Wayne's delinquent account dilemma

City Council hears garbageman's gripes

Sometimes, city officials handle a lot of garbage.
Such was the case Tuesday night.
That's when one of Wayne's two Class A garbage haulers appeared before the City Council, during its regular meeting, to protest what he described as unequal treatment.

CALLING ON the the Council to fire the city administrator, former Councilman Vernon Russell, owner and operator of Wayne Refuse Service, took issue with the city's recently passed collection ordinance.
The ordinance, which passed unanimously during the Council's Feb. 22 meeting, sets up procedures whereby the city can enforce collection against fee-delinquent Class A garbage haulers.

The ordinance requires Class A haulers to pay up by the 15th of the month for previous-month service, according to Phil Kloster, city administrator.
In explaining that ordinance to the Council on Feb. 22, Kloster noted the city was having difficulty collecting fees from one of the Class A haulers — Wayne Refuse Service.

AT THAT TIME, the Russell account was in arrears from November of 1982 for a total in excess of $3,000, Kloster said.

Under the newly passed ordinance, the Class A haulers' license could be revoked or suspended for failure to pay on time. Haulers, however, are entitled due-process proceedings in efforts to regain a suspended or revoked license.

In a drawn-out verbal blast at the city, the City Council, the city administrator (Kloster), the city public works superintendent (Vern Schulz), the city clerk (Norman Melfon), a city attorney (Bob Ensz) and the community newspaper (The Wayne Herald), Russell demanded action.

"I WANT SOME action...I want ordinance 83-5 (the collection ordinance) repealed in its entirety," Russell demanded, accusing the city of "flagrantly and repeatedly" overcharging him.

"I also want the repeal of the $200 license fee or I want to see every other business in town have it," the long-time City Council critic continued.

"And, I would like to see Mr. Kloster fired...or given instructions on how to run his office," Russell said, his voice measuring his anger.

Using sarcasm and innuendo, Russell also accused Kloster and Schulz of conspiracy to take over the city's garbage business.

"I THINK it is a conspiracy by Mr. Kloster, and possibly Mr. Schulz, to take over the garbage business in this town," Russell taunted.

After his remarks, which were interrupted twice by scheduled bid openings and public hearings, Russell remained for a few moments, then left the meeting.

He left the meeting before the Council was able to call a working session on the matter, but was told by Mayor Wayne Marsh that the city would prepare an answer.

During the working session, Kloster told the Council that Russell's remarks were "a bunch of garbage."

FURTHERMORE, Kloster informed the Council that Russell had paid his delinquent accounts for the months of November and December, but remained in arrears for January.

"February's will be due by the 15th of this month," Kloster explained.

"Here's an individual who wants to run by his own rules," the city administrator continued.

"It's unfair that we get slapped with inaccuracies that are as far from the truth as day is to night," Kloster told the Council.

During his remarks, Russell repeatedly questioned what he referred to as a $160.29 overcharge without directly addressing the delinquency of his account.

"WE'RE NOT pushing that...we've never pushed that," Kloster told the Council.

The dispute appeared to revolve around long-ago city charges for out-of-town pickups by Class A haulers.

Russell, by his own admission, acknowledged that he alone decided to stop paying the out-of-town fee and dropped it from his customer billing.

According to Kloster, records indicate that city legal counsel had some question about the municipality's ability to collect the fee since transfer station rate structures offered little in the way of enforcement.

"He wasn't charged any interest on that amount and I have no trouble writing that part of it off," Kloster explained.

"HE (RUSSELL) always automatically deducts what he doesn't want to pay

Wayne lottery election set

Mark Tuesday, April 19, on your calendar.
That's the date set for Wayne's special election on the citywide lottery question. City Council has selected that date to hold a citywide referendum, which will allow voters to decide on the future of a municipal lottery in Wayne.

THE DATE was announced by Phil Kloster, city administrator, during the Council's regular meeting Tuesday night.

"Plan to be in town, and tell your friends to be in town, too, to vote on the issue," Kloster told the Council.

Kloster said that if the municipal lottery question carries, the Council will be authorized to set the rules and regulations.

"We have been talking with a number of officials in towns running a lottery and those planning to put the question to a vote," Kloster added.

LAST MONTH, the Council authorized the special election to put the question before city voters.

According to Kloster, Papillion, which is in the Omaha metropolitan market, is projecting ticket sales from 100,000 to 400,000 for its planned municipal lottery.

He said Waverly was printing 50,000 tickets per drawing and netting $4,000 per month from its lottery.

"If we make only $1,000 per month, that's $12,000 a year that doesn't have to come from property taxpayers," he added.

City opens bidding on treatment plant plan

Bids will be opened April 26 for construction of the city proposed $1.7 million wastewater treatment plant.

City Council approved the engineer's final cost estimate and bid opening date during its regular meeting at City Hall Tuesday night.

According to Clyde Flowers, representing Bruce Gilmore & Associates — city consulting engineers, the major construction project will be advertised for five weeks rather than the normal three.

THE PROJECT, which has been years in the planning and funding application stages, will be built with federal, state and local matching funds.

The city's share of the project is about $256,000, according to engineering estimates.

City Council not only approved the bid letting on the project, but also approved a detailed financing plan to fund the plant with utility revenue bonds.

The funding plan underwrites the plant, blending the federal, state and local matching funds into a cash-flow system to meet contractor and operational deadlines.

FURTHERMORE, the payback schedule, which is included in the funding program, allows the city flexibility for additional financing on the proposed project based on projected municipal sewer and water earnings.

In other action, the City Council authorized Phil Kloster, city administrator, to apply for a state Neighborhood Revitalization Grant for the Roosevelt Park area.

If successful, the city-sought grant would underwrite nearly 80 percent of proposed street, water and sewer improvements proposed for the Roosevelt Park Addition in the city's southeastern corner.

ACCORDING TO Kloster, the city is seeking a state grant for $122,000, which would be combined with $30,500 in municipal funds for a $152,500 project total.

Kloster explained that the city applied for the grant last year, but fell short of the state requirements.

He urged the Council to consider renewing the grant application.

"If we can get the grant, we can avoid going into heavy assessments in that area for improvements," Kloster explained.

He noted that a number of residents in Roosevelt Park had been working with the city to overcome adversity in proposed sewer, water and street improvements in Roosevelt Park.

Pillow talk

Restful Knights, busy days ahead

By Randy Hascall

Rest assured, the community of Wayne should never run out of pillows.

A pillow manufacturing business, named Restful Knights, was started in Wayne in mid-January. The business is owned by Virgil and Janet Kardell and Rob and Carolee Stuberg.

Restful Knights is located above Timberline Wood Products at 215 Main Street. The Kardells own Timberline and Carolee is employed there.

VIRG BECAME interested in the pillow business when Royal Linens Waterbed Sheet Company of Lincoln decided to discontinue its pillow manufacturing and concentrate on the manufacturing of sheets.

He purchases his sheets from that company and on each trip to Lincoln, he learned more about the pillow business. Virg said Carolee also became interested so the two couples got started in business. There was plenty of space for their new business upstairs, above Timberline.

Material is bought in bales and the business hires local women to take the material home and sew the pillows. They are then filled with 100 percent polyester which is purchased in 600 or 800-pound bales from Nashville.

A college student, Mike Wheelstone, does much of the filling with polyester, places them in plastic bags after they are sewn shut and boxes them 12 pillows to a box.

LAST WEEK, the Wayne business sold 18 cases of pillows. Kardell said about 300 pillows have been manufactured each week but added that the business is probably capable of producing 200 a day or possibly even 1,500 a week.

Sixty regular size or 30 king-size pillows can be stuffed an hour and 14 women do sewing part-time in their homes.

Most of the pillows are sold to waterbed stores. Sioux City stores purchase many of the pillows but they also are sold as far north as Minneapolis and as far south as Kansas City. Virgil said the business is now starting to make regular size pillows for nursing homes.

"We're really new at it. The business is just in its beginning," he said.

School district's vocational plans get green light

The Wayne-Carroll Board of Education has given the go-ahead on the expansion of the high school's vocational education facilities.

The decision to proceed with construction of the facility came Tuesday afternoon during the board's regular monthly meeting.

Board members, on unanimous approval, voted to award the contract to Otte Construction Co. of Wayne.

THE DECISION to proceed with the expansion of the school's vocational education facilities comes after months of planning and debate.

Last September, the board deadlocked on a motion to accept the low base bid for the expansion submitted by Risor and Barney Inc. of Wisner.

The deadlock came after several board members questioned whether the district would have enough money for the expansion.

The question of the district's financial solvency stemmed from, among other things, a clerical error made in the Wayne County Assessor's office.

The error amounted in lost revenues to the Wayne Public School system of about $296,254 for the 1981-82 school year.

SUPERINTENDENT Francis Haun informed the board Tuesday afternoon that money is available in the district's sinking fund to proceed with the vocational education expansion at this time.

In proceeding with the expansion, board members Tuesday voted to postpone for an indefinite time plans to enclose the west and north entrances to the high school.

"I would like to see the vestibules built, no doubt about it," said board member Cap Peterson. "But I think our primary concern is to provide students in the district with an educational unit."

"The real question is whether or not the total cost of both projects is one we can justify," stated board member Arnold Emry, adding "I really feel the vestibule is a secondary item at this time."

PLANS FOR the vocational addition, as approved by the board, call for a 56' x 69' expansion to the west of the existing shop facility.

The addition will be used for auto mechanics and metals, including electrical work, small engine repair and welding.

The existing facility will be expanded for woodworking.

SUBMITTING THE low bid Tuesday afternoon for the vocational expansion, as approved by the board, was Risor and Barney Inc. of Wisner at $121,364.

Board members, however, voted to accept the $122,233 bid submitted by Otte Construction Co. of Wayne.

Otte's bid included two voluntary deductions totaling $2,800. The deductions would come from the use of plastic rather than cast iron drainage pipe and on a brand of heating system other than what the architects recommend.

Architect Lynn Jones of the firm Davis, Fenton, Stange and Darling of Lincoln, who was present at the meeting, agreed to study the voluntary deductions and report back to the board at next month's meeting.

Other companies submitting bids Tuesday afternoon for the approved expansion were Beckenhauer Construction, Norfolk, $131,742; and J. H. Hesse Co., Norfolk, $126,942.

BOARD MEMBERS cited the fact that Otte Construction is a local contractor as one reason for accepting that company's bid.

"Otte Construction pays taxes locally, as do many of the company's employees," pointed out board member Joyce Reep.

"When a job is completed there are always a lot of loose ends and a need to call the contractor back. I know Otte would be very willing to come back," added Peterson.

Contract time on the vocational addition, as submitted in the bid by Otte Construction, is a secondary item at this time.

Backfire builds on property tax

By Melvin Pkut
Nebraska Press Association

A legislature committee last week heard a sample of the apparent outrage of farmers and business people about the possible loss of their personal property tax exemptions this year.

More than 200 people attended a Revenue Committee hearing on LB 597, a bill which would reimpose the personal property tax on farm machinery, business inventory and livestock.

The message the committee heard was that just about anything the state has to do to solve its fiscal problems would be better than the reimposition of the unpopular tax, which was repealed in 1977.

RON VAVRINA of Clarkson, an implement dealer and chairman of the Nebraska Agri-Business Coalition, suggested at the hearing that the Legislature address the state fiscal problem by reducing expenditures as much as possible, and then raising sales and income taxes or establishing a lottery, if necessary.

Members of his organization wouldn't support the extension of the state sales tax to services, Vavrina told the committee.

In granting the personal property tax exemptions under heavy lobbying by the agri-business coalition, the 1977 Legislature also established a fund to reimburse local governments for revenue lost to the exemptions.

LB 597 would improve the state's fiscal position by eliminating the need for an estimated $79 million which is currently being paid annually as reimbursement for the exemptions.

VAVRINA AND others argued that the tax on exempted personal property discriminated against businesses which rely on inventory and machinery, and should not be reimposed under any circumstances.

Farmers and business people might not consider LB 597 a serious threat this year if it weren't for its broad based sponsorship. Its nine introducers encompass opposing factions in recent legislative battles over distribution of the reimbursement fund created to pay local governments for their losses.

Rural Sens. John DeCamp of Neligh and Loran Schmit of Bellwood, and Urban Sens. Vard Johnson of Omaha and Steven Fowler of Lincoln are among co-sponsors.

"It (LB 597) is the worst option except what happened to us last year," said DeCamp. He was referring to the enactment of distribution formula which favored urban areas of the state.

The Nebraska Farm Bureau Federation, the Nebraska Farmers Union and the Nebraska Livestock Feeders Association were among the organizations represented in testimony against the bill.

SEN. DAVE LANDIS of Lincoln, Vard Johnson of Omaha and other members of the Revenue Committee were angry over the 26-21 vote on Feb. 25 to kill LB 196, a bill to include computer software, tapes and films under the state sales tax.

Members of the committee viewed the measure, which the panel itself introduced, as a relatively innocuous bill intended simply to clarify the tax status of the material. It was expected to raise about $1.6 million next year for the state.

Sen. DeCamp, who offered the bill, said the bill represented a piecemeal approach to the sales tax on services, and singled out the fledgling computer industry for unfair treatment.

COMMITTEE members argued that the software is comparable to a painting record. Sales tax is paid only on the raw materials — paper, paints and plastic — but the additional value of the talent represented in the objects.

Particularly offensive to Landis and Johnson was the work of the business lobby in beating the bill. No industry representatives appeared at public hearings on the subject this year and last to protest.

Johnson and Landis said the killing of LB 196 is a harbinger of stringent business opposition to a host of more important revenue bills to be considered later in the session.

Sodbuster could lose subsidies

By Cheryl Westcott
Nebraska Farm Bureau

Two current legislative proposals — one national, one state — are aimed at controlling erosion on fragile lands. Both have merit.

On the national scene, Sen. Bill Armstrong of Colorado has announced his intention to re-introduce a measure nicknamed the "Sodbuster Bill."

Armstrong's bill would prohibit federal economic incentives for farmers who plow fragile lands not previously cultivated.

CROPS GROWN on these lands would not be eligible for price supports, crop insurance, disaster payments or federal loans.

Armstrong's measure passed the Senate in fall 1982 by a wide margin as an amendment to an appropriations bill. But it was dropped when the Senate's version of the money bill went to conference with the House's version, which did not contain the sodbuster provisions.

Armstrong sees better prospects for his bill this year. Several technical changes in the legislation have been made at the suggestion of USDA, so the bill will have the administration's approval.

And Armstrong's colleague, Rep. Hank Brown of Colorado, has agreed to introduce an identical measure in the house.

ARMSTRONG introduced the measure in 1982 because of severe wind erosion on newly plowed grasslands in northeast Colorado.

Whereas erosion on the average American farm is 5 tons of topsoil per year, it can average as high as 30 tons per acre per year on highly erodible, newly plowed grasslands.

His measure is not an attempt to tell farmers what they can or cannot do with their land, Armstrong said, but it would keep the government from subsidizing erosion, which is the effect of allowing farm program benefits for crops grown on these fragile lands.

MORE THAN 30 agricultural organizations have endorsed the Sodbuster Bill, including the Society for Ranger Management, the National Association of Conservation Districts and the American Farm Bureau Federation, which considers it a major legislative priority.

Here in Nebraska, Sen. Martin Kahle has introduced LB 247, which already has had a public hearing and is being held in The Public Works Committee.

Kahle's proposal would allow Natural Resources Districts to adopt, and enforce rules and regulations requiring the district's approval of a comprehensive conservation plan prior to cultivation of any land in the district which has not been cultivated for a period of five years, which is included in wind erodibility group one or two as established by the SCS.

Such a plan would include a description of the conservation practices which would be followed during and after cultivation and would provide for the re-establishment of native vegetation when cultivation is permanently ceased.

FURTHER, the NRD may require the posting of a bond to ensure re-establishment of native vegetation, as a condition for approving plan.

Like the Sodbuster Bill, Kahle's proposal is a "get tough" approach to a growing problem, and it would complement the national measure.

It is true that most true farmers are conscientious stewards of the land, and both the Sodbuster Bill and Kahle's proposal are superfluous for this group. But there is an element that would be quite happy to exploit fragile lands as long as it were profitable, and then toss the fate of the land to the winds.

As Armstrong says, the federal government should not subsidize this group, and as Kahle proposes, persons who do choose to plow these lands should be required to restore them to their former state.

State overfed by tax bill

The Legislature was busy as usual last week, but there didn't seem to be any real controversial issue before us to generate much excitement.

For a brief moment, tempers flared over LB 129 which would require Douglas County to elect its county commissioners by district instead of at large.

Although I think district elections provide better representation and accountability, I can also understand how counties feel about being told by the state how to run their county government.

THE REVENUE Committee held a public hearing on LB 597 on Monday afternoon. I'm sure most of you have heard about this bill.

It would reimpose the personal property tax which was eliminated several years ago. Like LBs 12 and 47 which called for a sales tax on services, this is just another attempt to broaden the tax base so that the Legislature can avoid raising the sales and income tax rates.

Instead of doing the responsible thing of working within its means, which requires reduced government spending, advocates of these bills are simply devising other methods of raising our taxes so that government can continue to roll along as usual.

I have received quite a bit of mail on this subject, indicating to me that there is substantial concern about LB 597 and the related bills, LBs 12 and 47.

I DON'T BELIEVE LB 597 will get out of committee because of the opposition expressed at the hearing, but if it should, I will oppose its passage. Those in government must realize that we can't solve our problems by raising taxes.

senator merle von minden

An action of major importance was taken Wednesday by the Education Committee. Legislative bills 45 and 46, the so-called "Christian School" bills, were killed.

All attempts to amend the bills were rejected by the committee which, I fear, sets the stage for more confrontation between public and private school supporters. I have no knowledge of what further action will be taken by the Legislature at this time.

A public hearing was held Wednesday on a bill I co-introduced with two other senators. LB 443 would eliminate jury trials in misdemeanor cases involving a maximum possible sentence of six months or less.

JURY TRIALS are extremely costly to the counties especially when someone asks for a jury trial over some petty offense which, even if the prosecution is successful, will not bring in enough money through fines and court costs to offset the price of impaneling a jury.

Having been a county board member, I know how tough it is to set the county attorney's budget because of the difficulty of predicting the number of jury trials.

Opponents of stricter laws for drinking drivers repeatedly argued that harsher laws would cause more requests for jury trials at great expense to the counties.

Because the maximum period of incarceration for violation of our driving under the influence law is six months, LB 443 would eliminate the threat from those fighting potential convictions who would bankrupt the counties by demanding jury trials.

TO THOSE who assert that jury trials are a right, I want to point out that the U.S. Supreme Court has held that an individual does not have a right to a jury trial in all misdemeanor cases and, in fact, many states do not provide jury trials for those arrested for misdemeanor offenses.

Those arrested for violations of municipal ordinances are also not granted jury trials. I think this is a good bill which is fair to the defendant and the county.

A defendant's chances for a just and fair trial will not be compromised. In addition, the county will not fall victim to defendants who use the tactic of demanding a jury trial for a petty offense in order to coerce the county attorney into dropping or reducing the charges because he can't afford to prosecute.

One other activity of interest to Nebraskans occurred Tuesday. The Legislature recessed briefly to celebrate Statehood Day. Acting Gov. McGinley handed out awards to several citizens of the state who exemplify the pioneer spirit which led to the creation of the State of Nebraska 116 years ago on March 1st, 1867.

To the editor:
It is now a couple of weeks since our duly elected officials voted to subsidize a private club outside the city limits.

We have been waiting for an article or editorial by you concerning this subject, but none has yet been forthcoming.

In view of your adamant position on the issuing of surplus cheese, we felt that you would again come to the defense of the taxpayers. It appears we were wrong about that expectation. Thus we are writing this for printing in your newspaper.

About $30,000 being spent outside the city of Wayne's boundaries to benefit a very few members of a private club is beyond comprehension. Yes we are questioning the fertilizing of the Wayne Country Club with city funds.

Is this just? Is it legal? Is it right? We think not!!! So many better ways to spend the general taxpayers money are evident within the city boundaries. To list just a few that come to mind, without trying to be all inclusive about them, are: the city parks, streets, ice skating/tennis facilities, swimming pool, auditorium, and general city recreational programs.

This is not to knock the above mentioned, only to illustrate that there are needs within the city without going out of town to find them.

For God's sake, spend our city taxpayers money at home in and on the city of Wayne.

After all, isn't that what the big advertisements say that are printed in your Wayne Herald? Or don't you believe what you print?

If indeed, those ads are merely B.S., perhaps the private facilities could use those ads as fertilizer and save us, the general taxpayer, valuable tax money.

Distorted drivet

Experience is an excellent teacher. And, Wayne's City Council members have learned a great deal when it comes to handling one of their loudest critics, former Councilman Vernon Russell.

Russell, who owns and operates Wayne Refuse Service, is a master of the veiled threat, the innuendo and sarcastic spearchucking. And, his ability to distort an issue beyond public recognition is legendary in this town.

However, for years the Council, which seems to take the brunt of his attacks against everything from job performance to public policy, often has risen to the bait.

Of course, the bait is always on a hook held by Russell. Russell, who has been known to use the City Hall Council Chambers for fishing expeditions, uses whatever bait he can to catch any game fish who feels like responding to his unending drivet.

The former councilman, who frequently and publicly discloses his own fears about city government conspiracies and plots against him, makes most political grand-standing look like a boy-scout camporee.

However, during Russell's most recent tirade against City Hall, the Council didn't bite.

Not only did no one rise to the bait, but the Council let the former councilman's verbal locomotive derail on its own track record of distortions. No one is denying that the Wayne garbage man has the right to speak his mind, or to see things the way he does.

However, when his tantrums toss fiction around as fact and he orchestrates his opinion so that he appears to be the city's whipping boy, it's time to ignore the ignorance of it all.

The Council's ability to see the folly of trying to deal with a one-man minority with plenty of axes to grind is to be commended. Tuesday night, the Council listened...a courtesy it extends to all taxpayers and residents of the city.

That's perhaps much more than Russell's behavior deserved. And, that has to say something about the Council's commitment to Wayne.

Firm future

Thirty-four manufacturing firms announced plans to build new industrial plants in the state last year.

In addition to the new industry announcements, 48 existing Nebraska industries had plans to expand their present facilities. While the state was holding its own in the number of reported new and expanding industries, capital investments reported for the new facilities and equipment showed moderate growth.

There was a reported $74.9 million in industrial capital investments announced during 1981 and last year that figure grew to $93.3 million. For the first time in a number of years, investments in new industries outdistanced those recorded for existing industries.

Last year's industrial development activity is expected to create 1,700 new employment opportunities for the state's labor force when the plants are in full operation. This is only slightly higher than 1981 and still below totals for earlier years.

The report also indicated that three industrial classifications accounted for more than 70 percent of the projected new jobs in Nebraska last year. Food and kindred products manufacturers announced eight new plants; machinery, except electrical, announced 10; and electrical machinery accounted for two new plant announcements with high employment plants.

Education specialist program underway

Since the program was approved last fall, several students have begun working on their Education Specialist (Ed.S.) degrees at Wayne State College, according to Dr. Joseph Fleck, head of the Education Division.

Fleck defined the Ed.S. degree as "an advanced degree beyond the master's level which will prepare students for superintendent and other central office positions in schools."

The North Central Association (NCA), which approves and accredits all WSC programs, gave the go-ahead for the Ed.S. degree program in October 1982.

WORK ON the program began with an investigation and needs assessment in 1977, Fleck explained. "At that time, a very significant population was identified as being interested in the program," he said.

For the assessment, superintendents, principals and teachers within a 100 mile radius of Wayne were surveyed. The results showed that 216 people said they were interested in pursuing a six-year program in school administration.

However, the project was "put on the back burner." At the time, the head of the Education Division was in an interim (non-permanent) position, and it was decided to hold the project until that position was filled permanently.

THE PROJECT began cooking again in 1980, when Fleck joined the staff. After looking at qualifications to be met, and courses and support needed for the program, Fleck presented his idea to the NCA evaluation team in the spring of 1982.

"The team made very few requests for changes," Fleck noted. "They asked that we put more stress on research, so that the students would be capable of conducting and utilizing research for their jobs."

Other improvements that need to be made are the additions of library resources and faculty staffing.

Fleck said $7,000 from energy savings has been earmarked to buy books, professional journals and instructional resources to fulfill the first requirement. WSC will have to hire another full-time teacher to fulfill the other requirement.

TO BEGIN the program, students must have a master of education or master of educational administration degree, and a 3.2 grade point average on a 4.0 scale in their graduate work.

If students have a master of education administration degree, said Fleck, they would probably be able to move into the Ed.S. program without having to take pre-requisite classes.

But if they have a master of education degree, they would probably have to take up to 12 hours of pre-requisites before beginning the program.

Those pre-requisites include classes in school organization and administration, school law, a curriculum course, and a course in supervision of instruction, he added.

Teachers for the program also have requirements to meet. "Anyone teaching this program must have his or her doctorate and background work experience in this area. These terms were set by both WSC and the NCA," Fleck noted.

THE ED.S. is a 33-credit hour program. The core of the program is 21 hours of courses in school administration, Fleck said, with one class in statistics.

Six hours of courses are electives, and the other six hours are focused on field-based study, similar to an internship, he explained.

Classes meet in the evenings during the regular school semesters, as well as during summer session. "The program is geared to the working person," Fleck added, and part-time students should be able to complete it in two years.

Wayne State has had "several inquiries" about the Ed.S. program from Northeast Nebraska and Western Iowa. In addition, students who earned their masters degrees at WSC have shown interest in returning to get their Ed.S. degrees, he said.

FLECK ALSO said that he hoped those students who went on to get doctorate degrees could use their Ed.S. work in their doctorate program.

"They should not have an undue amount of courses to take—probably not more than nine hours," he said.

He added that since most Nebraska high schools are also accredited by the NCA, those wishing to be principals must have 45 hours of graduate work—an NCA requirement. So most of those people are asked to consider an Ed.S. degree after completing their masters degrees.

The NCA evaluation team will return to WSC in 1985 to re-evaluate the Ed.S. program.

"They will focus on this program only—the rest of the college's academic programs will not be re-evaluated until 1991-92," Fleck said.

Cellist performing

Cellist Karl-Lise Ravnan will be performing at Wayne State College on Thursday, March 17, according to James Day, professor of music.

The performance, third in the WSC special Programs Series, is scheduled to begin at 8 p.m. in Ramsey Theatre, located in the Val Peterson Fine Arts Center on the Wayne State Campus.

Admission is $3.50 for adults and $1.50 for high school students and younger. WSC faculty, staff and students, and holders of WSC activity passes will be admitted free of charge.

RAVNAN HAS been featured soloist with the National Centre for Orchestral Studies Orchestra in London; the Eastman School of Music Philharmonia, the Aspen Concert Orchestra, and the Lincoln Symphony Orchestra.

During the 1981-82 season, she toured major American cities as a member of "Music from Marlboro," and Europe as a member of the Camerata Lys.

She will appear with her pianist father, Audun Ravnan, professor of piano at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

THE PROGRAM is part of a continuing effort to bring programs of merit to the WSC campus, community and area.

In the past 11 years, over 55 programs featuring speakers, orchestras, ballet and dance troupes, puppeteers, and many others have been brought to Wayne State.

Golden Eagle featured in film

Cinematographer and naturalist Kent Durden will present his film, "Gifts of an Eagle," a chronicle of 16 years in the life of that bird, at Wayne State College on Monday, March 14 at 8 p.m. in Ramsey Theatre of the Val Peterson Fine Arts Center.

The film is the final one in a series of three Audubon Wildlife Films which have been presented at WSC during the 1982-83 academic year.

The film series is sponsored by the Wayne State College Biology Club, with help from a grant by the Wayne State Foundation.

DURDEN recounts the 16 years he spent raising a golden eagle to maturity and freedom.

The bird, named Lady, flew freely around his ranch—establishing and defending territory, raising a variety of foster offspring, and executing spectacular flight acrobatics, until finally she mated and severed all human ties.

This is one of the most remarkable and comprehensive film studies of a golden eagle ever made.

It features footage of Lady's airborne plunges to a graceful landing only inches in front of the camera, and contrasts a fierce territorial instinct with Lady's tender care of two adopted eaglets.

Finally, Lady's return to the wild is documented beyond doubt.

DURDEN HAS produced scores of nature education films. His footage has appeared in several Walt Disney productions and in the television series, "Lassie." He is the author of several books about eagles. The Audubon Wildlife Films, in their second year at Wayne State, are scheduled through the New York-based National Audubon Society.

Tickets to the film are $3.50 for adults or $2 for students, and may be obtained from the WSC Biology Club by contacting club sponsor Jewell Shock at Wayne State College, Wayne, Neb. 68787, (402) 375-2200.

Tickets also will be sold at the door the night of the film presentation.

Hansen would have preferred wins Leading scorer finishes career

By Kent Propst
Wayne State SID

The familiar uniform with the number "40" has been packed away and will never again grace the shoulders of Wayne State basketball star Grady Hansen.

Hansen, who recently closed out his career for the Wildcat cagers, exits with several school records including the most noteworthy one—most points in a career. He scored over 300 points more than anyone else in the history of Wayne State.

Yet Grady, who used his 6-6 frame to net 1,942 points in four seasons, never played on a WSC team with a winning record. During his career, Wayne State won just 48 of 130 basketball games.

"I WANTED a winning season more than anything," Hansen said. "The last two seasons have been very frustrating. My goal was to go out a winner—I'd have been glad to just be on the team if we'd have gone out as a winner."

A 1979 graduate of Central High School in Omaha, Hansen's freshman season was not particularly noteworthy. Used sparingly, he averaged just 5.1 points in 25 games as WSC posted an 8-17 mark.

But he exploded during his sophomore year. He averaged 19.3 points and 5.2 rebounds per game while shooting better than 50 percent from the field and 75 percent from the line. He earned all-district and all-conference honors while leading the tough Central States Intercollegiate Conference in scoring.

Wayne State improved to 15-19 that year, and hope for a winning season in 1981-82 abounded.

Hansen's junior season was his best. He set school records for most points in a season and most field goals in a season while averaging 19.2 points and 6.7 rebounds each game. All-district and all-conference honors were again awarded him, and he repeated as the CSC's number one scorer. But the Cats slipped to 13-22.

THIS SEASON, Hansen said he was prepared for a slip in his scoring average. Coach Rick Weaver assembled a team with more balanced scoring ability, and after a 9-6 start the Cats seemed on their way to the first winning season at WSC since 1978.

"I didn't care about scoring a lot," Hansen said. "I didn't try to force the shot because we had other guys that could score."

But the Cats won just three of their final 20 games to finish 12-23. Grady came down with the flu mid-season and never completely recovered from it. His scoring average, while still tops on the team, fell to 14.2.

GRADY HANSEN avoids three opponents as he scores.

Still, his accomplishments were many. He owns WSC records for most career points (1,942), most points in a season (673), most field goals in a career (832), and most field goals in a season (289).

Hansen averaged 15.2 points every time he pulled on a Wayne State uniform, and 5.4 rebounds as well. He shot over 53 percent from the floor for his career and 72 percent from the free throw line.

REGARDING THE RECORDS, Hansen agreed that "it's nice to be recognized and have my name in the books. I'm proud of it."

"But in the future, nobody's going to remember my name. They'd remember if the team did well..."

The son of former Wayne State baseball player Rod Hansen and his wife Martha of Omaha, Grady said "I'd like to stay in some aspects of sports, such as YMCA or health club management. I'd like to get a career started, stay in the area, and start a family."

He will graduate in May with a physical education major and a business minor. He and wife Beth are expecting their first child in June.

Randy's Recap

By Randy Hascall

Farewell to Grady

Grady Hansen would agree that a lot of college athletes have more ability and potential than he has.

But very few athletes have ever made better use of their abilities and gone further in their athletic careers than Grady.

The Wayne State basketball and baseball star gave four years of hard work to the college. Until some other star comes along and breaks his record, Hansen will be in the books as the leading scorer in the history of basketball at Wayne State.

The next basketball player to follow in his footsteps may well already be on campus. Freshman Calvin Sprev scored more than 300 points for the Wildcats this past season—more than twice as many as Grady scored his freshman year.

Grady finished his career with 1,942 total points. A strong finish late in his senior season probably would have pushed him over the magic 2,000 mark.

The Omaha Central graduate isn't a great jumper. He has gone up against bigger, stronger and quicker opponents. But, rarely did an opponent outplay Grady. The Wayne State senior has a high grade point average and always used his head out there on the court.

He was a good shooter and knew how to gain good position. Grady will be missed. Hansen doubled in baseball and was one of Wayne State's leading pitchers the past few years. He has elected to pass up his senior year of eligibility in baseball.

Achieving success in two collegiate sports is tough. Earning good grades while competing in two sports is even more difficult. In addition, Grady is married. He and his wife Martha are expecting their first child this June.

All of those factors placed added burdens and pressure on one of Wayne State's most successful athletes.

Because of Grady's contribution to the college, I propose that his uniform number 40 be retired. I hope Wayne State at least considers retiring his number. He wasn't the greatest basketball player I've seen at Wayne State but he gave four years of hard work and is the school's leading scorer.

Grady broke the career scoring record of 1,576 points held by Dennis Siefkes during his 1970-73 career. Breaking that record should merit consideration of the retirement of his number.

Bring in Willie

Willie Stargell fans were disappointed when the Major League Baseball player's appearance at Wayne State College was postponed a couple of weeks ago.

Don't give up hope yet. An attempt is being made to reschedule Stargell. Hopefully the baseball great will be signed to speak at WSC in April. More on that later.

Incredible appearance

I learned this week that my nephew Curt from Columbus had an unusual wrestling experience last weekend.

He competed in the Columbus Multi-State Open Wrestling Tournament and had to face a television celebrity in the second round of his 75-80 pound weight class.

Carl Bellford, a 12-year-old from Bethany, Okla., defeated Curt 10-1 in their second round match. What makes the match interesting is that Bellford appeared on TV's "That's Incredible."

The Oklahoma wrestler made his television appearance because of his wrestling success country-wide. He has won 695 matches and 162 tournaments across the nation. That's one match I bet my nephew will never forget.

A trivia note

This bit of trivia was given to me by Wayne State College Sports Information Director Kent Propst. The Wayne State Wildcats lost 11 more games than they won but actually outscored their opponents from the floor.

WSC scored 2,088 points from the field compared to 2,054 points for their opponents. At the free throw line Wayne made 422 of 647 free throws while foes made 532 of 792. That's nearly incredible.

Ten WSC players earn varsity letters

Coach Rick Weaver has announced the names of 10 Wayne State basketball players who have earned varsity letters for the 1982-83 season.

The group is highlighted by four seniors, including a pair of four-year letterwinners. Heading the group is career scoring leader Grady Hansen, the son of Rod and Martha Hansen of Omaha.

Doug Emanuel also picked up four varsity letters at WSC. The son of Charles and Marie Emanuel of North Bend, Doug played center for the Wildcats. He started two game this season.

Bred Edwards, the son of Ted and Sandy Edwards of Carroll,

Iowa, lettered twice at WSC after transferring from Grandview College. He was Wayne State's second-leading scorer last year and number five scorer this winter, and led the Cats in assists both seasons.

JOHN REED earned one varsity letter after transferring to WSC. The son of Ernestine Reed, John hails from Beaufort, S.C. He was WSC's fourth-leading scorer and number two rebounder as a center this season.

Two of the three junior lettermen earned their second letters, Russ Uhing, the son of Hubert and LeAnn Uhing of Hartington, was the number two scorer on the varsity basketball squad this season. Doug Lollman, who also picked up his second letter, is the son of Jerry and Judy Lollman of Urbandale, Iowa. Doug played at the forward position for the Cats.

Rene Taylor is a junior guard who transferred to WSC this year. He ended up a starter in 17 games. Rene is the son of William Taylor and Lenora Newhouse of South Bend, Ind.

Two sophomores earned varsity letters, including forward-center Lonell Greene, who picked up his second monogram. Greene shot 56 percent from the field and was among the top Wildcat rebounders as well. The East

Orange, N.J. native is the son of Jerry and Henrietta Greene.

JOHN THOMSEN earned his first letter this winter at the forward position. Thomsen, little used early in the year, worked his way into a starting role late in the season and started nine games for WSC. John is the son of Gerald and Barbara Thomsen of Rockford, Iowa.

Calvin Sprev, a slick 6-3 forward, was the lone freshman earning a letter. Sprev ended the season as WSC's top rebounder and number three scorer, starting in 30 games. He is the son of Oscar and Thelma Sprev of Omaha.

Ex-Husker to speak

The Wayne area chapter of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes (FCA) will feature former Nebraska football star Todd Brown at their banquet on Saturday, March 26 at Wayne State College.

Brown, a four-year letterman for the University of Nebraska, Lincoln at the split end position, is the featured speaker. The banquet will begin at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Center at Wayne State.

Tickets to the banquet are available for $5 and can be purchased in advance from Wayne State or Wayne High members of FCA. Tickets will also be sold for $5 at the door on a first-come, first-served basis. City Council's occupancy-tax ordinance sets 3% rate

The Wayne City Council has looked a gift horse in the mouth. And, the result is an ordinance demanding a 5 percent occupancy tax from natural gas companies in the city.

That was the upshot of the Council's vote Tuesday night, which approved the occupancy tax ordinance.

THE ORDINANCE was passed during a meeting that saw Peoples Natural Gas Co., the only natural gas company operating within the city, give the Council a $12,974.94 check as part of a voluntary in-lieu-of-taxes payment that started in 1967.

Moments after Councilman Keith Mosley, also district manager for PNG, presented the check to the city, he also informed the Council that it would be the last in-lieu-of-taxes payment because of the company's declining profit picture.

Tuesday night's voluntary payment was part of a $36,497.28 total the gas company has given the city during the most recent calendar year, according to Mosley.

MOSLEY TOLD the Council that the payment started out at $6,744.84 at the outset in 1967.

"You can see how it has grown over the years," he continued, noting that the payment had a tradition based in company policy to help "assure continued growth and development" in Wayne.

The PNG money has been placed in the city's general fund, according to Phil Kloster, city administrator.

According to Mosley, the company's gross-revenue voluntary payment came off the top of PNG profits over the years.

"We feel that we can no longer make the voluntary payment because of the depressed economy," Mosley continued.

MOSLEY ALSO TOLD the Council that PNG was dropping the payment in "all the towns we serve" because it is necessary to "keep a reasonable profit for our stockholders."

Acknowledging that the city was prepared to pass an ordinance making the in-lieu-of-taxes payment mandatory, Mosley said: "If the city passes the ordinance, then PNG becomes the tax collector for the city."

He explained that under the voluntary payment arrangement, the funds could not be used in the tax base.

"But, if the ordinance passes, it can be used as a tax base," added Mosley, who also provided the Council with an annual report on PNG activity within the city.

THE OCCUPANCY tax ordinance, which mandates the company pay 5 percent of gross revenues to the city, was amended to 3 percent before it received Council approval.

According to Kloster, the 3 percent was more in line with similar payments made by Northwestern Bell Telephone and Wayne Cablevision.

Mosley acknowledged that the city had the right, under the ordinance, to mandate the company payments in the future.

He also noted that the city had the option of absorbing the lost revenue in the general fund.

Kloster indicated that the loss of revenue, when added to the continuing losses of state and federal money, was not a viable option.

"WE CANNOT afford to lose that money," Kloster told the Council.

He said the lost revenue would find its way to the property tax bill city residents must pay.

"We're going to have to make it up someplace," Kloster added, suggesting that the occupancy tax ordinance was the way to do it.

Mosley reminded the Council that the occupancy tax rate in the ordinance was tied to gross revenues and that, if they continued to decrease, the payment would also.

When the vote on the ordinance came later in the meeting, Mosley abstained.

MOSLEY, UNDER questioning from Council members, indicated that PNG was examining data that may force the company to seek a natural gas rate increase in Wayne during the coming year.

"I don't know when that time will come, nor do I know how much we will be requesting," Mosley told the Council.

"It is not going to be a big as our customers are used to getting," Mosley added, explaining that recent increases have not been PNG originated but were passing hikes from suppliers.

Councilman Darrell Heier amended the ordinance from 5 percent to 3 percent moments before it was approved.

calls for 180 days.

Work on the project is expected to begin immediately.

IN OTHER action Tuesday, board members voted to accept certified faculty members for the 1983-84 school year as recommended by Superintendent Haun.

Haun's recommendations are based on evaluation documents submitted by Principals Dave Luff, elementary school, Richard Metteer, middle school, and Don Zeiss, high school.

Haun said the only change in staff as recommended will be the reduction of one third grade teacher at West Elementary School.

Mrs. Tom (Winnie) Jones submitted her resignation at last month's school board meeting and announced her plans to retire.

Haun said Mrs. Jones' position as third grade teacher will not be filled due to a reduction in the number of third grade students enrolled for the 1983-84 school year.

Haun said faculty members have 20 days to consider the offers of employment and that board members will know by next month's meeting of any resignations.

THE VOTE to accept certified staff members for the upcoming year came following an executive session to discuss the proposed faculty.

The remainder of the executive session was devoted to discussion of negotiation strategies for the 1983-84 school year with the Wayne Education Association (WEA).

Last month, Duane Blomenkamp, chairman of the WEA, presented a letter to the school board as the first step in negotiations.

Members of the WEA negotiating board are Blomenkamp, Dale Hochstein, Pat Straight, JoAnn Benshoof, Keith Kopperud and Sally McNeill.

Jim Hummel, Neil Sandahl and Arnold Emry compose the school board's negotiating committee.

BOARD MEMBERS Tuesday also voted unanimously to sanction the Close-Up program for Wayne-Carroll High School.

Government teacher Becky Kelley gave a video presentation and told the board about the Close-Up Foundation, a non-profit organization funded in part through private donations and in part by a Congressional Grant of over $1,000,000.

The Close-Up Foundation offers an extensive one week program in Washington, D. C. to any interested students, teachers, administrators, parents or school board members.

PARTICIPANTS take part in small group seminars that are conducted by members of the Executive, Legislative and Judicial branches, as well as by members of the military, the foreign services, ambassadors and the media.

Cost of the program is $710 per person and is open to any student who can raise the money. The price includes round-trip airfare, hotel accommodations, all meals, all transportation in Washington, theatre tickets, insurance, educational materials and a full-time nurse.

KELLEY SAID the program not only provides an opportunity to study government close up, but allows students to meet and develop new friendships.

Wayne High has been selected by the Nebraska State Department of Education and the Close-Up Foundation as a target school for next year.

As a target school, Wayne High has been granted a full fellowship for a faculty member and a 70 percent fellowship which can be divided equally among up to four students.

Kelley said the next trip to Washington in which Wayne students would take part will probably be in April of 1984.

BOARD PRESIDENT Becky Keidel reported to the board at a conference she attended Feb. 16-19 at Arizona State University in Tempe.

The conference focused on providing appropriate educational services for intellectually gifted students.

Board members learned during Tuesday's meeting that a $500 grant has been awarded to Wayne Public Schools from the Nebraska Association for the Gifted for funding of the school's gifted program.

Keidel, along with Middle School Principal Dick Metteer and fifth and sixth grade language arts teacher Cynthia Swarts received approval by the board to determine how the money will be spent.

IN OTHER business Tuesday the board:

•heard a report by Haun on LB 568 regarding vocational education funding, and LB 387 regarding the amount of tuition which can be charged to non-resident high school students.

•approved a request by the faculty for 2 p.m. school dismissal on March 25 to allow self-evaluation committees to finish their reports.

•learned that German students Becky Schmidt, Lori Baker and Aaron Butler are among 12 Nebraska students eligible to apply for an AATG-PAD Study Trip Award to Germany.

•denied a request by the Leather and Lace Square Dance Club of Wayne to rent the elementary multi-purpose room for dances on April 4 and 18.

NEXT MEETING of the board of education will be at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, April 12.

Gripes

anyway," Melton, the city clerk, told the Council.

Furthermore, Kloster told the Council that he felt Russell was not only delinquent on his city account, but was in "technical violation" of the transfer station ordinances with the Wayne Refuse Service Mini-station.

"The law clearly indicates that there is to be one deposit site for garbage," Kloster said. "And, that's the transfer station, not his place."

Both Mayor Marsh and Kloster assured the Council that the city "knows exactly what it's doing" at the transfer station.

RUSSELL, WHO complained about the City Council agenda "not in the paper," said he was "amazed" to find out that the Class A haulers collection ordinance was passed during the Feb. 22 meeting.

"I saw my name splashed all over the front page (of the newspaper)," Russell said, accusing the city administrator of operating under a policy of providing the press with what he called "inaccurate information."

Russell then used a veiled verbal threat to "bring action against that," contending that he had "some serious thoughts" about it and knew some "private citizens" willing to donate money for the cause.

"OVER THE YEARS I've had problems with city officials and I guess it has festered and is coming to a head," Russell said, launching into a prolonged rendition of his experiences with the city regarding transfer station rules and regulations.

Referring to a 1980 rate increase, Russell said: "I thought then that Class A haulers were getting the shaft...I still think they are."

He told Council that he ignored the bills reflecting what he called an overcharge.

"I chose to ignore it the way the city had ignored me for 13 months," he said.

"I don't think we should be treated any different than any other business," Russell continued, challenging the city's $200 Class A license fee.

RUSSELL ALSO told the Council that the 15th-of-the-month payment clause would put him out of business.

Mayor Marsh, insisting that he wanted the matter cleared up as soon as possible, declined to take Russell's bait.

"I don't think we can do this right now without getting into an argument...and I don't think we want that," Marsh explained.

"We're certainly not going to let this go on any longer," the mayor continued.

Both Marsh and Kloster assured the Council that the city's transfer station ordinances were being followed and followed fairly.

Kloster indicated that the "other hauler (Mrsny Sanitation Service) had no complaints" about the ordinance and "paid his bill."

Bidding

THE COUNCIL unanimously approved the city administrator's request to pursue the grant after the Tuesday night state-mandated public hearing.

City Council members also authorized Kloster to seek a state Game and Parks Commission grant for municipal golf course improvements.

Kloster said no funding was available for the grant, which was applied for several years ago when the city and the Wayne Golf Club began working on a plan to improve the city-owned section of the course.

The grant application, if funded and if successful, could generate some $80,000 for improvements.

KLOSTER SAID it was unlikely that the funding would be available, but indicated that should it come to pass the city was out very little for having applied.

Deadline for the application is April 15.

"We have little to lose," Kloster said.

Also, the Council awarded a lease contract for two city-owned parcels of land to Jim Corbit of Wayne for $80.50 per acre.

The land, which involves a 19-acre tract near the new Jaycees Softball Complex and a 7-acre tract near the city Industrial Park, drew three bidders.

Virgil Kardell and David Zach, both of Wayne, were unsuccessful bidders.

Pseudorabies info meeting planned

The Northeast Nebraska Pork Producers are sponsoring a pseudorabies information meeting at the Wakefield National Bank at 8 p.m. Tuesday (March 15). Anyone interested in attending should enter the meeting room from the west door.

The purpose of the meeting is to explain the proposed Pseudorabies Control Act (LB 534), currently pending in the Nebraska Unicameral. The program will consist of a panel composed of the following: Dick Sorenson of Wayne, Nebraska Pork Producers Legislative Committee chairman; Dr. Albright of Emerson, practicing veterinarian; and Allen Krivohlavek of Dorchester, Nebraska Pork Producers Animal Health Committee chairman.

At the conclusion of the meeting, a straw poll will be conducted to determine producer opinion on the proposed legislation. Anyone who cannot attend the meeting but would like more information can contact: Dean Rickett of Ponca at 755-2652, Verl Carlson of Wakefield at 584-2628, Frances Fuller of Pender at 385-2663 or Clarence Beckmann of Rosalie at 863-2216.

Workshop for 4-H leaders is set

Wayne County 4-H leaders who are in their first two or three years of that position are invited to attend today's (Thursday) session entitled, "What's It All About for New 4-H Leaders?"

The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Woman's Club room of the Wayne city auditorium. The program will include help in planning the club program and finding resources for 4-H meetings.

A segment will also be included on the philosophy of 4-H and an explanation of some roles in the program. Leaders of more than three years are also invited for an update.

Trees can be ordered

The tree planting season is a few weeks away. Of the 3.4 million Clarke-McNary trees available last Nov. 1, several of the 25 species available in the program are sold out or running low.

Order trees now if you are thinking about planting a windbreak, woodlot, wildlife habitat area or for other purposes. Seedlings are available for $22 per hundred. Trees can be ordered at your local SCS, county extension office or NRD of file.

All Natural Resources Districts in northeast Nebraska have tree planting services available at a low cost per tree. The NRD's also will apply a herbicide for weed control after planting.

Allen man attends seminar

In preparation for the 1983 planting season, Michael Olson representing Farmers Cooperative Elevator Company of Allen, attended Land O'Lakes winter croplands seminar recently. The three-day seminar was held in Columbus.

To help him serve area farmers better next season, Olson was briefed on the latest research, product and crop production information by Land O'Lakes agronomy tech specialists.

Sessions the first day included lectures on soil and plant science, with special workshops focusing on interpreting soil tests and infrared photos, soil conservation, sprayer management and product compatibility.

Production of corn, soybeans, alfalfa and small grains was covered during the next two days with emphasis on variety selection, fertility, pesticide and herbicide recommendations. Workshops on identifying weeds; herbicide impregnation; fertilizer formulation and blending, and stored grain management wrapped up the seminar.

NE feeders to meet

The Northeast Nebraska Livestock Feeders Association will hold a meeting at Ron's Steak House in Carroll on Monday, March 14. All members, spouses and guests are invited to attend. Social hour will begin at 6:30 p.m. with dinner at 7:30.

A representative from Vavrina Incorporated of Clarkson the local distributor of the IBM personal computer, will present information on the general use of the computer in agriculture and discuss the economic payback associated with owning a microcomputer. The computer and some programs which Vavrina has available for farmer-feeders will be demonstrated.

Workshop for ag youth

Applications are now being taken for the Nebraska Agriculture Youth Institute 1983. NAYI is an educational opportunity for high school juniors and seniors interested in the future of the agricultural industry. NAYI is a five-day program offering panels, discussions, workshops, sharing and learning.

It will be held from July 18 through 22 at the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education in Lincoln. If chosen, NAYI delegates will have meals, lodging, and conference fees paid by the Nebraska Department of Agriculture.

Contact guidance counselors, vo ag or home economics instructors, county extension agents or home extension agents for application forms.

Agriculture week is scheduled

The 1983 National Agriculture Week has been scheduled for March 18-24, with March 21 named as National Agriculture Day. National Agriculture Day has been endorsed by a resolution of Congress and presidential proclamation, as well as by gubernatorial proclamation in all 50 states.

With the theme "Agriculture: America's Heartbeat," Agriculture Day/Week has been designed as a community based effort to increase public appreciation for the American agricultural system and the key role it plays in our lives.

Although AG Day/Week is coordinated by the Agriculture Council of America Education Foundation, most AG Day/Week activities are carried out by local, county, and/or state ag related organizations.

A TV special, "Who Will Farm the Land?", has been produced by Elanco Products in cooperation with the national FFA for airing during National Ag Week (check your local listings). 1983 is the 10th anniversary of Ag Day/Week.

Sorenson honored by club

Richard L. Sorenson, purebred SPF swine producer from Wayne, has been selected as the 1983 University of Nebraska Block and Bridle Club honoree.

Sorenson will be honored at the club's annual awards banquet April 22 in Lincoln, and his portrait hung in the Livestock Hall of Fame in Marvel Baker Hall on the UNL East Campus. The club will host a reception prior to the banquet at the UNL East Campus Union.

Sorenson has been producing Duroc and Hampshire swine for 25 years. He is a past president and director of both the Nebraska SPF Swine Accrediting Agency and Nebraska Pork Producers Association, currently serving as chairman of the legislature committee for the latter.

Sorenson was a leader in organizing the National Pork Producers Council and the Nickels for Profit checkoff program. He has received Nebraska's Outstanding Young Farmer, Pork All-American, and SPF Swine Producers Awards.

Allen welders place

SEVERAL STUDENTS FROM THE vocational agriculture class at Allen High School took part in the District 3 Vocational Agriculture Contest held last Wednesday in Norfolk. Allen was among 17 area schools participating in the event at Northeast Technical Community College. Of the 23 teams participating in the welding portion of the contest, Allen's Jay Jones (back row, at left) and Chad Hingst (not pictured) took first place, qualifying them for the state contest to be held April 15 in Lincoln. Jones also received first place in arc welding, and Hingst placed second in oxy-acetylene welding. Allen's Shawn Mahler (front row, at right) received a blue ribbon, and Mike Rhodman (back row, at right) received a red ribbon. In the ag mechanics contest, Allen's team won fourth place and is among the top four teams to advance to state competition. Members of the team are Stuart Lubberstedt (back row, second from left) and Mike Gensler (front row, at left), who each won a red ribbon, Brad Stewart (front center), who received a blue ribbon, and Robby Ridgeway (back row, second from right), who received a white ribbon. Vocational agriculture instructor at Allen High School is Tom Wilmes.

Editor's note: The Farmer's wife column is a new feature to the Wayne Herald's agriculture pages. Pat (Mrs. Melvin) Meierhenry, author of the new column, resides with her family on a farm between Winside and Hoskins. This column is designed for readers' enjoyment and will be a regular feature.

When the Big Farmer and I knew we were in love, there was a great deal of hesitancy on his part about taking the Big Step — marriage. After all, he was almost 30 years old and had successfully evading it for a long time. Once, he and his fraternity brothers counted up how many girls they had dated (doesn't that sound like something fraternity guys would do?) and he had the longest list — 100! After that they called him Century Man!

I believe my predecessors simply got tired of waiting on him. He was always late for dates. And because he farmed on weekends, his girl friends often found themselves sitting in the dorm on Saturday nights. I went stag to my junior senior prom because he was home, planting corn.

Anyway, he worried a lot about a gal wanting to live on a farm. I had grown up on a farm, and my stock phrase to my parents were those famous last words, "I'll never going to marry a farmer!" When I felt, I felt hard, and I told my Big Farmer, "Honey, I would live in Timbuctoo if it was with you." Well, let me tell you, some days would be more interesting in Timbuctoo! and not as isolated.

Our farm is on the most inaccessible road in Northeast Nebraska. When it snows, we are the first ones blocked in. When it rains, we are also stranded. One time, a dear friend braved mud for four miles and got as far as the neighbor 3/4 mile to the west, and called to say she couldn't make it any farther. She lives at Cozad, and we don't get to see each other very often. I cried.

When a neighbor boy graduated, his reception was postponed three times because of muddy roads. His mother cried. When our oldest graduated, her dad spent the afternoon directing traffic and pulling people out of mud. Her French horn teacher walked in it for a mile. Her band director almost drowned in a puddle on the yard. Her uncle got stuck on a country road before he got to the ceremony. None of us had time to cry.

We've just had a wet, icy, snowy year. Rumor says a woman hanged herself from a tree in the front yard of this place — I KNOW it was on the 10th rainy day in a row.

In our marriage vows, we stipulated there would be no milk cows and chickens. Strictly a corn, hay and beef cow operation. At that time, that meant a quarter of land, a few calves in the feed lot, and green chopping with a corn knife. Eventually, we rented another quarter and acquired a hired man.

There was a nice barn on that place. In fact, the barn was nicer than the house, which sometimes happens. The hired man suggested that we buy a few cows and he would milk them. In those days, the Norfolk State Hospital kept a dairy operation. The patient worked in it, and it supplied milk, cream and butter for the cafeteria. They had prize dairy cattle.

So we acquired a prize yearling bull calf to service the Holstein cows. He was even papered! His name was Pansel Parader VI. He was turned into the pasture. Several of the big Holstein cows "came around" at once. When the arrived home to be milked, the yearling bull was not around. A search found him, cowering in some tall weeds. His name quickly became shortened to Pansy!

Eventually that hired man found some land of his own, the dairy herd dispersed, and he built a grade A barn. But the family lived in a small trailer, so the barn was still nicer than the house. And, also eventually, some do gooders convinced the "powers that be" that patients were misused in that barn at the State Hospital and the operation was closed down.

A lot of people feel that work is therapeutic. I tend to agree. A lot of time is now spent sitting in the lounge there, watching the tube. Or going to RT, OT, or PT — all good departments. But there is no substitute for muscle — using, satisfying work. Guess that's why most farmers are fairly stable. They can work off their frustrations, worry and tension.

Ammonia treatment may be dangerous process

Even though it has the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) approval for use under restricted conditions, a process that uses a trickle of ammonia gas to keep corn from spoiling while it dries in natural air bins is "still experimental and could very well be dangerous."

That's the word from two University of Nebraska extension specialists about the Trickle Ammonia Process (TAP).

"There's interest in treating grain in natural air bins with the ammonia gas to extend the drying time," said Richard Pierce, NU extension agricultural engineer. "It's being used to control mold growth until the farmer can get the grain dried."

HOWEVER, THE EPA approval limits the process to corn that will be used only for animal feed, for example corn that is fed on the farms where it is produced, Pierce said.

Moreover, the EPA approval allows a maximum of five pounds of ammonia in 1,000 pounds of corn.

The concept of this on-farm system, according to Pierce, is that high moisture grain can be dried with unheated air over a period of one to two months if there is intermittent application of anhydrous ammonia gas at low levels to suppress microbial deterioration.

The process, Pierce said, "is still experimental and not widely practiced." He would not recommend using it except as a last resort.

IN ADDITION to using the process for drying grain, there has also been interest by farmers to use TAP for other purposes.

"There's probably more interest in treating dry grain for insect control," Pierce said. Bob Rosell, NU extension entomologist, agreed.

"We've gotten several calls concerning this," Roselle said. According to him, there are four reasons why this process should not be used.

First, there are no data to indicate how efficient it would be, Roselle said. "The major factor is that it's an unknown. It may not help at all."

Secondly, unlike the restricted EPA approval for use of ammonia gas in drying grain, "there is no EPA approval for use for insect control," he noted.

DANGER WAS another factor cited by Roselle. "It could be dangerous in a closed-in area or any time the gas escapes."

And finally, the process "can discolor the grain," Roselle said, citing research done by the U.S. Grain Marketing Lab in Manhattan, Kan.

Roselle indicated, too, the same reasons would apply for use as a rodent control.

Seed longevity in the soil may result in weed problem

Even if a farmer has achieved three to five years of perfect weed control on a given field, he still must expect weed problems because of seed longevity in the soil.

This finding was the result of a six-year study conducted by researchers at the University of Nebraska.

"Research was conducted to see whether a farmer who had achieved excellent weed control for several years could reduce his weed control program without adversely affecting crop yields," Kevin Watteyne, NU research technologist in agronomy, said.

OTHERS PARTICIPATING in the research were Orvin Burnside, NU professor of agronomy; Gail Wicks, NU extension weed specialist, North Platte Station; Robert Wilson, NU extension weed specialist, Panhandle Station, Scottsbluff; Russell Moomaw, NU extension crops and weed specialist, Northeast Station, Concord; and Fred Roth, NU extension weeds specialist, South Central Station, Clay Center.

During the experiment's first three years, all weed seed production was prevented on all plots, Watteyne said. "The fourth year we applied standard weed control treatments to three replications while keeping the other replications weed-free the fourth and fifth year." According to Watteyne, no hand-weeding was done.

In the final year of the research, standard weed control treatments to all six replications were applied, Watteyne said.

"There were 22 percent fewer broadleaf than grass weed seeds in the soil and an 80 percent decrease in weed seeds from east to west across Nebraska," he said.

OTHER FINDINGS suggested weed seed populations were 8 percent lower on plowed versus non-plowed plots. "When further weed seed production was prevented, weed seed content in soil decreased by 53 percent in three years," Watteyne said.

After three years of preventing seed production with normal weed control methods in corn, Watteyne said, weed seed populations were replenished within three years without total control. "But," he added, "with better weed control methods, weed seed populations in the soil can be maintained at the lower level achieved after three years of preventing weed seed productions."

Top Silopress dealer

SILOPRESS PRESIDENT Jerry Fish presents the company's Top Dealer Award of the Year for 1982 to Merle and Ron Ring of Rural Wayne during the week-long annual National Silopress Convention in Sioux City, Iowa. The award was presented to the father-son team, which has handled Silopress since 1981, during the company banquet at the Hilton Inn on Saturday, Feb. 26. With Merle is his wife Donna. And with Ron is his wife Ruth. Ron also received special recognition for his help with the national convention. The Rings worked with Ted Sass of Sioux City, who is Silopress regional manager for the western United States. The company, which produces sealed storage equipment, has been rated as the fastest growing farm related corporation in America by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Test for atrazine if planting alfalfa

Farmers considering planting expensive alfalfa or clover seed on PIK and RAP acres should be aware of whether atrazine was used on the intended seed aside used in 1982. A University of Nebraska extension agronomist has warned.

John D. Furrer said damaging amounts of residual atrazine for legumes could still be in the soil this crop season. "This would be particularly true if atrazine was used at more than 1 pound per acre on corn and sorghum in 1982," the weed specialist said. Even lower rates could carry over on high pH soils, he said.

Before planting legume seed on soil that may have atrazine in it, test your soil, Furrer emphasized. A simple test using oat or bean plants can be done at home. "These plants are sensitive to atrazine and can tell you by their appearance if there is atrazine residue in the soil," Furrer explained.

Place the oat seeds about one inch apart and bean seeds about two inches apart. Cover with 1/4 to 1/2 inch of soil. Water and cover with plastic. Keep in a warm place. After the seeds germinate, remove the plastic and set in direct sunlight. This means setting the pots out of doors on warm days. Symptoms may not develop indoors.

"ATRAZINE SYMPTOMS should become apparent in 8 to 20 days," Furrer said. Oat leaves will turn brown at the tips. Bean leaves will turn brown around the outer edges. The plants in the garden soil should appear normal.

Because Atrazine affects older leaves, new leaves may appear normal. "It takes time for symptoms to develop. If oats or beans show atrazine symptoms, forget about planting alfalfa or clover," he advised.

A NebGuide on testing for atrazine is available at Cooperative Extension Service offices around Nebraska. It is complete with colored photos showing atrazine symptoms. Furrer concluded.

HE OUTLINED the test:
First, take a representative soil sample from the field. Collect soil from several places. Take the soil samples from the depths the field may have been worked in 1982 — this could be five or six inches deep.

You'll need at least 5 pounds of soil. Put the soil in two or three large pots. For a check on whether or not there are atrazine residues in your field, also get a soil sample from the garden or fence row where you know atrazine hasn't been used. Use potting soil rather than garden soil. Mark each set of pots.

Plant beans or oats carefully in the pots. Don't over-plant. Too many plants per pot will give you wrong information — they may not show symptoms even if atrazine is present.

Weed control methods are studied

In three separate studies, University of Nebraska researchers looked at various weed control methods in order to maximize soybean yields. Their findings were reported at the recent Weed Science Society of America's annual meeting in St. Louis.

In one experiment, research focused on finding selective weed control methods for an oat-soybean rotation in the Great Plains, according to Orvin Burnside, NU professor of agronomy.

"The research has an objective the moving of dryland soybean production further west in the Great Plains," Burnside said. "Weed control must be effective during the entire crop rotation, and several herbicide treatments provide ample length and spectrum of weed control after oat harvest."

DURING THE soybean year, glyphosate controlled established weeds prior to soybean planting, Burnside said. "Several residual herbicide treatments gave selective weed control in soybeans without cultivation," he added.

"The low-till farmer has several herbicide treatments available that will selectively and adequately control weeds without tillage in an oat-soybean rotation," Burnside said. "This low-tillage method of growing crops in the Great Plains should improve soybean yields and yield stability while conserving soil, water, energy and labor."

In a second study, research findings indicated that soybean cultivars differed in competitive abilities and allelopathic properties to weeds. (Allelopathic properties refer to the influence of the soybean plant on weeds due to secretion of toxic substances.)

Germination rates, stand counts, quickness of canopy closure, soybean yields under weedy and weed-free conditions and weed yields were used to rank the cultivars for competitive ability, said Steven Rose, NU graduate in weed science and senior author of the paper presented to the WSSA meeting in St. Louis, Mo.

THE INFLUENCE of toxic substances in soybeans on velvetleaf and proso millet was determined in both green house and field experiments, according to Rose.

"Germination of weed seeds was reduced or retarded when placed in extracts of soybean plant parts," Rose said. "Growth of both weed species was inhibited when watered with soybean root exudates."

Interplanting of weed seed with soybean seed in field experiments reduced germination and dry weights of both weed species, he said.

In addition, Rose said, some of the 20 soybean cultivars tested, which exhibited good allelopathy in the green house, did compete well with weeds in the field.

In the third experiment conducted at Lincoln, the optimum period of weed control needed to achieve maximum soybean yields was studied.

IT WAS FOUND that weed control for soybean producers in eastern Nebraska is most critical from soybean emergence through three weeks after soybean emergence, according to Paul Horn, graduate student in weed science who worked with Burnside on this project.

"To determine the optimum period for weed control, weeds were moved at weekly intervals after soybean emergence for a period of nine weeks," Horn said. Soybean yield versus weeks before removal "resulted in a linear relationship with a negative slope," he added.

Computer simulates diffusion

Two University of Nebraska scientists and an Oklahoma state University assistant professor of agricultural engineering who received his Ph. D. from NU have developed a computer program to simulate diffusion of the herbicide trifluralin in the soil.

John Solle of Stillwater, Okla., who presented the results of the research to the annual meeting of the Weed Science Society of America recently in St. Louis, Mo., worked with Howard Williams, NU agricultural engineer and Orvin Burnside, NE agronomist, in designing the computer program.

According to Solle, diffusion from herbicide placement patterns produced by a subsurface jet injector was simulated. The jet injector was designed by the three when Solle was a graduate assistant at NU.

THE JET INJECTOR incorporated herbicides by jetting them through nozzles in a manifold attached to the trailing edge of a sweep into soil passing over the blade. The system was designed to control new weed germination and growth.

"Simulations were conducted to explain weed control by trifluralin obtained in greenhouse and field experiments with the jet injector and to predict the effect of changes in placement pattern and soil environmental conditions on weed control by trifluralin," Solle said.

The simulation predicted that injecting the herbicide up through the soil in parallel bands 2 centimeters apart, extending 3 to 7 centimeters below the soil surface, would produce good weed control, according to Solle.

Decreasing the band height, increasing the band width and compacting the soil reduced weed control below acceptable levels, Solle said. Field and greenhouse results supported these conclusions, he added.

Irrigation increases soybeans

Soybeans are being used more and more as an irrigated crop. Because they use slightly less water than corn and because the critical reproductive stage for soybeans takes place over a longer period of time than corn, soybeans may allow for more flexible irrigation management.

This was one point stressed in a slide presentation to farmers and ranchers attending the two-day Ag Action '83 program held in Grand Island recently by DeLynn Hay, University of Nebraska extension water resource specialist.

Hay updated those attending the Ag Action '83 program on two recent studies conducted by NU researchers on soybean irrigation.

According to Solle, diffusion from herbicide placement patterns produced by a subsurface jet injector was simulated. The jet injector was designed by the three when Solle was a graduate assistant at NU.

SECOND GRADE STUDENTS at Allen Consolidated School witnessed their first volcanic eruption last Thursday afternoon. The miniature eruption, which took place on a cement slab in back of the school, was produced by teacher Barb Heckathorn. Mrs. Heckathorn said she created the lava flow by mixing baking soda, water, dishwashing soap, vinegar, and a few drops of red food coloring.

Northwestern Bell began charging for directory assistance service in Nebraska on Monday (March 7). The charges will apply on calls made to Nebraska Directory Assistance by Northwestern Bell customers in the state.

Under the plan, residence customers will be able to make eight free calls per line to directory assistance each month and request two numbers on each call. Each customer-dialed call over the eight-call monthly allowance will cost 20 cents.

Business customers with Centrex systems will be allowed eight free calls each month for every five stations, white businesses with PBX systems are allowed eight calls per trunk at no charge. All calls to directory assistance above the monthly allowance for each business system will carry the 20 cent charge.

THE PLAN applies to all requests for numbers in Northwestern Bell's Nebraska calling area. There will be no charge for directory assistance calls made to other states. Also excluded will be calls placed from hospitals, hotels, motels, coin telephones and Nebraska communities served by other telephone companies.

Northwestern Bell customers who have a physical disability that prevents them from using a telephone directory will be given an exemption from directory assistance charges, if they complete and return an exemption form. Exemption information and forms can be obtained from the Northwestern Bell business office.

Directory assistance charging was approved by the Nebraska Public Service Commission in January as part of an $8 million increase in Nebraska rates granted to Northwestern Bell.

Other new charges apply to long distance calls within Nebraska and calls using local operator assistance, including requests for busy line verification and busy line interruption.

COOKIES SOLD

Brownie Troops 63 and 68 and the Junior Girl Scout Troop are in the process of delivering boxes of cookies the girls sold recently. The three troops sold 2,016 boxes of cookies and earned $403.20. The boxes of cookies cost $1.75. Of the amount 75¢ pays for the cookies, 20¢ remains in the troops, 6¢ pays the sales tax and the remaining 74¢ is used for camp passports and incentives for the girls, plus for Girl Scout camp maintenance and improvements.

Shanon Bach, Billy Birkley, Sara Salmon, Lynn Schulz and Heather Gustafson, members of the Brownies, each sold over 100 boxes of cookies and will receive a special patch. For every 50 boxes sold the brownies earn a $5 passport toward Brownie Adventure Day. There is still a limited number of boxes of cookies available and anyone who was not contacted and wants to purchase cookies should call Mrs. Dennis Wilbur at 287-2372.

TICKETS ON SALE

The Wakefield High School W Club is sponsoring a benefit basketball game to raise funds for a new basketball score board for the school. Approximately $1,500 is needed and in order to raise the funds the Nebraska Cornhusker football seniors have been invited to Wakefield on Saturday, March 19.

Advance tickets for the game are now on sale from all W Club members and at some local businesses. Price of the tickets will be higher at the door that evening. W Club members are boys and girls who have lettered in any Wakefield High School sports.

The Big Red Stars will play basketball with some former Trojan basketball stars. According to Lyle Trullinger, W Club sponsor, letters were sent inviting former Trojans and urged those who haven't responded, but would like to be part of the fund raiser, to get in touch with him soon.

The Cornhuskers have autographed a football that will go to some lucky fan in attendance at the game. Also the players will have an autograph session and there will be Big Red souvenirs on sale. Proceeds from the football will go to the W Club, but monies from the sale of the souvenirs will go to the university. For added fun and spirit at the game, the W Club would like to organize two cheerleading squads for the game. Former Trojan cheerleaders and pep club members who would like to participate are asked to call the school office at 287-2012.

WHO WAS THE POET who wrote — "True friends are like diamonds precious and rare." We were blessed with the very finest of friends. Special thanks for all the kindnesses shown us, the beautiful cards, all the telephone calls, etc., at the time of brother George's illness and passing away, the long hospitalizations and illnesses of both my Mom and Dad, the birthday and anniversary cards we've received and the just plain "caring." Each one will be a memory to treasure. Ed and Dorothy Grone. m10
