School board letting bids for new shop addition

The Wayne-Carroll Board of Education Tuesday night agreed to proceed with bid letting on the expansion of the high school's vocational education facilities.

That decision came following a special meeting with architect Lynn Jones of the firm Davis, Fenton, Stang and Darling of Lincoln, the original architects of the school.

Also present at the meeting was electrical engineer Dean Cassel who outlined electrical proposals for the shop addition.

Superintendent Francis Haun said bids will be let during another special meeting of the school board at 8 p.m. July 27.

Haun added that the board, which voted last May to let bids on the vocational expansion, has the option to reject any or all bids on the proposed $90,000 project.

meeting, the architect told board members his firm had looked at several options when drawing up final plans and had met with both of the school's shop instructors and with members of the Vocational Advisory Council.

Base plans call for a 56' x 60' expansion to the west of the existing facility. The addition would be used for auto mechanics and metals, including electrical work, small engine repair and welding.

The expansion would include room for four automobile bays and four overhead doors, three doors measuring 10 feet wide by 12 feet high, and the fourth door measuring 12' x 12'.

Jones said the large doors would allow for the possibility of storing or working on school buses.

The existing facility would be expanded for woodworking and would include a classroom for both woodworking and auto mechanics and metals students.

The architect also presented board members with an alternate plan which calls for nine additional feet to the south. That plan would allow for a total of eight automobile bays in the newly-expanded area.

Alternate plans also include an automobile hoist.

JONES, WHO said the expanded area when completed will match the original school design, told board members he could not predict how bids will come in.

"A project of this size is probably going to generate a lot of interest," said the architect. "I wouldn't be surprised to see eight to 12 bids."

Haun said bid letting will be for one contract rather than for the traditional three — electrical, mechanical and general.

In addition, the newspaper's office will be closed July 3 and July 5.

Wakefield man is in satisfactory condition

A Wakefield man is in satisfactory condition at Providence Medical Center after a motorcycle accident on Saturday.

Shortly before twelve noon, a car driven by Leland Smith of Norfolk was eastbound on highway 35 when he slowed down for a slow-moving vehicle and was hit from behind by an eastbound motorcycle driven by DeWayne Witt of Wakefield.

The accident occurred about 2.9 miles East of Wayne on Highway 35, according to state patrol officer Dave Headley.

Ambulance purchase gains council okay

Marcel Thomas of Providence Medical Center, addressed the Wayne city council Tuesday night regarding the purchase of a new ambulance, during a public hearing on proposed uses of federal revenue sharing funds.

By law, city council's must hold public hearings to allow groups and the public to suggest ways the federal funds should be spent.

Thomas outlined the present emergency equipment in use at the hospital which includes an older Pontiac ambulance and a late model Cadillac ambulance.

"THE PONTIAC HAS been wrecked twice," Thomas said, "and as a result has several problems. The flooring has rusted out and has had to be reinforced and the windows leak."

"The Cadillac," she said, "although it provides a very smooth ride for the patients, is very heavy and as a result has tire wear problems. It also has a lighting problem that we've tried to have repaired from Wayne to Sioux City with no results."

"We have a good service," Thomas said, "but in order to maintain a high level of one of the vehicles, I'm also aware of the reduced spending and budget cuts but we need to maintain a reliable, dependable service for the Wayne area."

When asked if she had any independent information concerning a new ambulance, Thomas told the council that, although she preferred the Cadillac model, "Unfortunately we purchased one of the latest model models," she said.

SHE WENT ON to outline the three types of emergency vehicles that are now available.

"Type one," she said, "is basically a single-seater truck with the wheels through frame drive shaft to the transmission area."

"Type two" is an older Pontiac type vehicle with a rubber top. The seat is about 20 inches wide and it carries both one and two patients.

The third type is also a van but is termed a "cutaway," which is equipped with dual rear tires. This type is about 90 inches wide, about 67 inches high, and allows an additional patient to be treated in a hanging cot in the middle of the van for two people to work on the patient.

"I'VE ALSO CHECKED locally," Thomas said, "with dealers for an off the road type vehicle chassis. She said that she hasn't requested any formal bids on any of the vehicles but the range would seem to be from about $20,000 to $42,000."

She added that an area supplier of emergency vehicles has a 1981 type one model.

Council was concerned with adequate facilities for garaging a new ambulance at the medical center but Thomas said there would be sufficient room but some things would have to be rearranged.

Councilmember Carolyn Filter outlined the history of the ambulance service at the medical center and in the community of Wayne.

ACCORDING TO FILTER, a number of years ago a funeral home provided the service which was later taken over by the city and then taken over by the city hospital.

When the medical center was built, the center agreed to take over the service with help from the city.

"Although the city attorney at the time cautioned us against entering a formal agreement which would bind future council, the verbal agreement was that the city would purchase a new emergency vehicle every five years," Filter said, "and that was seven years ago."

There are "three" models of ambulances available. The first is a single-seater, the second is a double-seater and is on a truck chassis. The request and we have discussed that about $11,000 could be made available for the purchase. Not all of the funding would necessarily come from revenue sharing. Filter explained.

ALTHOUGH FILTER said Kloster was planning on starting a fund for future purchases of emergency vehicles, with Kloster on vacation, it could not be confirmed.

Thomas told the council that the past years, the hospital has purchased equipment for the ambulance service without aid from the city.

The council went on record, through a motion, to continue to support the ambulance service with up to $25,000 when a purchase is ready to be made.

Thomas told the council she plans to form a board, also requesting that at least one council member serve on the board, to review specifications and needs for a new vehicle.

She also said she intends for the purchase to be done through a bidding procedure and thanked the council for their support of the program.

TUESDAY NIGHT the council also defeated an ordinance which would replace the present ordinance dealing with the placement of trees, etc. in the public right-of-way, mainly in the parking areas.

Although the vote was 4-2 with councilmembers James Craun and Gary Vopalevsky voting against the measure, in order to gain passage there has to be a majority (five votes).

Following the council meeting both Craun and Vopalevsky indicated they voted against the measure because they believe the present ordinance is sufficient and are against increased regulation.

Absent from Tuesday night's meeting was Larry Johnson. Darrel Furbert arrived late after the vote on the ordinance had been recorded.

ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIONS Tuesday night included informing the council of special problems and projects for the upcoming Christmas season sponsored in part by the Wayne Regional Arts Center.

The council gave verbal approval to the

The Providence Medical Center has been hosting a MECO (Medical Education Community Orientation) student this past month under the supervision of Dr. Robert Benthack.

Mark Reida, a student from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln Medical School, has finished his first year of medical school and has plans to graduate in '85 with his degree.

Reida has been observing Dr. Benthack in surgery and during the regular doctor-patient visits from Dr. DeWegman and Dr. Lindau of Wayne have also participated in some of his training as well as Dr. Dalheim of Norfolk.

REIDA HAS ALSO gone on ambulance runs and observed some emergency surgery at the hospital. This next week, he will be going with the visiting nurses organization in Wayne to the various homes.

The student has been staying in an empty room at the hospital. He spends his spare time playing golf and going to movies.

The MECO program is sponsored by the American Medical Student Association and gives medical students a chance to observe doctors at work in local hospitals. Reida said that about 20 percent of the University students participated in this program during the summer. They were asked to visit the hospitals in order of preference and that were given assignments according to file.

Reida will complete his observation period this weekend and return to Lincoln this fall to complete his schooling.

Husker Power Clinic set next week in Wayne

A power clinic, sponsored by the University of Nebraska and UNL power coaches, is planned July 9 at Wayne High School. The Wayne clinic will be one of 14 across the state and high school boys and girls will be tested on agility, power and speed. A minimum of 60 students is required.

Tests will include an agility drill, vertical jump, seated shot put and 40-yard dash. Winners will be presented awards and advance to a state-wide contest scheduled Aug. 8 in Lincoln. There will be two divisions for boys and girls: 9-10 grades, 11-12 grades.

The clinic is designed to promote physical fitness and get an earlier look at potential college athletes. UNL strength coach Boyd Eppley plans to compile results of all his clinics and make a computerized printout sheet for every college in the state.

Eppley would like to coordinate the high schools in the state of Nebraska on a weight training program. Six Nebraska University strength coaches will conduct the clinic which is expected to last a couple of hours. A film about the NU weight program will be shown.

Entry forms may be picked up at the Wayne High School office, The Wayne Herald building or from coaches Lonnie Ehrhardt, Ron Carnes, Mavis Dalton or Dale Hochstein. Applications are due July 6.

The only other clinic in northeast Nebraska is planned July 10 at Norfolk High School.

Starzl earns All-State honors

Mark Starzl of Wakefield was named first team pitcher on the Omaha World Herald All State baseball team announced Saturday. Starzl recorded a 7-2 record to join Rick Kyle of Omaha Northwest and Paul Schmitz of Omaha Westside on the first team.

"He's the best from our area in years," the World Herald quoted Wayne coach Mike Mallette as saying.

Third base is probably his best position. "Wakefield coach Joe Coble told the World Herald, 'But we needed him to pitch and he did a great job.

Starzl, who is famous for his breaking pitches, struck out 88 batters in 46 innings. He plans to play baseball at Kearney State College.

Two other Northeast Nebraskans were named to the honorable mention list. Dave Marquardt of Laurel was selected as an infielder and Jeff McCright of Wayne was chosen as an outfielder.

Overin's long blasts lead Midgets to easy victory over Bancroft

It took only one pitch in the bottom of the fifth inning for the Wayne Midgets to dispose of Bancroft by the 10-run rule. Steve Overin blasted that pitch into orbit for a solo home run, giving Wayne a 1-3 3 win Monday night in Ralph Bishop League play.

Overin had a near perfect game. He singled in the first inning, slugged a grand slam homer over the left field fence and into the trees in the second inning, doubled in a run in the fourth and homered again in the fifth. In all he had six RBIs and three runs during a 4-for-4 performance. He also pitched a three-hitter and retired nine batters on strikeouts in five innings.

Two of Bancroft's hits came in the fourth inning with back-to-back doubles. A pair of errors aided the visitors as they managed three runs.

Wayne scored its first four runs on Overin's second inning grand slam. Peter Warne and Randy Gamble singled, Chris Wieseler walked and then with bases loaded Overin whalloped his two out homer.

The fourth inning was even more productive for the hosts. Rick Nelson singled, Gamble reached base on an error, Chris Wieseler singled in a run, Overin doubled in another. Don Larsen singled in another, Jeff Jorgensen walked, Todd Dorcay singled and Warne tripped to drive in three runs. Nelson followed that by clubbing a double.

Wayne is scheduled to host Laurel tomorrow (Friday) night in Midget and Legion action.

Randy's Recap

By Randy Hascall

A WEEK OF VACATION can do wonders for a sports writer. I spent seven days in Missouri—two at Kansas City, and five at Columbia last week. It was basically a "working vacation" but it was great to get away from the newspaper grind for awhile. It's always tough to get back into the swing of things after vacation but I was ready to get back.

Thanks to The Wayne Herald staff for doing a fine job of filling in while I was gone. Special thanks to our summer intern Michelle "Merle" Kubik. She had her hands full with sports and general news and put in more hours than most people would be willing to give for their jobs. In fact, she was finishing up some of her work at about 4 a.m. last Saturday.

OUR EDITOR Paul Farmer got his first and last taste of slow pitch softball for the summer. He joined our softball team prior to the weekend's Wayne Class B softball tournament. In our second game, "Whazis" Farmer was inserted as a pinch runner. He was our tying run in the bottom of the seventh inning and was on second base with no outs. Our third base coach sent him home on a base hit and it appeared we would tie the game up. However, about halfway between third and home, Farmer did one of the best dives I've ever seen. He must have had past experience as a tumbler, vaulter or diver.

Unfortunately for us, the catcher caught the throw home, came down the third base line and tagged my boss out. We never did tie the game although we had the tying run on third base four times in the last two innings.

Farmer found out later that he broke his clavicle on the play. When his collarbone heals, he swears he's going back to the courts (tennis and racquetball) and will avoid softball fields.

By the way, he insists he wasn't chewing gum and running at the same time.

THE FIRST TOURNEY ever held at the Jaycee complex was well run. A couple of games were marred by arguments but overall, it was a great way to break in the fields. Tournament director Danny Robinson completed a 16-team, double elimination tourney in one day.

Several more tournaments are planned later this summer. The Jaycee fields are going to be excellent when they are completed. There is tons of work to be done yet but patience will lead to a fine four-field complex.

When grass is seeded, fences put in, restroom facilities and a concession stand added and other minor projects completed, Wayne will have a complex of which it can be proud. It all takes time and shouldn't be rushed.

WAYNE HIGH SCHOOL will be the site of a Nebraska University power clinic on July 9. The clinic will be conducted by the UNL power coaches and is one of 15 across the state.

High school boys and girls will be tested on agility, power and speed. At least 60 students are required to participate. Tests will include an agility drill, vertical jump, seated shot put and 40-yard dash. Winners will be presented awards and advance to a state-wide contest Aug. 8 in Lincoln.

The clinic is designed to promote physical fitness and give college athletes across the state an earlier look at potential college athletes. Nebraska strength coach Boyd Eppley plans to compile results of all his clinics and make a computerized printout sheet for every college in the state.

Eppley's goal is to coordinate the high schools in Nebraska on a weight training program. Entry forms may be picked up at The Wayne Herald office or Wayne High School.

Struck by lightning

BRANCHES WERE scattered more than 100 yards away when lightning struck a tree on the number eight hole Tuesday at the Wayne Country Club. The tree was totally demolished and limbs were distributed in a large area. The number seven green and fairway were hit by debris and the largest branches covered much of the number eight fairway. Even a robin, which was apparently perched in the tree, was killed. Bill Vrtiska discovered the damage shortly after lightning hit. Wayne CC workers were busy cleaning up the mess Tuesday afternoon.

School meal guidelines change

The maximum income a family can earn and still have their children qualify for free or reduced price school meals will go up 10 percent in July.

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Mary Jarrall said the change is a result of the annual cost of living adjustment made by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to help people keep up with inflation.

Under the adjustment, the income limit for free meal eligibility, which is set by Congress at 130 percent of the federal poverty line, will go from $10,990 to $12,090 for a family of four. Eligibility for reduced price meals, set at 185 percent of poverty, will rise from $15,630 to $17,210.

The federal poverty line is $9,300 for a family of four.

USDA is required by law to update the income limits each July 1. The guidelines govern participation in the free or low cost meal program under the national school lunch, school breakfast, child care food, special milk and commodity school programs.

Following are the annual income limits which will take effect

Family Size	Free Meal Eligibility	Reduced Price Meal Eligibility
1	6,080	8,660
2	8,090	11,510
3	10,090	14,360
4	12,090	17,210
5	14,090	20,050
6	16,090	22,900
7	18,100	25,750
8	20,100	28,600

For each additional family member add: 2,000 2,850

Control procedures explained

With the rain comes the mosquitoes. There must be a wise old saying like that because Nebraskans are finding that to be the case.

All the rain Nebraska has received has generated most mosquitoes than normal for this time of year, said Dr. Dave Keith, University of Nebraska extension entomologist.

What to do to overcome the pesky critters? Keith advised draining any standing water you can find, since mosquitoes breed in standing water. He suggested checking clogged eaves, discarded tires, children's wading pools, tin cans or anything that collects water.

MOSQUITO EGGS HATCH in two to three days and adults emerge seven to 10 days later under ideal conditions. Adults usually remain close to breeding areas, Keith said, but they can be blown by wind for up to 40 miles. Migration range is usually five to 10 miles, he said. Adult mosquitoes live for up to three weeks and only the females bite.

To control mosquitoes in the backyard, Keith said to "be certain to apply sprays in enough water to thoroughly wet resting areas such as shrubbery, flower beds, weeds and grasses bordering lawns and patios."

Recommended treatment chemicals for mosquitoes are malathion, carbaryl (Sevin), neld (Dibrom) or ronnel (Karlan). "Use these treatments only as directed on the label and observe all environmental precautions," Keith said.

Dixon forestry, horticulture contests

The Dixon County 4-H forestry and horticulture contests will be held Thursday, July 8 at the Northeast Station near Concord. The forestry contest will begin at 10 a.m. followed by the horticulture contest at 1 p.m. Included in the forestry contest is a written quiz and tree leaf identification.

The horticulture contest consists of a written quiz, identification of plant parts and seeds, and judging of four classes of vegetables. Competition should end about 2:30 p.m. Questions and answers will be discussed with participants following the contest.

4-H members interested in competing in the contests may register by completing and returning by July 2 the entry form mailed to 4-H members. Juniors (under 12) and seniors will compete in separate divisions. All those competing will be awarded ribbons, and the state fair judging team contestants will be selected from the top scoring senior division participants. Enrollment in forestry or horticulture projects is not required to compete in the contests so all Dixon County 4-H members are encouraged to register for both of these educational events.

4-H horse project peaking

Nationally, the 4-H horse project enrolled 264,721 members in 1981 which made it number one in all animal projects in the United States. In Nebraska, the 4-H Horse project was second only to beef, and ranked 18th nationally with 4,262 members enrolled in horse projects. This follows a very modest beginning in the late 1950's. New York led 1981 horse enrollments with 25,224 members.

The great 1981 National 4-H Club Program enrolled more than four million members with 60,716 in Nebraska. Ambitious 4-H members in 2,670 clubs enrolled in 161,957 projects. A total of 11,714 Nebraska adult and junior leaders were very important to this great youth program.

Area livestock judging planned

Dixon County 4-H members will have an opportunity to compete with youth from Thurston, Dakota, Cedar, and Wayne counties at the area 4-H Livestock Judging Contest on July 16 at the Laurel Sales Barn, according to the Dixon County Extension Service. There will be type demonstrations, general judging instructions and judging competition. Classes will be offered in beef, sheep, and swine. Official judges will review the classes following competition.

Registration is from 1 to 3:30 p.m. the day of the contest. Contestants from each county will be scored separately. There is no separate contest for the Dixon County Fair so winners will be determined from this contest.

4-H members may attend to observe if they do not wish to compete. However, all Dixon County 4-H members are encouraged to participate. Anyone wishing further information may contact the Dixon County Extension Office at Concord (584 2261).

Demonstration contest is planned

The Dixon County 4-H demonstration contest will be held at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, July 12 at the Northeast Station near Concord, according to the Dixon County Cooperative Extension Service. The demonstrations teach by showing how and explaining why something is done. Learning comes easier and more quickly if the process being done is seen as it is explained.

4-H youth interested in competing in the contest may register by completing and returning to the County Extension Office by July 2 the entry form mailed to 4-H members. Demonstrations may be given in any area regardless of project enrollment. Trophies will be awarded to top demonstrators and all contestants will receive ribbons. The demonstration contest is a learning experience in the art of effective communications, so all Dixon County 4-H members are encouraged to participate. The public is invited to attend.

Bike rodeo set July 13

The Dixon County 4-H Bicycle Rodeo will be held Tuesday, July 13 at the Concord Park, according to Brent Kahl, 4-H assistant. Competition will begin at 9 a.m. Bicycle rodeo events include a safety quiz, bike balance, bike slalom, fast-time bicycle control, and riding figure eights.

Scores from the last three events will be subtracted from the total of the first two events to obtain a final score. There will be separate divisions for juniors (under 12) and seniors, and ribbons will be awarded on the basis of the final score to all those participating. Dixon County 4-H members interested in participating in the bicycle rodeo may register by completing the entry form sent to 4-H members and returning it to the County Extension Office by Friday, July 2. The bicycle rodeo places emphasis on bike safety, and the event is fun for everyone involved.

Nebraska cattle feeders had 1,620,000 cattle on feed on June 1. Inventory was up 12 percent from last year and 21 percent above 1980. This was a record high number on feed for the month.

Fed cattle marketings for the month of May totaled 350,000 a decrease of 3 percent from 1981 but was 17 percent above May 1980.

Placements of cattle into feedlots during May totaled a record high 440,000 head. Placements were up 26 percent from last year and were 22 percent above two years ago.

Sheep producers to meet

The July meeting of the Northeast Nebraska Sheep Producers will be Tuesday, July 13 at 8 p.m. at the Columbus Federal Savings and Loan Building in Wayne (1/2 blocks west of Junctions of Highways 15 & 35). Dr. Dwight Loveday will be presenting the results of the lamb carcass contest and the lamb carcasses will be viewed at Johnson's Frozen Food. Business meeting and lunch will follow.

Judging contest preparations made

Four 4-H members enrolled in livestock projects are preparing for the annual judging contest.

The Wayne County Teen Supreme Junior Leadership Club is preparing a training workshop Tuesday, July 6, at 9 a.m. at the Wayne County Fair Grounds.

Workshop coordinators Terina and Cynthia Wade said there will be classes in both breeding and market swine, sheep and beef.

Participants will have an opportunity to make placings, give reasons, and answer questions about the animals. Teen Supreme members will be available to assist the younger 4-H'ers.

Entry packets are available from the Wayne County Extension Office for those wishing to obtain them.

The official county judging contest will be held July 14 at Laurel.

Engineer helped farmers' hearing

this and that

don c. spitzer

The nation's farmers might never know it, but they probably have a Nebraska tractor test engineer to thank for what's left of their hearing.

Milo "Mike" Mumgaard, recently retired assistant chief engineer at the University of Nebraska Tractor Test Laboratory, finished up a career spanning more than 30 years at NU. His contributions encompass a variety of innovations in agricultural engineering and are known primarily to those who work ed alongside him. But one stands out consistently.

"I think his most significant contribution is in the reduction of noise levels in tractor cabs. This applies not just in Nebraska. It affects anyone driving a tractor anywhere in the world," said Dr. William Splinter, head of the NU agricultural engineering department.

BECAUSE NO STANDARDIZED test existed to measure noise levels in tractor cabs, farmers had no way to judge one cab against another before the internationally emulated Tractor Test Lab began its testing procedure in 1970.

Since no published test results listed comparisons of manufacturers, tractor companies had little incentive to reduce noise levels in their cabs, explained John Carlyle, NU Tractor Test technician.

"When you get a new test program going at this tractor test lab, you're really doing something," Carlyle said. It's hard to get new programs going with the tractor companies. I remember most his carrying the ball, almost exclusively."

Splinter explained that Mumgaard developed the instrumentation to calibrate noise levels in tractor cabs. He worked in conjunction with the Speech and Hearing Clinic at the Barkley Memorial Center on the NU East Campus. The clinic had identified "tractor ear," a hearing loss at certain frequencies, among farmers and rural students.

As a result of the published tests on cab noise, the average noise level has decreased from more than 100 decibels to about 70 decibels, Splinter said.

According to Irv Deshayes, assistant professor of speech pathology and audiology the Speech and Hearing Clinic has recorded a decrease in the incidence of tractor ear over the last five years.

"I think the primary reason is because Mike has pushed for this," Deshayes said.

"There is no reason within a few years—that with these new cabs, the hearing of farm kids will be the same as urban kids. Probably within a few years, we'll see tractor ear disappear," Splinter said.

WHILE THE INNOVATIONS in the testing of tractor cab noise have been perhaps the most far-reaching of his contributions, Mumgaard has helped solve a wide range of electrical engineering problems in his time.

"I guess I'd have to say that Mike had a very broad background," Carlyle said.

Born in Audubon, Iowa, Mumgaard graduated from Iowa State University in 1947. He was a rural electrical sales manager with Sear, Roebuck and Co. from 1947-1949. Then for two years, he served as agricultural engineer in charge of power use and public relations with the Norris Rural Public Power District at Beatrice.

He joined the NU extension service in 1951, working primarily with rural electrification until 1967. Helping pioneer natural air grain drying in Nebraska, Mumgaard worked with cooperative early on, giving demonstration of the new technique.

Another primary extension effort during his early days was to develop a plan to sanitize water systems.

"Something we really accomplished was the concept of good water on the farm, especially in the pump house and pump platform," Mumgaard said.

Another major project during his extension days was coordinating the proper use of electricity. Splinter explained. Working with the Nebraska Inter-Industry Electric Council, he helped farmers modulate peak power use and was instrumental in developing safety standards for the wiring of pump plants. He also worked to introduce then inexpensive electrical heating for farmhouses, Splinter said.

"It standardized and simplified the installation of electric motors for irrigation. Anyone installing a well could use a standardized motor," Mumgaard said.

AS CENTER PIVOT irrigation became increasingly popular, Mumgaard worked with NU extension specialist Rolfe Schlieder to ensure that manufacturers standardized the new irrigation systems and implemented safety features preventing shocks.

Then in 1967 he joined the staff of the NU Tractor Test Lab and began to make the testing instrumentation more efficient and adapted them for mobile use on the testing track, he said.

After his successful implementation of the tractor cab noise test, during 1970 and 1971, he worked on a method of maintaining a constant fuel temperature in tractors undergoing testing.

"There were different quantities of power at different temperatures," he explained. So he developed a heat controlling device to standardize fuel efficiency and power testing.

"Dr. Splinter said I should have patented it because everyone else is developing one now," he said.

One of Mumgaard's most recent accomplishments has been to develop a test for the three-point hydraulic hitch. Most tractors use some form of hydraulic lift to raise planters and other implements out of the ground when turning.

CONCERNING THE hitch, Carlyle said, "We've developed a way of using the tractor as is, testing it as it is. Nobody's been able to put together a good meaningful test before."

Previously, the hydraulic lift was tested while the tractor was tied or bolted down, Carlyle said, giving an unrealistic measure of its performance.

Carlyle said it was both Mumgaard's "sound inductive reasoning" and his easy-going manner that fellow workers respected most.

"He gave everybody credit for what they did," Carlyle said. "He was just there and he knew the answers. He'll be missed."

Youths place in horse show

Two Dixon County 4-H members took championships in competition at the District 3 4-H Horse Show held at West Point on Thursday, June 24. Cheryl Woodford of Ponca won the girls age 14 and over pole bending, and Brad Lund of Wakefield won the boys age 12-13 pole bending. Both received the top purple in their division and were awarded trophies for their performance.

Cheryl and Brad are now eligible for the Nebraska State 4-H Horse Show. Cheryl also competed in the Western pleasure, Western horsemanship and barrel racing events. She is a member of the Country Style 4-H Club and is the daughter of Francis Woodford of Ponca. Brad also competed in the Western pleasure, Western horsemanship and reining events. He is a member of the Country Style 4-H Club and is the son of Ray Lund of Wakefield.

Other Dixon County participants in the district horse show were Kiela Lund of Wakefield in Western pleasure, Western horsemanship, pole bending and barrel racing; Mabelle Pettit of Allen in Western pleasure, Western horsemanship and pole bending; Mitch Pettit of Allen in Western pleasure and Western horsemanship.

There were more than 400 entries in the contest, according to extension agent Stan Starling. Official judge for the show was Gary Harvey, head of the Agriculture Department at Fort Scott (Kansas) Community College. Harvey's judging teams have won the Cow Palace show twice and the Houston Fat Stock Show.

PRUNE BEDDING PLANTS

Pinch back or prune bedding plants such as petunias, snapdragons, zinnias, and marigolds when you plant them.

What's the reason? Often such plants are grown in a confined space at the nursery. They may be "leggy" and have a bloom or two. Pinching back will cause branching from the base. If you don't pinch back blooms, you may enjoy a few early flowers. However, as a result of seed set, the plant produces few if any additional flowers.

With petunias over three inches tall, pinch off all buds. Pinch back snapdragons one inch to cause branching. House plants such as coleus may be lanky from low light intensity. Prune them severely, down to three or four inches before planting outdoors.

PRUNING EVERGREENS

If you prune evergreen trees or shrubs, do it with a purpose in mind. Pruning of evergreen plants should be done only for the following reasons:

- to provide a fuller branching habit.
- to reshape the plant.
- to replace a lost leader or upright tree.
- to maintain the dwarf habit of plants such as Mugho pine.
- to restrict the size of spreading evergreens.
- to rejuvenate neglected shrubs.
- to repair damage.

Proper selection of evergreen plants should prevent the necessity of pruning to restrict growth. Determine the upper limit of size that a plant should occupy to fit available space. Then select varieties that will not over grow the boundaries.

When pruning any evergreen, never cut behind the area of the branch bearing the foliage. The bare wood produces few or no buds and pruning too far back on these branches will damage the appearance of the plant beyond repair.

Pruning of pines should be restricted to the current year's growth and should only be done from mid-June to mid-July. This allows new buds to set and will insure the plant's retaining its fullness.

Spruces, firs, cedars, and junipers should be pruned during the growing season but the time frame is not as critical as with pine. Again remember to keep pruning restricted to that part of the branch bearing foliage.

Lamb carcasses evaluated

The Wayne County Fairgrounds will again be the site of the third annual Northeast Nebraska Sheep Producers Association lamb carcass contest. Live lambs will be judged on the hoof Sunday, July 11 at 2 p.m.

Lambs should be in place by 1:45 p.m. for weighing and ear tagging. This contest is open to all sheep producers, entry fees are $4 per head for members and $6 per head for non-members. A lamb lunch will be available at the conclusion of the contest for a $2 donation.

After being evaluated, the lambs from these carcasses may either be taken home by the owners or offered for sale to any interested party for the live market price and cost of processing.

Outside storage popular for liquid manure

Outside storage structures are becoming more popular for storing liquid manure from dairy animals.

The less expensive type is an earthen basin which usually is sized to hold a one-year storage of manure, milking center effluent and other runoff for a moderate investment. One alternative is an above ground commercial storage tank, but these are expensive enough that they usually are sized to hold only four to six months of manure and milking center effluent.

The acceptability of the less expensive earthen basin depends on soil and ground-water conditions. Contact your county SCS office for help in evaluating site suitability, construction, and bottom sealing. High water tables, creviced rock formations, porous subsoil, and other soil problems may make the earthen basin impractical.

Commercial tanks are not affected by soil and water conditions in the same way because of their construction, which includes concrete slabs, reinforced concrete, glass-fused-to-steel, or spiral wound coated steel.

Sizing the storage facility is accomplished by figuring manure production of about one gallon dairy per hundredweight of dairy animal. A 1400-pound animal produces about 14 gallons of solids and liquids daily, whereas a 500-pound animal produces about five gallons. To the actual manure production figures, one should add about 3.75 gallons per day per cow for milksolids and milking parlor effluent. It is usually necessary to run milksolids and parlor wash-down water into the storage to keep the solid content of the slurry under 10 or 12 percent to allow efficient agitation and pumping.

Bushels and bushels

THE HEAVY SPRING rains did help some farmers in the area. These oats were planted the first day of April by W.C. Petersen of Wayne and he's expecting a harvest of 85 to 100 bushels per acre. If the weather cooperates, Petersen plans to cut the oats the last part of July.

Dairy shows planned

Some 600 Nebraska 4-H and FFA members are expected to compete in the 1982 Nebraska District Dairy Shows to be held at nine locations in Nebraska and two in Iowa, according to University of Nebraska Extension Dairymen Phil Cole.

A show for Cedar, Dakota, Dixon, Thurston and Wayne counties is planned Aug. 3 at the Great Plains Lumber Yard in Laurel.

"Entries for both individuals and herds should be made on official district dairy show forms and be sent to your extension agent or vocational agriculture teacher who will forward them to the local county office at least three days prior to the show," he said.

Exhibitors can exhibit at only one of the 11 shows and must have an official health certificate indicating that the animal tested negative to TB test administered within 60 days of the show, and negative to a brucellosis test administered within 60 days of the show or have an animal under 20 months of age that is officially calfhood vaccinated. Cole said.

"Four-H exhibitors receiving purple and blue ribbons will be eligible to exhibit at the Ak-Sar-Ben Dairy Show on Sept. 25," he said.

In addition to the show, each county is invited to nominate one candidate for queen per show.

Candidates must be 16 years of age or older as of Jan. 1, 1982 and be enrolled in the 4-H dairy projects. During the Ak-Sar-Ben Dairy Show, district queens and their parents will be guests of Ak-Sar-Ben Dairy at the Dairy Queens' Luncheon where one of the queens will be selected as the 1982 Ak-Sar-Ben Dairy Queen and will reign as Queen of the Ak-Sar-Ben Dairy Show that evening.

Show sponsors include the knights of Ak-Sar-Ben, Nebraska Dairymen's Association and Nebraska-Iowa Dairy interests in cooperation with the Nebraska and Iowa Cooperative Extension Services.

bull by randy hascall

Driving through Missouri on vacation this past week made me feel like I had chugged a shot of Sant-Flush. It wasn't the long drive, or what I ate or anything like that. It was the scenery.

Growing up on a farm near David City, made me fond of country living but not so fond of sunflowers, root worms, cockleburrs, grasshoppers and, most of all, musk thistles.

After spending years chopping, cutting, spraying and salting thistles, it wasn't too pleasant to see the darned weeds growing all along the interstate highway.

Don't get me wrong, I think Missouri is a beautiful state. But, those worthless thistles leave a rotten feeling in my gut. Miles and miles of thistles just aren't the kind of thing I like to see.

Thistles are a lot like glisters. They're pretty but dangerous. The glistering of the shiny, purple blossoms in the sun is deceiving. Each head contains hundreds of seeds and in the fall the wind carries the seeds for miles.

Now, I admit I'm a little abnormal. Few people dislike thistles with a passion as I do. But I have good reason.

Thistles always seemed to grow in the worst places. Patches could usually be found in the draws at the bottom of hillsides where there was little wind. Temperatures usually seemed to range from 95 to 105 degrees on thistle chopping days.

My dad and brother and I usually worked together to combat the weeds with corn knives and hoes, cutting them off at ground level. The trick to killing the roots was to sprinkle salt on the remaining root stem. We often headed out to our pasture at sunrise and returned home around noon with blistered fingers.

It always seemed like we would cut and cut and still we would discover more thistles. Then, in one or two weeks, other thistles would be found or some of the chopped thistles would return from the dead.

Thistles were the worst on the northernmost edge of pasture on our property. The hilly terrain there looked like something out of a Tarzan movie. Chopping thistles is one thing but controlling the weeds in a jungle is another. The trees, briars and weeds were thick enough to make walking difficult.

One year, we spent a couple of days destroying every thistle we saw in the draw. Chopping down that last thistle was as satisfying as finding the prize in a box of Crackerjacks.

Meanwhile our neighbor to the north combatted his thistles with aerial spray. I went back out to check the area a couple of weeks later and found very few thistles growing on our property. However, across the fence were five or six acres of solid musk thistles.

The weeds were as thick as syrup on a pancake. The bright purple heads topped green frames which ranged from four feet tall to about eight feet. The once-stunned thistles showed signs of the spray in browned leaves and stems but had recovered and were quite healthy.

Now, everytime I see a musk thistle I have the urge to jump out of my car and chop it down. It's an urge I may never outgrow.

Farmers shouldn't cuss around their dairy cows according to a United Press International story. A folklore expert says that excessive cussing by Soviet farmhands is one reason why that nation's dairy production has been declining for the past three years.

The newspaper Rural Life printed a long appeal for more polite speech. The appeal was written by a junior scientific worker with a Russian Scientific Methodology Center. "Cows that are cursed at give less milk," the worker said.

NU agricultural engineer sows, reaps soybeans electronically

By Dan Hinmsworth University of Nebraska
George Meyer planted and harvested 100 crops of soybeans this January.

No, he hasn't developed the super hybrid that matures in one month under arctic conditions. He simply sowed and reaped his soybeans in a computer.

The University of Nebraska agricultural engineer began farming soybeans electronically 11 years ago at Ohio State University. Meyer is continuing this research at NU with support from the Water Resources Center, a unit of the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

"Basically, what I do is include all pertinent factors—climatic, soil and plant—that affect soybean yields in a computer program, or model," he said.

The model is so advanced that it prints pictures of plants, detailing changes in them during a simulated growing season.

Some people find it difficult to draw a connection between real farming and Meyer's computer model.

With accurate models like Meyer's, researchers may use computers to duplicate a plan's annual life cycle in seconds. Time-consuming field trials may not be required. A computer and a well-designed model also can help farmers eliminate much of the guesswork associated with growing crops—a factor Meyer believes will soon make computers a standard tool of agricultural production.

Farm crops are influenced by numerous natural and human factors, he said. Pest and weed populations, soil fertility, rainfall and other whims of nature change simultaneously, making it almost impossible for the human mind to estimate precisely how much fertilizer, water or herbicide should be applied to attain specified yield goals. A computer model can make these calculations, and in microseconds—as long as it is properly programmed, Meyer said.

Mathematical Equations
Programming, or modeling, is Meyer's specialty. His soybean model is actually a series of mathematical equations. If plain, courteous English before proceeding with its complex calculations.

The microcomputer user reads the model's questions on a video monitor (a modified TV screen), and then answers by typing on a keyboard that is similar to a standard typewriter. The hunt-and-peck typist will have no problems running a micro, Meyer assured.

The unique aspect of Meyer's model is not that it communicates amicably, but that it thinks like a plant.

The number and size of soybeans in each pod can be estimated by the model through focusing on the plant's carbohydrate, protein and nutrient levels in a specific growth stage. Previously developed crop models centered on climatic and soil conditions when determining soybean yields.

On AGNET

When the model is completed, Meyer will give it to the Agricultural Information Network (AGNET), a multi-state, public computing system that NU coordinates. With a special device, a home microcomputer can communicate by telephone with AGNET and "plug into" Meyer's soybean program.

He hopes the model also will be available on floppy discs, which resemble 45 rpm records. The disc, when inserted into a microcomputer, tells the computer how to run the model.

The agricultural engineer readily conceded that his venture into computer farming has produced only a few hundred bushels of real soybeans, despite innumerable electronic harvests that could warrant a world record in the Guinness Book.

Meyer anticipates, however, that after a few more years of research, and enough time passes for farmers to become comfortable with microcomputers, his soybean model will help growers plant, fertilize, irrigate, cultivate and harvest millions of bushels.

By then, he hopes to have developed a model for corn, as well.

predicts how an amount of change in any factor combines with other elements to increase or decrease soybean yields. Meyer relied on years of research by agronomists throughout the world to write the equations. He, too, depends on those time-consuming field trials to test the model's predictions with actual soybean yields.

The mathematics of computer farming are too complex for pencil and paper arithmetic. Meyer said that it's the model's answer, and not how it works, that will help farmers determine more precisely when, and how much, fertilizer, water and herbicides they need to apply to attain their yields goals.

And the electronic farmer won't need an extra barn to house the type of computer Meyer uses. It is a small, portable desktop microcomputer with many of the features of large computers.

Friendly Computer

Meyer agreed that all computers have a somewhat negative image in our society. The wrath against creditors whose computers make billing errors and the fear that computers will replace persons in much needed jobs undoubtedly contributed to this conception.

But the engineer's soybean model and the microcomputer are far from hostile. In fact, they are "friendly"—computer jargon for a program that asks users for information in

May rainfall was 117 percent of normal mark

Despite recent rains, farmers may need to plan for irrigation—perhaps sooner than they think.

Above normal May rainfall in Nebraska has filled soil profiles with moisture, but only for a short time, according to Dean Eisenhauer, University of Nebraska extension irrigation specialist at the South Central Station, Clay Center.

"If it stops raining now, the soil profile will go back to something more typical of Nebraska in three weeks, maybe even two weeks in some parts of the state," he said.

MAY RAINFALL TOTALS were above normal for all eight climatic divisions of the state, according to preliminary figures by the NU Conservation and Survey Division.

East central Nebraska ranked highest in rainfall, at 129 percent of normal. Other areas of the state ranked as follows: north, east—117 percent of normal; southeast—101 percent; north central—95 percent; south central—82 percent; southwest—81 percent; central—76 percent; Panhandle—23 percent.

Compared to normal, the soil profile is relatively full of moisture—especially if the soil was irrigated last year, Eisenhauer said.

"But it won't be a big savings of water once the weather turns around. If it quits raining now and temperatures rise, we will have to start thinking about irrigating."

Some areas of the state will dry out sooner than others, depending on the weather and the amount of moisture already present in the soil, he said. Since irrigation can be expensive, it is important to determine when and how much to irrigate—a method known as irrigation scheduling.

SOIL PROBES are an easy, inexpensive way to determine when soil is dry enough to require irrigation. Eisenhauer will demonstrate how to use a soil probe on Farm and Ranch Report, to be aired on the Nebraska ETV Network July 1 at 12:30 and 9:30 p.m.

Moisture block systems are another method that will be demonstrated on the program. The blocks, small gypsum cubes, are buried in the field among rows of corn. A hand held electronic meter will measure the amount of moisture detected by the blocks in the soil.

Wildfires are another problem that comes with dry weather. In 1981, wildfires caused more than $1.85 million in damages and expenses in Nebraska. The three major causes of fires are debris burning, railroads and equipment use—especially during harvest time.

Fire reports from the past five years indicate that fires caused by harvesting equipment are two to five times more frequent than the state average in these counties: Antelope, Brown, Buffalo, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clay, Douglas, Franklin, Hall, Hamilton, Howard, Jefferson, Lancaster, Madison, Nuckolls, Otoe, Phelps, Pierce, Richardson, Rock, Saline, Saunders, Seward, Webster and York.

Don Westover, fire program coordinator for the NU Department of Forestry, Fisheries and Wildlife, will talk on "Farm and Ranch Report about the causes of wildfires and how to operate equipment to reduce the risk of starting a fire.

Ag Department plans conservation projects

The U.S. Department of Agriculture will provide over $6 million for special agricultural conservation program projects during fiscal 1982 to help meet soil and water conservation needs and improve the quality of U.S. waters, according to Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block.

The agricultural conservation program is administered for farmers and ranchers by USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service and by farmer-elected county committees in nearly every county nationwide. Block said this concept continues to allow county committees to attach the most critical conservation problems, while demonstrating to producers the use of cost-effective practices in their areas.

Two other USDA agencies, the Soil Conservation Service and Extension Service, will provide additional technical assistance for these projects.

Block said allocations for special projects will be increased in 1981 counties in 44 states. These funds are a part of the $190 million appropriated by Congress for the program in fiscal 1982.

He said he believes federal cost-sharing through designated agricultural conservation program special project areas will demonstrate to farmers how to attach their most critical conservation problems in a cost-effective manner, while maintaining the good conservation efforts already practiced on their lands.

Following is a list of states where approval has been given for special projects, with the dollar amount for each state: Nebraska—$119,000; South Dakota—$87,300; Iowa—$42,000.

Seven area farmers receive dairy awards

Each year, the Nebraska Department of Agriculture, in conjunction with June Dairy Month, recognizes all outstanding dairymen in the State of Nebraska. To receive this award, the dairymen must meet the following criteria:

- Grade "A"—1. Sanitation average 94 per cent or higher, 2. Added water—none detected, 3. Pesticides—none detected, 4. Antibiotics—none detected, 5. Bacteria average 20,000 per milliliter or less, 6. Somatic cells—average 15 millimeters or less, at direct microscopic counts with equal 22 millimeters, 7. Time frame—January 1 through December 31. 8. Special criteria: a. Any producer suspended for any reason would become ineligible, b. Must have been a Grade "A" producer for at least six months to be eligible.

The following area farmers received the award: Keith Bartling of Laurel, Wayne Lund of Laurel, LeRoy Lunz of Wakefield, John Anderson of Wayne, Vernon Bauermeister of Wayne, Ward Gilliland of Wayne, and Lawrence Sorouts of Wayne.

More Valley Corner Systems every year, because it's the least costly investment per acre.

It's going to be harder to make farming pay off in the years to come. Harder for many reasons. So if anything makes sense, it's to maximize the potential of the land you now farm. Irrigating with a center pivot is one way. Irrigating with a Corner System is even better.

A Corner System can irrigate 19 to 45 more acres than a regular pivot, producing extra income on acres already being farmed. That's why nearly one out of every six pivots sold today is a Corner System.

And when it comes to Corner Systems, nobody knows more than Valmont. They're proven reliable with nearly 3,000 systems in operation. That's at least 20 times more than any other brand.

Bucking for vote or relaying concerns?

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association

It sounds like President Reagan got an earful of farm talk during Gov. Charles Thone's recent visit to the nation's capital.

The Republican governor, who is seeking re-election and wants Reagan or Vice President George Bush to campaign for him in Nebraska, talked to the president about farm storage loan money, exports and price-support programs.

There was some talk about Nebraska about whether Thone was bucking for the farm vote, or whether he was simply relaying concerns of his constituency. Chances are, Thone had a little of both in mind.

As a chief agricultural spokesman among

U.S. governors, Thone was doing something he's done officially many times before — speaking for the farm sector.

And as a candidate who lost a good chunk of the Republican vote to an American Agriculture founder during the Nebraska primary, Thone made what would seem to be a wise move politically.

DURING HIS VISIT to Washington, Thone said he impressed upon the president his belief that an aggressive export policy is needed for agricultural commodities. That's a theme Thone has also expressed a number of times during his first four-year term in Nebraska.

Thone said he was asked to draft some proposals concerning a national farm export policy, which interested Reagan. The president also said his administration would look into other agricultural concerns.

For example, Thone said, Reagan aides will review the farm storage loan program, which is short of money. Nebraska's congressional delegation also has harped on the farm storage facility loan program. Issue, saying more money is needed, and soon.

Whether Thone's visit with Reagan, which lasted less than half an hour, nets any results remains to be seen. But at least Reagan took the time to listen to Thone.

State Tax Commissioner Don Leuenberger has some good news for money-conscious Nebraskans.

Most state income tax refund checks have been processed, which means if you had money coming this year, it's probably in your hands already.

Leuenberger said only 1.7 percent of the 586,000 Nebraska refund checks still needed to be mailed as of the first day of summer. And the remaining checks were about to go out.

That's good news, especially in light of the fact that refund checks were delayed earlier this year because of money problems. The state had severe cash-flow problems this spring, which resulted in delays of about 10 days for the refunds that everyone anxiously awaited.

State officials said efforts were made to get most checks mailed within six to eight weeks. And despite the earlier cash-flow problems, the 1982 refund statistics for mid-

June were comparable to the 1981 figures.

Several times this year, the state has had to dip into various funds to keep its main budget—the general fund—in the black.

The state initially borrowed some $23 million, then paid it back as quickly as possible. Another $30-plus million had to be borrowed in late June. The borrowing is needed to make sure the state can meet its obligations; without it, some bills simply couldn't be paid on time.

Don Stenberg, Department of Administrative Services director, said not all of the money will be paid back by the time the state's fiscal year ends on June 30. He estimated some $20 million still will be owed at the start of the new fiscal year.

The Legislature earlier this year gave the green light for the Interfund transfers because of dismal revenue projections. Tax rate increases were approved to bring in more money, but it takes time for the extra revenue to show up.

In the meantime, the state revenue of funds will be keeping a close eye on tax receipts and possibly adjusting tax projections to reflect actual income. Unless something drastic occurs, it's unlikely the state's fiscal picture will cloud further.

When the state Board of Equalization meets in November to take another look at tax rates, Nebraskans should get a pretty good idea of whether the state is inching out of its recession and getting back on a black economic track.

Battle for freedom

Four score and seven years ago, our forefathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty.

The words of President Lincoln echo down the corridors of time, into history books to be memorized by youngsters in classrooms; his actions during America's Civil War are remembered as a battle of compromise, a battle for continued freedom.

Today the battle for freedom still rages. Globally there are countless skirmishes, several out-and-out wars, occupation forces and daily covert actions, supposedly aimed at freeing people from dictators and autocratic rule.

In our own nation, people still battle for the rights under the constitution, battle for fair wages, safe living conditions and common decency and respect for their life.

The battle for freedom goes on, it was not finished in the 18th century with our split from England; it was not finished in the 19th century with our civil war and it has not been spread far enough nor guaranteed in the 20th century.

Politically, the right and the left factions both say they are pushing for guaranteed rights and freedom through the legal and constitutional bureaucratic systems of our government. Yet today, across America people are not safe.

Here in Wayne there is not much worry at night, but in thousands of cities across America war and hunger rage. People are afraid; that will not go away, cannot be legislated out of their hearts and minds.

Freedom is not the laws and rules enacted by our congress, nor the laws interpreted by our courts. These are only the boundaries, to keep chaos out and within which our society, by common agreement, thrives and grows.

No, this is not freedom for it is an intangible attitude; the light in a person's eyes, the hand out to the poor, the judgment of a copy in the city streets. These are some of the facts of freedom, facets that must be continually maintained and guarded against erosion on an individual basis. That's what freedom is: individuals, freely expressing themselves, their concerns and banding together to protect these notions and aid the underdog.

...of the people, by the people and for the people, shall not perish from the face of the earth.

What to do?

Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation
By M.M. Van Kirk,
Director of Information

With another record winter wheat crop in prospect for this year coming on top of the 1981 record crop, government agricultural administrators, farm state members of Congress and most of all, the nation's wheat producers, have to be asking seriously, "What are we ever going to do with all this wheat?"

It isn't just the record harvests of the past two years that are causing the problem. In early June, the USDA reported that there were 563 million bushels of wheat in the farmer held reserve, some of it dating back to the 1976 crop. A knowledgeable Nebraska producer recently observed that despite conscientious attention, there will be more and more of the old-crop grain that will be deteriorating and going out of condition.

Water dispute reviewed

Water is the lifeblood of the farm economy and the future control of this valuable resource by states may be in danger if legislation being reviewed by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee is approved.

Recently, this Senate Committee held hearings on legislation which would give coal slurry pipeline projects the federal power of eminent domain (the right to condemn water resources or land to obtain a right of way). As the former governor of Nebraska for eight years, who knows the needs for water in our state and the resources to meet those needs, I oppose this legislation because of the potential adverse impact it may have on the state's water resources and the state's right to control water. In that context, this is a state's rights issue and we Nebraskans have a legitimate concern about federal control.

Coal slurry pipelines transport crushed coal across the country in a 50/50 mixture with water to shipping ports. These pipelines will require hundreds of tons of water to carry the coal, increasing the demand for our precious water and competing with the needs of agriculture.

FURTHERMORE, the water used in a coal slurry is not returned to its point of origin. In essence, this concept creates a siphon to suck water from one place to another. One such pipeline is proposed to run from Gillette, Wyo. to Arkansas.

Supporters of the bill argue that water will be allocated according to the state law where the pipeline or water originates. This, they say, will protect the state's rights. I believe, however, theirs will only raise more questions, confusion and uncertainties about the states' rights.

First, does this mean that once water is allocated to a coal slurry pipeline a state cannot restrict the water supply; at a future date, in favor of higher priority uses such as agriculture? Secondly, what voice do states have, which share water resources (groundwater or rivers, in objecting to the sale and diversion of water to a coal slurry project)?

The allocation of water for these pipelines would have to be made in accord with state law. However, once the water is used in a pipeline, it is controlled by the laws of interstate commerce and not state laws. In addition, the proposed legislation would allow the Secretary of Energy to designate the pipeline as a "national interest" project which would allow the federal government to supersede state laws.

U.S. SUPREME Court cases indicate the combination of the "national interest" designation and the power of interstate commerce laws would make it virtually certain that state laws would be overridden by the federal government if a conflict should arise. States would lose control of vital water supplies important to agriculture.

A second concern regards states which share groundwater aquifers or rivers that are used as a water supply for coal slurry pipelines. These states would have no voice in the sale of water by a neighboring state under the proposed legislation.

For example, South Dakota's recent decision to sell Missouri River water to a coal slurry pipeline company has justifiably raised the concerned eyebrows of Nebraskans and others in downstream states. Coupled with depleting groundwater, surface water diversions, like the South Dakota action, could place future water supplies for agricultural uses in jeopardy.

SINCE THE proposed legislation only requires that the law of the state issuing the water permit be followed, I fear that neighboring states will not have any voice in a matter which may affect their water resources. It also puts a state settling water in the position of forming, or at least influencing, the use and policy of water in its neighboring states.

Seemingly no language in this complicated area can be drafted in this legislation which will adequately protect each state's water rights. This legislation would set a questionable, and possibly devastating precedent which puts water, a natural resource, up for sale to the highest bidder regardless of priority or public policy. I believe we need to take a careful look at how the states themselves plan to deal with this important problem before the federal government attempts to take over.

Unfortunately, we Nebraskans are aligned opposite our neighbors. Wyoming wants a new method to transport their coal and South Dakota wants to profit from the sale of Missouri River water. The states should continue efforts to resolve the disputes between themselves. The legislation before the Congress in an attempt to "short circuit" that process. As has been proven on numerous occasions in the past, "Big Brother" in Washington does few things better than "Little Brother" at home.

ABOUT TWO-THIRDS of the wheat in the farmer held reserve has a release price of $4.97 and one-third a release price of $5.33. These release levels are 140 percent and 150 percent of the loan. When the loan goes up the release price goes up and as economists point out, this "lock step" relationship virtually assures that these stocks will continue to restrict any market price opportunity. Even at current release levels, this wheat, most admit, is priced out of the market and may be forfeited to the Commodity Credit Corp. when the contracts expire, unless the USDA changes the rules to move the grain into market channels.

The corn supply and storage situation is almost as discouraging as the prospect for wheat. Latest report was that there were about 1.2 billion bushels of corn in the farmer held reserve and the total of both wheat and feed grains in the reserve is more than 2 billion bushels.

The reserve program was sold and promoted for many years before it was finally enacted. The argument by its supporters was that it would effectively lock up a reserve isolated from the market and would be used to "stabilize" prices both domestic and international. Opponents then argued that there was no way that a reserve could be so "isolated" that it would not overhang the operation of the cash grain and export markets. One can't kid producers and export buyers into thinking that 2 billion bushels of stored wheat and feed grains aren't really out there and won't have to come back into the market place some day and somehow.

THE SITUATION has evolved into a system of locking more and more grain away from the market into the reserve at even higher prices as if there would never be a day of reckoning. For several years the reserve had seemed to work as a marketing tool the way it was intended. Then in January 1980 with the grain export and domestic market prospects looking fairly bright, the Carter Administration imposed the grain embargo against the Soviet Union because of the Afghanistan situation. The farmer-held reserve program was expanded to soak up the surplus resulting from the embargo, and then it was used again to cope with the record harvest of 1981. For more than a year, cynics have been warning that present policy is an attempt to "store our way to prosperity." Those who are promoting a rewrite of the 1981 farm law in the form of a "Farm Crisis Act of 1982" basically seek to raise the support prices which will predictably add to the storage problems and the complications of ever getting rid of the excess.

It might be cheaper for the taxpayers and more helpful to producers, if Congress would change the laws and permit the USDA to conduct a giant worldwide clearance sale of all of our surplus farm commodities on the basis of "Cash and carry, arrange for your own shipping, we'll make you some deals you can't pass up." Many more of the world's hungry would be fed and there might be a quick answer to the nagging question: "What will we ever do with all of this stuff?"

Changing habits

Alcohol-related traffic accidents are one of the major health problems facing the state and the nation, according to Marvin Broman, General Manager, Safety Council of Nebraska, an affiliate of the National Safety Council. Of the 378 traffic fatalities in Nebraska during 1981, 189 — exactly 50% — were alcohol related. Nationwide studies also support the conclusion that drinking is a factor in half or all fatal car crashes.

Broman says that in the last decade alone, more than 250,000 families have lost loved ones and some 6,500,000 families have seen someone seriously injured because a driver had been drinking.

Because of the widespread alcohol abuse and the fact that drunk driving kills and maims people one or a few at a time in contrast to dramatic plane crashes which can kill hundreds, it has been difficult to successfully treat the symptom, Broman says.

However, there are two important steps, Broman says that every American motorist can take to help remedy this serious situation:

1. Follow the example set in Sweden where people who choose to drink in a social setting have a "designated driver" who accompanies them, does not drink and makes certain they get home safely.
2. Make certain that everyone in a motor-vehicle buckles on safety belts and protects small children by strapping them into child safety seats.

Allen cemetery paved

MEMBERS OF THE ALLEN Eastview Cemetary Association recently completed one-half of a paving project in the cemetery, located east of Allen. Keith Hill, a member of the association, said the pavement, which now runs from the west gateway to the middle of the cemetery, was received from increased revenue by reinvesting perpetual care monies at better interest rates. Hill stressed that the cemetery does not benefit from any taxing body and that the pavement work was done without a tax levy. The association hopes to complete the paving project to the east gateway with private donations.

Fun in Kansas City

School reporters surf, ride, slide on weekend trip

By Randy Hascall
Eight students from Laurel Concord High School and their sponsors combined the chills and thrills of Worlds of Fun with the waves and raves of Oceans of Fun the weekend of June 19 and 20.

The trip to Kansas City was the result of competition initiated last fall by The Wayne Herald. The Herald offered an expense paid trip to the high school staff which did the best job of producing school news for The Wayne Herald's school pages.

Laurel Concord High School was the recipient of the award based on judgment of The Wayne Herald staff. Reward was an expense paid trip to Kansas City. Students on the school staff were Mike Dietrich, Debbie Gathie, Alice George, Jill Hanson, Tim Lineberry, Kathy Neuhaffen, Marcine Rath and Renee Vanderheiden. Sponsor of the group was Sharon Van Cleave. Her husband Lyle and their sons Ryan and Chad also went on the trip along with Wayne Herald sponsors.

Transportation, motel rooms, tickets to Worlds of Fun and Oceans of Fun and some meals were paid for by The Wayne Herald. The group attended Worlds of Fun on Saturday, stayed at the Holiday Inn that night and attended Oceans of Fun Sunday.

At Worlds of Fun, members of the group enjoyed the curves and drops of such roller coasters as the Orient Express and Zambezi Zinger. Highlights of the new Oceans of Fun included body surfing at Surf City and sliding down Diamond Head.

Six 75 horsepower blowers generate four foot high waves in the million gallon pool called Surf City. Diamond Head is composed of three fiberglass water slides which twist and turn for more than 1,200 feet.

The Wayne Herald was proud and honored to sponsor the Laurel Concord group. Students were well behaved, friendly and seemed to have "worlds-oceans" of fun.

Which lucky school will win next year's school page contest?
