DAMAGE RANGING FROM AS LITTLE as five percent to 100 percent was reported by local and federal officials as the result of the hail and wind storm which came through the area Monday morning. A corn field, above, was one of over 100,000 acres in Wayne County which was devastated by the hail. At left, barely recognizable, is a soybean field West of Hoskins. Reports of heavy damage continued to flood insurance and government offices on Tuesday. Local insurance agents report adjusters will begin their job sometime next week. Most of the damage reported is the result of golfball size hail that hit a 22 miles long strip in Wayne County. Damage has been estimated at $10 million in market costs for the crops alone. Several other counties in the area also report heavy damage to crops and property.

County wide crop damage is estimated at $10 million

It started between 2:30 a.m. and 3 a.m. on Monday, people in the rural areas and towns of much of Wayne County were roused out of bed to the sound of rain — hard rain followed with high winds and hail reportedly up to egg and golfball size. The aftermath of the storm left many shaking their heads, wondering how they came out so lucky, others were wondering what they would do with acres of corn, soy beans and wheat pounded into the earth. County agent Don Spitzke said Monday afternoon his phone had been ringing off the cradle. By Tuesday afternoon following an inspection by the area's emergency board, local state and federal officials had some idea of the extent of the damage.

The board, composed of Spitzke and representatives from Farmers Home Administration, the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service and the Soil Conservation Service, turned in their estimate — at market value the crop loss due to the hail storm in Wayne County has been set at $10 million.

"That doesn't include the property damage or anything else," Spitzke said, "only the crop damage."

Reports from the area confirm that the storm traveled from the Northwest to the Southeast across Wayne county. Other counties affected include parts of Stanton, Cumming and Dodge.

An insurance agent in town who is in touch with area adjusters said they believe the storm may have left a path as long as 100 miles and as wide as 20 miles.

Spitzke estimated about 100,000 acres in Wayne were affected with damages of 5 percent to 100 percent observed. The storm in the county, he said, was about 22 miles long and 8 miles wide with the major damage occurring in a five mile stretch down the middle of the path.

"We saw corn that was just a three or four inch stalk — beans that had their leaves torn off with very little remaining," Spitzke said.

Reports from the Winside area told of wheat that was waist high on Sunday reduced to ankle high by Monday's dawn; fields of corn and soy beans pounded so hard you couldn't tell what crop had been growing in them, of homes with the windows broken out because of the large hail and trees stripped bare of their leaves and bark. Although most communities in the Western part of the county suffered wind damage, Winside drew the brunt of the wind storm in the county.

Bob Wacker of Winside said it sounded just like a tornado coming through. "It was raining but calm then just out of nowhere the wind came up and blew hard for about five to seven minutes then it was over," he said.

According to crop insurance agents adjusters will be in the area next week surveying the damage. An adjuster with 40 years in the business said that although he's seen damage this bad before, never has he seen it to this extent, covering so large of an area.

The agents said in most cases, those with hail insurance do not insure for the market value of the crops. The money they receive for the damage to their crops may only cover their time, seed and fertilizers or less than half of what the market price would have been.

Spitzke said after making some inquiries he believed only 20 percent to 25 percent of the farmers affected had hail insurance.

In addition to the hail there was heavy rain Monday morning, again washing out crops and over roads, ponding in low areas and adding insult to injury with the hail.

The hail stones have been reported ranging from smooth marble size up to jagged golfball size. Areas where crops were not pounded into the ground or totally stripped, appeared to be chewed up badly from the hail.

Some farmers are already talking of replanting, even this late in the season, for silage, however it appears most will end up losing this year's crops in the affected areas and hoping for a better season next year.

The worst damage reported has been West and South of Winside. Varying degrees of damage were reported from moderate damage to corn and beans to fields left completely bare from the force of the storm.

Estimates have yet to be given for damage to property but there have been numerous reports of damage to cars and machinery. In several cases, there were reports of windows in homes being broken on the side of the homes facing the storm.

Area officials and agents will begin sorting through the claims next week however it is expected to be quite awhile before the complete financial cost of Monday morning's storm is tallied.

Subdivision review approved

With six commission members present, preliminary approval was given to Jim Coan for a subdivision plat he presented to the planning commission of Wayne Monday night.

The plat is actually a continuation of a project started several years ago on the Western edge of the city. The new subdivision has been called Western Heights Subdivision second addition and will include 12 lots around a cut-de-sac.

The subdivision will be bordered by West 3rd avenue on the North and the fairgrounds property on the West.

The entire Western Heights subdivision was originally presented to the city in December of 1978.

According to city records and officials, at that time a person owned a small house on the property and had an option on the land. Preliminary approval was given to the plat in March of 1979 and final approval was given in June of 1979 for the four lots along Oak Drive. Now Coan is attempting to bring the rest of the subdivision into the city. Questions arose from commissioners and Coan alike during the meeting, concerning the paving requirements specified in the city's subdivision regulations.

Coan indicated to the commissioners he planned on having the city set up a paving district for the entire area — West 3rd avenue and the two streets in the subdivision, Emerald drive and Pine street.

City planner and building inspector Marcia Pankaskie said she had understood the paving district would only be for 3rd avenue since it is the only street which borders on other property.

Commission chairman Glen Ellingson said if the streets do not border on the property, that paving is the responsibility of the subdeveloper.

A paving district, if approved for the complete area, would mean the city would be responsible for the paving and new homeowners would be assessed for the paving on their taxes.

If approval is not received for the paving district, Coan would have to pave the area and, presumably, the cost of the lots would rise to reflect the additional cost associated with the paving. Coan pointed out to the commissioners that the Terra Ridge area (the Providence Medical Center area) received permission to set up a paving district when it went in several years ago.

Several commissioners said they remembered but were unsure as to whether city ordinances had changed since the time of that development.

Following the meeting, Pankaskie said city regulations would allow a paving district to be set up for the entire area but it would be up to the council for the approval.

City manager Philip Kloster said during the meeting that a paving district assessment is "mainly a vehicle for lowering the financial rate of the project. Minimum standards still must be met."

He indicated to Coan and the commissioners the city council would probably be willing to set up a district for 3rd avenue but that the council would look pretty toughly at setting up one for the subdivision.

"Presently, as are most communities in the state, we are looking at setting up paying districts in existing areas and not toward setting them up in new subdivisions," Kloster said.

Coan also wants to stop the paving on 3rd avenue at his subdivision, rather than extending it down past three additional lots.

Commissioners and Kloster indicated something might be worked out to allow the paving to be extended at a later date.

"To end at a subdivision is something new," Kloster said, "but during these economic times we are looking at some new things," Kloster said.

With preliminary approval gained by Coan from the planning commission, the next step is for the preliminary plat to be viewed by the city council. If preliminary approval is gained from the council, any changes recommended by the city must then be made and a final plat presented to the planning commission for their approval. Following their review, council again reviews the final plat.

City officials have indicated Coan wishes to gain quick approval so he can start on the project before winter.

Damage near Hoskins

HIGH WINDS AND LARGE hail caused severe damage in the Hoskins area early Monday morning. Trees and tree limbs were downed and heavily damaged crops to the North and West were seen in the area.

Most Nebraskans live in urban areas

Data from the 1980 Census indicate that 63 percent of Nebraska's 1,698,255 inhabitants resided in urban areas, according to an article published by the University of Nebraska-Lincoln (UNL) Bureau of Business Research.

The article, written by Jerome Deichert, research associate for the Bureau, was in the July issue of "Business in Nebraska." It focused on population changes in Nebraska cities and towns and the possibility of a rural renaissance in Nebraska.

According to Deichert, rural areas — where 37 percent of Nebraskans live — grew at a 1.9 percent rate between 1970 and 1980, but urban areas grew at an 8.2 percent rate.

Deichert noted that even though it appeared rural areas did not fare as well as urban areas, a significant shift emerged during the 1970s.

The urban growth rate was down considerably from previous decades when it went up 19.1 percent during the 1960s and 23.2 percent during the 1950s. On the other hand, the positive rural growth rate of the 1970s followed respective losses of 11.5 and 8.3 percent.

The report pointed out that the growth in the state's rural population primarily occurred in the metropolitan counties of Dakota, Douglas, Sarpy, and Lancaster. Non-metropolitan counties continued to lose rural population during the 1970s.

A different pattern emerged for urban growth, Deichert said. Urban population grew much faster in the state's non-metropolitan counties than in its four metropolitan counties.

The report also reviewed some of the population trends in Nebraska cities and towns by size of town.

Deichert indicated that Nebraska had 536 cities, and towns in 1980 but most of them were very small. Approximately 400 of those towns had fewer than 1,000 inhabitants, and half had fewer than 367 residents.

The report mentioned that a turnaround in population changes of small towns occurred during the 1970s.

According to Deichert, "Between 1950 and 1960 all size classes under 2,000 had more declining than growing towns. From 1960 to 1970, this was true for towns under 500 but between 1970 and 1980 only those classes with fewer than 44 inhabitants had more declining towns."

The largest 1970s growth rate was for towns in the 500-999 population class, the report added.

The report also showed changes in small towns by region during the 1970s. Over all, 60 percent of the towns below 1,000 grew between 1970 and 1980.

The most dramatic small town growth occurred in the South Sioux City area, where all 3 of its small towns grew, in the Lincoln area, where 10 of 11 grew, and in the Kearney area where 8 of 9 grew.

Other clusters of growing small towns were in the Fremont and West Point areas, in the Grand Island, York and Beatrice areas, and in the North Platte and Ogallala areas.

The report concluded by indicating that the evidence from the 1980 census may not indicate a rural renaissance in Nebraska but a turnaround appears to have occurred during the 1970s.

Rural areas and small towns have reversed decades of population losses with either growth or slowdown in the rate of decrease in population.

Fall grain hauling permits will be at issue

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association

Caught between some angry farmers and state statutes, the state Department of Roads apparently has figured a way to legally issue permits for overweight trucks at harvest time.

Roads Director David Coolidge, following a recent meeting with Gov. Charles Thone and Attorney General Paul Douglas, said he'll issue temporary overweight permits which allow farmers to haul crops from the fields to storage or to market.

The matter came to public attention when Sens. John DeCamp, of Neligh and Rex Haberman, of Imperial, brought to Thone's attention a little noticed 1981 law which outlawed the issuance of the overweight permits.

The senators suggested Thone take action to allow the overweight hauls.

Coolidge, in announcing that the permits would be issued despite the 1981 law, said he has authority to allow issuance of the permits when a depressed agricultural situation exists.

Although some state officials say it was illegal, the Roads Department issued permits for overweight loads during the corn and bean harvests during 1981.

The truck weight issue promises to be the subject of further attention in the 1983 Legislature.

Sen. Jerome Warner of Waverly says the Roads Department should follow the law prohibiting the overweight permits.

Warner, Sen. Sam Cullin of Hemingford and other senators may be expected to resist efforts by DeCamp, Haberman and other lawmakers to amend the truck weight law to make the overweight permits clearly legal.

Cullin sponsored the amendment prohibiting the permits during a hectic final day of the 1981 legislative session.

CORPORATE OWNERSHIP

The extent to which agribusiness groups will organize to defeat the proposed constitutional amendment limiting corporate ownership of farms is uncertain.

The Nebraska Farmers Union and other backers of the amendment succeeded in getting more than 50,000 signatures on petitions to place the amendment on the Nov. 2 ballot.

Sen. Loran Schmit of Bellwood, chairman of the Legislature's Agriculture and Environment Committee, says it's tough for a banker, a corporate executive or a politician to actively oppose the amendment.

Although Schmit says the amendment courts "economic disaster," he and other opponents don't relish a public perception that they are enemies of the family farm.

Some major Nebraska political figures are among the petition signers.

They include Gov. Charles Thone; Bob Kerrey, Thone's Democratic opponent; U.S. Sens. J.J. Exon and Edward Zorinsky, and Rep. Douglas Bereuter.

Thone left himself some room for retreating after he signed the petition. If further review of the amendment determines that the amendment is legally defective or economically inadvisable, Thone said, "we'd have to follow an appropriate course."

STATE REVIEW

This is property valuation review time at the Capitol, but this year things are much more quiet than in other recent years.

None of the state's 93 counties have been called to Lincoln to show cause why their property valuations shouldn't be altered by the state Board of Equalization.

The board must certify the abstracts of valuation which have been submitted by the counties by August 15. That allows local governments to set levies sufficient to support their budgets for the coming year.

The main reason that there will be no state mandated adjustments in valuations is that counties are now required to perform reappraisals biennially, and those come in odd-numbered years. Their recently submitted abstracts reflect essentially 1981 values increased by the value of new construction in each county.

The biggest recent state-level adjustment in property values came during the summer of 1979 when the board adjusted the values of almost every county.

viewpoint

Using it wisely

What happened in the West and South and Southwestern part of Wayne County early Monday morning has been called by some people the worst damage they have ever seen.

Farmer's awoke about 3 a.m. on Monday to the sound of hail, battering their homes, their machinery and hammering their crops literally into the ground in somecases.

Some say the storm started a few miles Northwest of the county and continued a course to the Southeast; others say it left a path 100 miles long and 20 miles wide with Wayne one of many counties hit.

Where the storm started and stopped is not the concern of the farmer's that were hit. There concern is what happens now.

When a city is devastated by natural disasters, businesses often receive assistance from the federal and state governments. They are able to rebuild and, for the most-part, pick up their lives where they left off before the disaster.

This next week, crop insurance adjusters from various companies will be in Wayne County and surrounding counties, surveying the damage and writing their claim reports.

We strongly urge the adjusters to be fair in their review of the damage. Farming has always been and will remain, at best, a gamble. There are good years and bad years, but with the current economic situation, Monday morning's storm could prove to be too much to handle for many farmers without good adjustments.

There is no way to replace the lost crops now. The damage has been done. To those without insurance, the nightmare of Monday night could continue. For those with insurance, adjusters hold the key and we urge them to use it wisely.

Next logical step may be balanced budget amendment

Richard L. Leshar
U.S. Chamber of Commerce

As far as statistical benchmarks go, the 26th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence doesn't measure up alongside such spectacular milestones as our recent bicentennial. But in an important respect, our latest celebration was very special because this July marks a historic return to supply-side economics in America.

On July 1, every worker regardless of income found his marginal tax rate cut by 10 percent. Thus, 602 long days after the voters made their demands for significant tax relief perfectly clear, their wishes have been realized. The nation has finally embarked on a reaffirmation of the concept in which it was founded 206 years ago: a tax revolt against an overbearing central bureaucracy in favor of more freedom, incentive, opportunity and prosperity in the private sector.

What about last October's five percent tax cut? That was little more than a teaser, since it was all but consumed by rising Social Security taxes and bracket creep. This July's cut represents the first substantial chunk of tax relief for individuals, although it too could fade into insignificance over the long term if it is not followed on schedule by the next round of tax cuts in July 1983.

I am not suggesting that the single act of slashing tax rates this month will produce instant prosperity. The process of harnessing the growth of government and rebuilding our industrial base will be long and bumpy. Many more battles on the political and policymaking fronts will have to be waged.

One such battle is over a constitutional amendment to require a balanced federal budget. It is not evident that Congress is incapable of controlling the rampant growth of federal spending and borrowing without a constitutional mandate. Part of this failure derives from a simple lack of political courage. But growing budgets and mounting deficits are also a function of profound changes in the political landscape that have taken root over the past several decades, including the creation of active, well organized groups of Americans dependent on federal largesse and determined to see this largesse grow.

Changing the Constitution is serious business. It is customary to the greatness of that document and gravity of amending it that after nearly 200 years of economic, social, scientific and political circumstances

New wheat program may prove inadequate for coming year

The U.S. Department of Agriculture last week announced the details of the 1983 wheat program. The major features of the program are a 20 percent voluntary reduced acreage program and advance deficiency payment of one half the estimated amount payable upon sign-up. Sign-up is to begin on Sept. 7.

Entry into the reduced acreage program will again be a prerequisite for participation in the price support loan, target price, and farmer owned reserve programs. The loan rate for wheat will be set at $3.35 per bushel under the regular loan program, and $4.00 per bushel for wheat placed in the reserve. The target price will be $4.30 per bushel.

The Secretary of Agriculture also announced additional export credit financing under the export credit guarantee program. The current $2.5 billion fund will be increased by $300 million to provide additional stimulus to our export efforts.

congressman doug bereuter

Program Disappointing

While advance deficiency payments will help to ease the cashflow problems of many of our producers and the additional export funds will aid export efforts, overall I am disappointed in the major features of the 1983 program. Recent reports of a record wheat crop this year, with a voluntary 15 percent acreage reduction program in effect, indicate the need for a stronger program to actually reduce wheat production. Although a high percentage of Nebraska's wheat farmers are expected to comply with the 1982 program, the price-depressing effects of another predicted nation-wide record crop will perpetuate the economic problems faced by wheat farmers.

On farm storage payments will remain at 26.5 cents per bushel. I am disappointed in the failure of USDA to raise these storage payment rates. I had written to the Secretary earlier this year to urge him to increase storage rates to encourage the construction of additional on farm storage and provide additional marketing flexibility to wheat producers.

I have great concern that the 1983 wheat program announced last week by Secretary Block will be inadequate to reverse the economic crisis currently gripping the farm sector.

To the Editor:

Why doesn't the Wayne Herald tell the other side of the story in the article about the Wayne-Carroll School Dist. being $102,000 short in tuition money? We, the rural taxpayers—yes, we pay taxes also—are tired of paying more than our fair share to educate our High School aged children.

Also, the 6 men listed in the article are only representatives for many, many rural people. Their names are for litigation purposes. They should be praised for representing a large number of people and not made out to be troublemakers.

Have you looked into why the litigation isn't settled? Do a lot of people realize what a rural district pays to send a child to Wayne-Carroll High School compared to actual cost? Let's hear the other side.

Mary Nichols

The wonderful welcome by your citizens, the fun of participating in your parade, our eating those delicious empanadas... all truly made for us a day to be remembered.

Once again, thank you for sharing with us that friendly and most hospitable spirit of the people of Wayne.

Little help offered

By M.M. Van Kirk
Nebraska Farm Bureau

American farmers struggling to survive the economic squeeze of the 1980s are apparently going to have to learn to live with two factors that have had most to do with their production costs—high priced fuel and high interest rates.

USDA Economic Research Service economists in the June issue of Agricultural Outlook provide an excellent analysis of what has happened on the farm credit scene in the last three years and they offer little hope for any major reduction in the interest rates that farm and ranch people will be paying, or anyone else who borrows money for that matter.

Here is how they explain what happened. "Until June 1978, interest ceilings on savings deposits were 5 percent and those on time deposits at banks (for a year or less) were either 5 1/4 or 5 3/4. Agricultural banks received funds at these low costs for lending, and they extended loans at low interest, within the bounds of State usury laws. The Monetary Control Act of 1980, however, preempted State interest rate ceilings on business and agricultural loans above $1,000 and allowed maximum interest rates on these loans to rise to 5 percent above the prevailing Federal Reserve discount rate.

"With interest rate ceilings relaxed, banks could compete for funds with other forms of investments, and needed to compete to avoid withdrawals. The introduction of the 4-month money market certificate has tied banks' cost of funds to developments in the Nation's money markets. For example, at the end of 1978, only 2.4 percent of deposits at agricultural banks were money market certificates. By the end of 1981, these certificates accounted for 27.4 percent of deposits. The growth in these certificates—as well as in the less popular small-saver accounts, consumer repurchase agreements and large certificates of deposit—has made the cost of funds to agricultural banks more dependent on national money market rates."

STAGNATION

A revolution took place in the nation's banking and credit system starting in the fall of 1979 when the Federal Reserve Board instituted its anti-inflation, tight-money policy based on a decision not to continue to inflate the economy to pay for higher oil prices. The economists state that this led to an unavoidable transfer of real resources from the United States to the oil exporters. Similarly, the decision not to finance wage increases in excess of productivity growth led to 3 years of economic stagnation and high unemployment.

And finally, they point out, the sharp reduction in inflation came a full nine quarters after the Federal Reserve initiated its tight money policy—a typical lag, they say, between the start of reduced money growth and lower inflation. The lag occurs because of rigidities in labor and product markets. The more rigid wage/price behavior is, the more unemployment usually rises. In response to reduced money growth and the longer the time lag between tight money and lower inflation.

The analysis provides a comprehensive explanation of why those farm and ranch operators who were carrying the heaviest load of debt during this transition period have been under the greatest financial pressure. It was the wrong time to take on new credit obligations, such as buying more land, new and larger equipment, or adding expensive irrigation equipment.

The analysts do not include any dire predictions for the future. They include agricultural credit is available and will continue to be available but at a price tied to the national financial markets.

The opinions expressed here are not necessarily those of the Wayne Herald editorial board.

ATTENDED CONFERENCE
Tom Wilmes, vocational agriculture/business instructor at Allen High School, attended the Nebraska Vocational Agriculture Association Summer Conference held July 12 to 15 at Burke High School at Omaha. Approximately 150 secondary and post secondary agriculture education instructors attended the conference.

Throughout the conference an ag teacher's swap shop was held with the teachers giving short presentations on effective teaching techniques they have developed. A panel consisting of university and industry spokespersons discussed the theme of "A Futuristic Look at Agriculture in the 80's".

Committee meetings of the Nebraska Vocational Agriculture Association (NVAA) were held to set up the activities and projects to be worked on during the year 1982-83.

An NVAA recognition banquet was held the third evening of the conference to present awards of professionalism to deserving members.

The conference is held annually to promote professionalism and instill enthusiasm in agricultural educators from across the state of Nebraska.

Start saving now for a worry-free retirement

Build a retirement fund with the money that used to go for taxes

An IRA account is the answer to saving money for a comfortable retirement. Deposit up to $2,000 a year and if you are a working couple, deposit up to $4,000. Couples with only one wage-earner can contribute $2,250. The money you save and the high-earned interest are tax-deferred until you withdraw at retirement when you'll probably be in a lower tax bracket.

Make periodic deposits or in a lump sum. And you can choose Midwest Federal's automatic monthly deposit plan, if you prefer.

Unlike some IRA plans, we charge no fees or commissions. And your money works right here in the community.

Come in soon for details. Then sign up for an IRA that will build a worry-free retirement for you.

...it's great to be a Midwesterner!

card of thanks

WE WISH TO thank everyone for prayers, masses, memorials, flowers and cards sent in remembrance of our loving brother, Allen Salmon.

THANK YOU to my relatives and friends for the beautiful flowers, cards, gifts, phone calls and personal visits while I was in the hospital at Osmond.

THE FAMILY OF Wilma Johnson would like to extend our sincere appreciation to friends, neighbors and relatives for the food brought to the home, the many cards, flowers and memorials sent to the family.

A SINCERE thank you to Dr. Bentnach, Gary West and the Providence Medical nurses and staff. Thanks to Father Jim and Sister Gertrude for their prayers.
