second annual sheep carcass contest on June 14.

Producers are encouraged to bring one or two market lambs to the Wayne County Fairgrounds beginning at 12:30 p.m. Sunday, June 14, with the contest beginning at 2 p.m.

The contest is held so that sheep producers may find out what type of product they are producing and also sharpen their skills as to what makes an ideal market lamb.

THIS YEAR THE contest is open to all sheep producers. However, non members of Northeast Nebraska Sheep Producers Association must pay a fee of $5 for the first lamb and $3 for the second lamb. Each producer is allowed one market lamb per individual or two market lambs per family.

The afternoon will begin at 2 p.m. when participants will try their hands at judging which lamb will produce the best carcass.

After this the live animals will be placed by Dr. Keith Gilster, official judge, from the University of Nebraska Department of Animal Science.

The lambs will be shipped to a packer in Sioux Falls where carcass measurements will be taken and returned to contest officials.

THE AFTERNOON will be concluded with a lamb feed. All interested participants may bring their lambs to the Wayne County Fairgrounds.

Winside Trikers & Bikers

WINSIDE SCHOOLS Superintendent Don Leighton, above, gets seven village youngsters started on Sunday's "Ride for Winside," a bike-a-thon sponsored by the Winside Community Improvement Committee. At right, the Rev. John Halermann, St. Paul's Lutheran Church, gets some bicycle riders a boost for their first ride around the track. The day was hot and windy and the trikers opened the "Ride for Winside." Then, the two-wheelers took over for an afternoon of riding around the athletic field track behind the high school. The limit was 20 miles and money was pledged on riders for distance. Funds will be used to improve the village's playground, park and picnic facilities, according to Gay Lea Halermann, bike-a-thon chairman. Committee members included Gloria Lessman, Ron Leapey and Marilyn Morse. Refreshments were free to bikers and trikers.
