THE WAYNE HERALD

Money not available

County is short tuition funds

The Wayne-Carroll Board of Education was thrown a curve Tuesday night when it learned that funds are not available from Wayne County for full distribution of non-resident high school tuition.

In 1982, the tuition money was only partially paid to Class III school districts in the area because of litigation initiated last summer by taxpayers from Class I districts in Wayne County.

In November, District Judge Merrill C. Warren released all of the funds, pending a decision on the lawsuit which protests the amount of non-resident tuition paid by Class I district residents.

The shortage of funds in the current case is not related however to the lawsuit in 1981-82.

SUPERINTENDENT Francis Haun said that although he had anticipated full payment of the remainder of non-resident tuition funds due the district, he learned this week that Wayne County is short $75,000 and plans to prorrate the non-resident tuition monies to schools in the area.

Haun told The Wayne Herald that as of Wednesday morning the Wayne-Carroll district had not received any portion of funds due from the last quarter, which total $72,702.

Haun said the county superintendent's secretary informed him that the non-resident tuition funds will be prorated out later this week on the basis of monies available.

High schools slated to receive the funds include Pierce, Winslow, Wisner, Wakarusa, Laurel, Randolph and Wayne.

"WE DON'T KNOW who is responsible for the problem," said Haun, adding the school board is very reluctant to go back to taxpayers in the district and ask for monies for relief on the funds due for non-resident tuition.

"We'll exhaust every other avenue available to collect this money," said Haun. Wayne County Attorney Bob Ens told The Wayne Herald Wednesday morning that he plans to visit with county officials to determine the cause of the problem.

IN REVIEWING the 1983-84 school budget

Tuesday night, Haun said this year's proposed $2,320,742 budget is $18,728 below the 7 percent lid imposed upon school districts. He added that a request for local taxes is reduced $39,058 from the 1982-83 request of $1,311,090.

The total proposed budget increase, excluding life programs, block grants, lunch, federal, state and pre-school, is $113,055.

Haun said the reduction in local property taxes is due in part to an increase in State Aid of $43,599.

HAUN INFORMED board members that funds will be available from the 1982-83 budget to pay all current billings and to transfer monies into the district's unemployment, legal and depreciation accounts.

Haun said those accounts were not funded last year because of the uncertainty of property tax income.

A clerical error in the Wayne County assessor's office resulted in lost revenues to the Wayne Public School system of about

United Way sets its 1983 goal

The 1983 goal for the Wayne Community Chest United Way fund drive has been set at $17,600.

The local United Way staff has reported that eight agencies have been approved for allocation of funds.

They are, the Wayne Recreation Fund, Mid America Boy Scout Council, Prairie Hills Girl Scout Council, Salvation Army, Arthritis Foundation, Florence Crittenton Home, American Red Cross and Wayne Senior Citizens Center.

Board members for 1983 are President Vicki Pick, Vice President Gerald Schafer, Cap Peterson, Marilyn Pierson, Loren Ellis, Virginia Otte, Jan Merriman, Gerald Conway and Jim Paige.

Campaign chairman for the United Way is Larry Magnuson. Linda Carr is assistant campaign chairman and Marilyn Carhart is secretary treasurer.

Nissen named commissioner

Robert L. Nissen, 42, of rural Wayne has been appointed Wayne County commissioner for District 2 to replace Ken Eddie who resigned several weeks ago.

Nissen was officially selected commissioner Monday by a committee composed of the Wayne County treasurer, clerk and attorney. Nissen, a licensed highway superintendent, will be sworn in next Tuesday morning.

He and his wife Marlene have three children.

Residential electrical rates to drop

Wayne residents will be paying lower electrical rates under a new rate structure which will go into effect this fall.

The Wayne City Council Tuesday night approved an electrical rate structure which will, according to City Administrator Phil Kloster, clean up some problems the city has had with its present system.

Willis Jongerius, an electrical engineer for DeWitt Grant Recker and Associates, explained the proposed rate restructuring and presented the council with facts and figures based on a study that was done.

JONGERIUS TOLD the council all residential bills will be less. Business rates will be slightly higher, resulting in city revenue that will remain stable.

Using members of the City Council as examples, the new rates will mean decreases ranging from $1.60 to $11.40 in August's electric bills. To give council members an idea of the savings per residential customer, figures showed that Kloster should save an

Local show clucks on

By Randy Hascall

There were chicken hats and chicken masks. Chicken art and chicken magic. Chicken paintings and rubber chickens. Chicken shirts and chicken shirts.

Relatively sane people sang chicken songs, made chicken sounds, dressed like chickens, wrote chicken poems, putted hard-boiled eggs, imitated hens laying eggs and tried to catch eggs that had not been boiled.

The scene was the third annual Chicken Show in the conservative farming community of Wayne.

POLICE REPORTED no "fowl play" and no "puttzer prizes" were awarded for the dozens of chicken poems entered in a local contest. But a crowd estimated at more than 2,000 took part in the annual event.

Temperatures hot enough to roast chicken didn't discourage the thousands of poultry lovers from turning out for the Chicken Show parade or from standing in line to eat egg omelets at the fire hall.

Country music lovers were entertained by a chicken pickin' contest in Bressler Park that featured various bands, including a Lincoln-based band named Poultrygeist, which performed some of its favorite chicken songs.

Highlight of the celebrity auction was the sale of a rubber chicken autographed by Johnny Carson, and seen on the Tonight Show. It drew a bid of $70 from Bob Maines of Norfolk in a celebrity auction.

CALIFORNIAN DAVID Quick, who calls himself a chicken artist, said he believes that may be a record for highest price ever paid anywhere for a rubber chicken.

Quick, making a return trip to Wayne from Los Angeles, brought along his collection of rubber chicken photographs.

Quick wasn't the only person making an appearance from thousands of miles away. Eileen Cavanaugh, an account representative for E. F. Hutton of Westport, Conn., also flew to Wayne for the Chicken Show.

Cavanaugh, 33, read about the Chicken Show in the Wall Street Journal and decided to check it out. "I was told I am very predictable so I had my secretary book a flight out here," she said.

Eileen actually had a blind date for the show. She said she called the chamber office and had manager Anne Svoboda arrange for a host. Anne set her up with Lyle George, owner of the Computer Farm.

"TODAY IS my birthday and I think this is a great way to spend it," Eileen said. "I told my boss, David Duvernay, where I would be and gave him a phone number in case he needs to reach me."

The Connecticut woman said she had planned on running in the fun-run Saturday morning but forgot her running shoes. "People are so nice and friendly here. I'm glad I came. It's interesting and maybe next year I'll come with a contingency from Connecticut."

Some of the most popular events included a cluck-off, a chicken hot show, egg laying imitations, a hard-boiled egg contest, a rooster legs contest and an egg toss.

For the first time in its three-year history, a carnival was added to the Chicken Show. Jane O'Leary, Wayne's publicity director for the event, said approximately 1,800 meals were served at the omelet feed. She said she thought the Chicken Show went over well. "I think it was very successful. We had a great turnout."

'Chicken Man' returns

In 1975 a friend gave Dave Quick a rubber chicken for a present. Now Quick travels all around the world snapping photographs of rubber chickens in famous landmarks.

The California chicken artist made his second visit to Wayne Saturday for the third annual Wayne Chicken Show. He could first be seen Saturday morning, stringing rubber chickens up on Wayne's downtown light signals. Quick's art was featured at the initial chicken show two years ago and again this year.

BETTER KNOWN around these parts as the California Chicken Man, Quick's pictures are easily recognizable. Some of his more famous photos are of the Statue of Liberty, Leaning Tower of Pisa, Golden Gate Bridge, Yellowstone Park, Mt. Rushmore and Carlsbad Caverns. All of the photos feature a rubber chicken at a famous landmark.

Quick, who is 33 years old and single, said he plans vacations around taking rubber chicken pictures. He works in marketing and sells his photos. He says he also has serious art which is on display in L.A. and may go on display in London.

Dave first heard of Wayne's Chicken Show on a Los Angeles radio station two years ago. That year he drove to Wayne from L.A. This time, Quick flew into Omaha. He says he would have attended last year's show but was unemployed at the time.

ONE OF Quick's claims to fame is the appearance of his "nuclear chicken" on the Steve Allen television show. He is working with a solar engineer to develop a solar chicken that he would like to have NASA send up in a space shuttle.

Quick said he would give Wayne a little extra publicity on his return to California. He does a report for an L.A. radio station and planned to report on the show. "When people in California hear a report on Wayne's Chicken Show, they say 'I've heard of that.' A lot of them have heard Wayne mentioned in the news and have heard of the Chicken Show," he said.

Quick, whose office desk has a trap door which opens to drop out a rubber chicken, says he plans to make a return visit to Wayne next summer.

Options open on chaplain issue

By Melvin Paul
Statehouse Correspondent
The Nebraska Press Association

From 1966 until 1980, the Rev. Robert Palmer, a Presbyterian minister, began each workday of the Nebraska Legislature with the recitation of a prayer from the podium at the front of the chamber.

As often as not, the prayer stressed clever folk wisdom rather than a particular brand of theology. Palmer would ask God that lawmakers "be for something lest they fail for anything." He once prayed that those in the chamber "bridle their tongues lest they stampeed us into utterances of which later we shall be ashamed."

On a good day, Palmer would attract about half of the 49 members of the Legislature to hear his prayers.

FOR YEARS, the daily prayer received little notice. Every two years before 1979, Palmer was routinely elected to the $320-a-month post as legislative chaplain. In 1979, the Rev. Alvin Peterson, a Lutheran minister, decided to run against Palmer. Peterson lined up early support for the post, but the effort fizzled.

Lawmakers voted 34-1 to elect Palmer. Sen. Ernest Chambers of Omaha, who cast the lone vote against Palmer, later in 1979 filed suit in federal district court to enjoin the Legislature from hiring a chaplain.

On Christmas Eve 1980, federal district court Judge Warren Urbom ruled that the Legislature could have a chaplain, but that the clergyman couldn't be paid with state funds.

Following that decision, the Legislature elected Palmer to the newly created post of volunteer coordinator of chaplains. His job was to arrange for other members of the clergy to deliver the morning prayer.

Meanwhile, the state appealed Urbom's decision to the U.S. Supreme Court, and on July 5, the high court affirmed not only the right of the Legislature to have a chaplain, but to pay him with public funds.

"I DO FEEL a part of what makes this nation great is to acknowledge publicly our dependence on God," a jubilant Palmer said following the decision. "I just don't see how, if a majority of senators approach their work each day from a meditation of prayer standpoint—I don't see how that tears down in any way the wall between church and state."

Chambers acknowledged disappointment in the decision.

"I'm definitely dissatisfied with the outcome but not really surprised. It does not crush me or dishearten me. I will still argue that it ought not to be done. I still think it's bad public policy to hire a preacher."

Lincoln attorney Herb Friedman, who represented Chambers and the Nebraska Civil Liberties Union in the case, also expressed disappointment.

"I think basically it's a matter of sensitivity," Friedman said. "They (the six justices who supported the decision) were insensitive to the minority people."

Attorney General Paul Douglas, whose staff argued the case for the state, expressed a degree of resentment that the lower court had limited the power of the Legislature on the chaplaincy issue. "We always—without trying to sound smug—had a lot of confidence in this lawsuit," Douglas said.

NOW THAT CHAMBERS has raised the issue, the direction of the Nebraska Legislature from here is uncertain. The executive board, the administrative arm of the Legislature, will make a recommendation for action to lawmakers when they return to session in January.

Sen. Vard Johnson of Omaha, chairman of the executive board said he doesn't expect automatic reinstatement of the old system by which a single chaplain was hired to deliver the daily prayer.

The voluntary system under which a variety of clergymen, including Palmer, have prayed has worked well, Johnson said.

Friedman, Chambers' attorney, suggested that if the Legislature decides again to hire a single chaplain, it may have applications from a variety of non-Christians.

"There's more than one way to skin a cat," Friedman said.

Not unnoticed

At a time when bad news is sometimes sensationalized by the media, the good things in life often go unnoticed.

Sometimes the selfless efforts of individuals go unrecognized. Northeast Nebraska has some of those generous individuals. One such person is Paul Otte of Wayne.

While many people waste time watching television or loafing, Paul can usually be found helping others. One of his most time consuming projects has been his dedication to Hank Overin Field (the city ball park).

Paul has volunteered countless hours of his free time to make the ball park a little nicer. He often keeps score during ball games and makes regular trips to the park to make sure things are in proper working order.

Much of the construction work around the park was done by Otte or with his help. And nobody works cheaper than Paul. He doesn't usually even expect a "thank you" in return.

The morning of Independence Day, Paul mowed around the ball park to make it a nicer looking place for anyone who stopped by that night to watch the Jaycees' fireworks.

Dedicated and generous people like Otte don't come along every day. Although this editorial will insult his modesty, Paul does deserve credit for his effort.

Poison prevention

Summertime may have been the season of easy living' to Gershwin's Porgy and Bess, but today it means increased risk of poisoning.

Dangerous substances to be on the lookout for during the summer season include plants, both indoor and outdoor; pool chemicals; sunscreens and suntanning products; insect repellents and insecticides.

Many people are aware that poison ivy and poison sumac can cause a painful rash. Other plants, too, hold danger. The green parts of tomatoes, potatoes, lily of the valley and their related species contain alkaloids which can cause cardiac disturbances if eaten.

The leaves of rhubarb, philodendron, dieffenbachia and other plants contain oxalic acid crystals, which can cause severe mouth irritation and potential kidney problems. Wild mushrooms may be tasty, but many of them have poisonous lookalikes. An expert can make a positive identification of the edible species.

To prevent children from being accidentally poisoned by plants, teach them never to eat any plant or fruit they find unless they know for sure what it is. Young children should be accompanied by adults on walks or hikes.

Indoor plants should be labeled with the species and pointed out to children as dangerous.

Swimming pool chemicals, including sanitizers, algacide and test kits, can be dangerous if handled improperly. Many contain chlorine or hypochlorite and are much more dangerous than household bleach, Kalin said. These chemicals can injure the body's mucous membranes or cause burns and spasms if ingested.

Insecticides—those chemicals which kill bugs—are very toxic. Insecticides have caused many deaths and account for almost 10 percent of deaths due to poisoning. Half of the poison deaths among children are caused by insecticides.

These chemicals can be found in flea collars, fly paper, bug bombs as well as home and commercial bug sprays. Injury can be caused by ingestion, skin contact or inhalation of the chemical. Ingestion causes gastrointestinal symptoms, skin exposure results in local sweating and involuntary muscle contractions, and inhalation causes respiratory tract symptoms.

A conservation solution

Farming operations need trees

By Cheryl Stubbendieck
Nebraska Farm Bureau

During the past decade, farmers have gone from using advertising messages directed to them on TV and radio and in the newspapers as mere manufacturers recognize farming as a sophisticated, capital intensive business. But very soon now, Nebraska farmers are going to see messages in the media promoting an old idea, not a new product.

Public service announcements produced by the National Arbor Day Foundation with a $22,500 grant from the Nebraska Energy Office are starting in early summer, and their message is an old one: plant trees.

It's not unusual in Nebraska, the home of Arbor Day, to find yourself encouraged to plant trees. We even come close to being "The Tree Planter State" on our license plates. But this message from the National Arbor Day Foundation has a different focus: plant trees on your farm.

MANY OF US can recall the huge shelterbelts and windbreaks that were prominent features of much of our farmland even 20 years ago. But more recently we can remember the trees being plowed up for the expansion of farmland onto what sometimes turned out to be marginal land. Or we recall the trees coming out to make way for center pivot irrigation.

The message from the Arbor Day Foundation is that trees are still a conservation solution. "Trees can help reduce wind and water erosion, increase crop yields, enhance water supplies, provide wildlife habitat, reduce energy bills and provide an alternate source of income and fuel through wood products," according to John Rosenow, the foundation's executive director.

The goal of the foundation's educational project is to show how trees can be incorporated into modern farming operations to help save soil while increasing farm profits and reducing energy costs. In addition to the promotional effort directed to farmers, the foundation will carry out demonstration shelterbelt plantings and woodland improvement practices at the J. Sterling Morton Orchard and Tree Farm in Nebraska City.

Most of the shelterbelts planned during the 1930s were 10 or more rows wide, because foresters at that time thought it would be necessary to create forest-like conditions for trees to survive on the Great Plains. Now modern shelterbelt design allows farmers to efficiently incorporate trees into large-scale farming operations while a minimum of land is taken out of production.

BY FOLLOWING the ground to save moisture before planting, and by carefully selecting species, trees can be established in narrow shelterbelts in all but the driest areas, according to Rosenow. Today's field shelterbelts are mostly one or two rows.

For example, where summer protection of crops from the wind is a priority, low-growing shrubs or cedars do the job, while a row of taller-growing pines or deciduous trees helps in winter snow distribution. With this protection from the wind, there is less evaporation and transpiration from the crop, and thus lower stress.

Other, modern practices along these same lines will be explained in the Arbor Day Foundation's promotional campaign. Farmers without extensive plantings on their land will find many good ideas, while those who have held on to their trees will find confirmation for their own beliefs about the value of trees.

To the editor:

The Nebraska Amateur Golf Association takes this opportunity to express its sincere appreciation for the hospitality extended by Wayne during the Nebraska State Junior Golf Championship.

First, our thanks to Rudy Froeschle, the Wayne Country Club, and its members for allowing the 63 young men from across the State of Nebraska an opportunity to use the golf course and its facilities. You have indeed done your part for the continued success of the junior golf program in Nebraska.

Second, having extended swimming pool privileges showed a sincere interest by the city of Wayne in making sure these young men had a good time. The hot dogs and pop provided by the Blue Devil Booster Club met with great satisfaction.

Third, a special thanks to those families listed below who were kind enough to open their homes to provide housing and meals for the young men during the three days of the tournament: Darrell Moore, Bob Reeg, Chuck Surber, Gary Pick, Luella Marra, Bill Dickey, Bob Jordan, Kem Swartz, Dick Sorensen, Willard Willse, Gordon Nuernberger, Bud Froeschle, Bob Carhart, Budd Bornhoff, Dick Diltman, Dick Armstrong, Roy Corvill, Bob Lohrbach, Paul Otte and Jim Paige. Our hats go off to each of you.

The city of Wayne has indeed shown us why it is an "All American City" and, certainly can be very proud of its golf course and citizens.

To the editor:

Disappointed!

I am sure that many of the residents here at the nursing home would have enjoyed the parade on Chicken Days. It came just two blocks from the home. The Chamber of Commerce informed us that it would interfere with traffic on Highway 35.

The college parades go past here down along Main Street and also the Shriners with their beautiful white horses came past our home and turned the corner to come back on another street. No complaints about interfering with Highway 35 were told.

We may be a group of old biddies up here but we are still able to sing and cackle.

Wayne Midgets struggle and roll

sports slate

Wayne's Midget-baseball team continued its winning ways against Sunday afternoon, but not with the ease that was becoming commonplace this season. The Midgets downed Stanton 9-5 at Hank Overin Field in a game that the visitors score all of their points in the final inning.

Each team had 26 at-bats with Wayne tallying eight hits and Stanton six.

The game started slowly for the visitors as the first two men were fanned by Rick Nelson. The next two got on with a walk and a single before Nelson struck out the last man and leave them on base.

Wayne struck quickly in the inning as Kevin Maly took a base on balls and was driven home later by a Steve Overin homer.

Neither team accomplished much offensively in the second and third innings. Stanton went down in order twice and Wayne's Pete Warne and Dan Gross were left on after both singled.

In the bottom of the fourth,

Stanton's pitcher walked and advanced to third and the next two batters singled to load the bases. He was thrown out by Jeff Hausmann at home on a fielder's choice and the next two men struck out and grounded out respectively to end the inning.

Wayne put the score at 5-0 in the top of the fourth. Don Larsen and Hausmann got on with a walk and a single and both runners stole a base.

Pete Warne then added an RBI single to score Larsen. Jeff Sherer followed with a two-RBI single before Kevin Maly fled out to center to end the inning.

Stanton's center fielder, Beuson, singled in the fifth but was later picked off.

The inning ended as Wayne went down, one, two three.

Stanton once again got a man on in the sixth, only to see him picked off by catcher Dan Gross' throw to first.

The hosts scored four more runs in the sixth as Shannon Dorcey doubled and Jeff Sherer singled.

Hausmann got on via a Stanton error and Rick Nelson also got on with a base on balls and Wayne led 9-0 going into the seventh.

With one out in the seventh, Stanton rattled for five runs but fell short as the last man grounded out to the mound.

The Wakefield Midgets fell victim to the Wayne's "Ten-Run Kids" Tuesday night as they bowed to the hosts 15-5 after five innings at Hank Overin Field.

Steve Overin had another big day at the plate for Wayne with a home run, a double and three RBI's.

Wakefield scored a solo run in the bottom of the first inning as its shortstop, Soderberg, went home on a sacrifice after singling and stealing two bases.

Wayne countered with three runs in the first as Kevin Maly walked and stole second before Gross took a base on balls. Overin followed with his double to score two runs and later went home on a fielder's choice.

The visitors faltered three in the second off of three walks and a couple of Wayne errors. The score was 4-3 in favor of Wakefield going into the bottom half of the second.

Jeff Sherer got on via a walk to start things for Wayne again and was followed on by Maly with the help of a Wakefield miscue.

An RBI single by pitcher Don Larsen and another error helped Wayne take a 7-4 advantage.

Wakefield was shut out in the third inning and only managed to get one man on with a walk.

Shannon Dorcey got a charity trip to first for Wayne, and later advanced to second on a sacrifice before he was left stranded on base to end the inning.

Kubik, Wakefield's pitcher, blasted a nice triple to start the fourth. The next two batters struck out before Roberts got on and Kubik scored on a Wayne error.

A double by Chris Weisler, singles by second baseman Jeff Sherer and Kevin Maly, and a couple of walks allowed Wayne to pad its lead to 13-5 after four complete innings.

Wakefield went down in order to start the fifth and Wayne ended the game by virtue of the ten-run rule as Overin homered and Brent Pick and Rick Fleming singled to put the final tally at 15-5.

Juniors lose battle of Kubiks

Each team has a Mark Kubik as its ace, but it's dollars and donuts that Wakefield's Kubik had a better time Monday night as his team dumped the Wayne Juniors 12-2 at Hank Overin Field.

The Wayne Juniors matched Wakefield's five hits for the game but were continually outthrust on defense as Wakefield came up with spectacular fielding all night long.

The first inning ended scoreless as both teams went down in order.

The second stanza saw the visitors score two runs as Wayne Guy singled, went to second on a sacrifice, and advanced to third on a passed ball. Troy Greve added an RBI single, and another run scored on a sacrifice as Wakefield took a 2-0 lead.

Wayne countered with a solo run in the bottom of the inning as Dennis Lebosock singled and was later driven home by Jon Melehenry's RBI single.

Wakefield exploded for five runs in the top of the third inning as two runners walked and another got on via a Wayne miscue.

Wayne Guy and Mike Clay both slugged RBI singles as the visitors took a 7-1 lead.

Jeff Jorgensen doubled with one out for Wayne in the third and was followed on base as Todd Pfeiffer took a base on balls. Both runners advanced on a passed ball but were left high and dry as Randy Gamble grounded out, Todd Schwartz walked, and Lebosock fled out.

Wakefield continued to pour it on as it scored five runs in the fourth.

Steve Peterson walked and Jeff Coble singled before pitcher Brian Soderberg got on as Wayne was charged with an error.

The next man up walked to score another run and Wayne Guy sacrificed to send another man home.

Wayne added a solo run in the fourth as McCright doubled and went home on a sacrifice to center field by Todd Dorcey.

It proved to be too little, too late though, as Wakefield registered an impressive 12-2 victory.

Wayne's Junior Legion baseball team came from behind in the fourth inning Sunday and defeated their Stanton counterparts 9-6 in a game played at Hank Overin Field.

Stanton jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first as the first two batters walked and scored on a double by the pitcher, Hotobek.

Wayne went down in order in the first as Todd Pfeiffer grounded out to short and Jeff McCright and Todd Schwartz fled out.

Neither team managed to get anything going in the second inning.

The bottom of the third saw Stanton get a man on with a walk only to be left stranded.

Wayne finally got on the board as McCright got on via a fielder's choice with two outs and went home on an error by the shortstop.

The visitors countered with a single run in the next inning as the second man up took a base on balls and advanced to third on a couple of errors. He went home on a passed ball to put the score at 3-1 in Stanton's favor.

Tim Heier fled out to start things for Wayne in the bottom of the fourth, but was followed by Mark Kubik who smashed a double, and Jeff Jorgensen, who singled to drive in a run.

Dave Longe added a two-RBI double to give Wayne the lead, but the hosts were not done for the inning.

Shortstop Todd Heier got on via an error on Stanton's center fielder before McCright plugged a three-run homer to make the score 6-3.

The first man up for Stanton in the sixth singled and stole second, but was left on base as the next three men failed to get on.

Wayne bogged down in the inning but added three runs in the sixth as McCright and Todd Dorcey doubled, Dennis Lebosock singled, and Wayne went ahead to hold off a three-run rally in the last two innings and won 9-6.

Fun on the farm

BALING HAY in the summer heat is usually one of farming's more dreaded tasks. But, the heat didn't seem to bother this four-man crew of Shannon Dorcey, Casey Nichols, Mike Soulier and Gene Luff. Luff drove the tractor while the other three stacked bales on the hay rack. The group was baling for Glenn Nichols.

Farmers need to adjust combines before harvest

Because of the cool, wet weather, the 1983 Nebraska wheat crop has been slow to mature. But even though the wheat harvest will be a few days late, there's still time to get combines and equipment ready, said a University of Nebraska agricultural engineer.

Leonard Bashford said anyone can learn how to drive a combine, but it takes a little more for someone to operate it and make adjustments.

"We want someone who will operate that combine," Bashford said. "By that we mean always being aware of what's happening in that machine; what kind of job of threshing and cleaning is it doing?"

MANY MACHINES today have sophisticated operating equipment, Bashford said. But farmers should still be aware of what's going on with the equipment.

Even if custom operators are used to harvest wheat, farmers should still check on them. "The best advice we could offer him would be to take that combine and set it according to the owner's manual," Bashford said. This is good for the initial adjustment, but the combine can't be fine-tuned until it is in the field. Adjustments change as harvest conditions change, he said.

A big problem with combines is that farmers lose a lot of grain through the rear, Bashford said. "A 3 percent to 5 percent loss may be acceptable, but if we take a look at the 5 percent loss and do a little quick calculation on a 40-bushel-per-acre yield, a 5 percent loss is about 2 bushels per acre," Bashford said.

Bashford said "at $3.50 a bushel, that's about $7 an acre out the back of that machine and if someone has a thousand acres, that's $7,000."

Bashford said losses can exceed 10 percent if a farmer isn't careful. A 10 percent loss can mean a loss of $350,000.

BASHFORD SAID farmers can look at three areas and make adjustments: the cylinder in the concave assembly, the straw walker or separator unit and the cleaning shoe.

Losses caused by the cylinder in the concave assembly are termed threshing losses, Bashford said. If a farmer finds heads that either aren't threshed or partially threshed in the discharged straw, then he can assume the cylinder in the concave assembly needs adjusting, Bashford said.

If by holding a shovel under the separator unit, a farmer finds kernels that are cracked or finds a lot of "trash" and chaff, then the separator unit needs adjusting, Bashford said.

Duane Foote, NU extension agronomist, said a lot of foreign material and dockage can result in market discounts and can cause problems in maintaining quality during storage.

Bashford suggested that farmers construct a 4-foot-square screen and walk alongside the combine, placing the screen underneath it to collect discharged straw and chaff. But first, farmers need to disengage to straw spreader or chopper, he added.

FARMERS NEED to examine the straw for heads, Bashford said. But the main concern is the number of loose wheat kernels.

Calculated on a combine with a 28-foot platform or cutter width and a 4-foot discharger or separator unit, Bashford said on the average, about 20 kernels per square foot means a loss of 1 bushel per acre.

But using the screen dictates that the cutter width be compressed to 4 feet, which means farmer's won't want to use the 20 kernels per acre number in the formula, Bashford said.

To determine losses, farmers need to divide the cutter width (28 feet) by the separator width (4 feet) and multiply by the number of kernels per square foot (20), which equals 140 kernels per square foot for this particular combine, Bashford said.

Multiplying by the area on the screen (4 feet), the number of kernels (500) would equal 1 bushel-per-acre loss, Bashford said.

Farmers always will have a little loss, Bashford said. It's critical to hold losses under five percent and maybe at 3 percent.

Foote said besides proper combine adjustment, harvesting and handling equipment and storage bins need to be cleaned. Harvesting of the grain at a moisture content safe for storage and providing pest protection are also important for preventing contamination and maintaining high quality wheat.

"SPRAYING SHOULD be done now—well before harvest," Foote said. Both the inside and outside of bins need to be sprayed with a residual material to prevent insect infestation, he said. Grain protectants can be added as the grain is stored.

Foote said wheat should be harvested at 12 percent to 12.5 percent moisture if it is to be stored for at least one year. This minimizes insect and mold damage.

If the grain is sold at harvest time, moisture levels shouldn't exceed 13 percent, he said, because the elevator usually discounts wheat with higher moisture levels. Elevators may even reject wheat above a certain moisture level.

The 1983 wheat crop looks good overall, Foote said. Some excess moisture and lodging has occurred, he said; dry, sunny weather is needed for best yields.

Soybean weed control
Weeds more than four to six inches tall growing in soybeans are often difficult to control. Blazer and Basagran perform best on weeds with fewer than four leaves. Blazer at 1 1/2 to 2 pints plus 2 ounces of 2,4-DB (Bulyrac 200 or Buloxate) is effective on morningglory, jomsonweed, cocklebur, ragweed and pigweed up to 12 inches tall. Rescue (alanap and 2,4 DB) at three quarts and one-half percent surfactant controls larger sunflower, cocklebur and ragweed. The kill is slow. Supplication should be made 10 days before bloom up to mid-bloom.

Fusilade at 3-8 pint or Poast at pint plus Crop Oil Concentrate effectively controls 12 inch shattercane and 18 inch volunteer corn. Earlier treatment would be of greater benefit to the soybean. Roundup applied with pipewicks, roller applicators or recirculating sprayers give excellent control of shattercane, volunteer corn, and some broadleaf species. Weeds should be 6 to 12 inches taller than the soybeans. For most effective control do not mix 2,4 D or Banvel with Roundup.

More than meat
What do marshmallows, surgical sutures, steel ball bearings, leather and insulin have in common? The answer is they are all derived from the beef carcass.
Beef is just one of the things we get from cattle. An average 1,000 pound steer yields about 430 pounds of steaks, roasts and hamburger. Of the remaining 568 pounds, the majority yields a vast array of edible, inedible and pharmaceutical by-products. Most consumers are totally unaware of how many important products rely on some cattle by-products for their existence.

There are the edible parts, considered delicacies, such as kidneys, hearts, brains, tripe, tongue, and liver which are very nutritious foods. Some of the inedible by-products are well known, such as leather, tallow and hair from the hide.
Few of us are aware of the wide variety of lifesaving, life-improving drugs derived from cattle. The best known is insulin which is needed every day by 1.25 million American diabetics.

Although they don't rank in the life giving category, there are other by-products which prolong the life of automobile tires, hold plaster on walls and asphalt on sheels or insulate homes, lubricants, cosmetics, adhesives and violin strings are also on the cattle by-product list.
Cattle have always enriched man's life. Their importance to modern man goes far beyond the source of nutritious and enjoyable food. It is the many uses for by-products that helps keep the cost of beef well below what it might be if these by-products could not be used.

Chemigation may provide center pivot application

By Brad Gustafson
NU Ag-Communications

Chemigation may be an effective and economical alternative to conventional insecticide application for control of some insects, according to John F. Witkowski, extension entomologist at the University of Nebraska Northeast Station near Concord.

The process, however, has some disadvantages. Unless done very carefully, drift, operator hazards, and underground water contamination may be serious problems.

The process of applying insecticides through center-pivot systems, Witkowski said, can provide excellent uniformity of chemical application and a great amount of flexibility in application timing.

Witkowski, who recently met with USDA chemigation researchers at the Coastal Plain Experiment Station in Tifton, Ga., in conjunction with his own chemigation research, said insecticide application through pivots may have some advantages over conventional application methods.

ASIDE FROM a uniform and effective application of the chemical, the most critical factor in applying an insecticide is timing, Witkowski said. This can make the difference between excellent control and no control.

Applying the insecticide through a pivot can be done as quickly as the pivot can complete the circle, usually in 20 hours or so, Witkowski said although research is being done on development of "fast" pivots, designed to complete the circle in less than four hours. Aerial application has a real advantage in speed, as an airplane can usually cover a large field in less than an hour, although bad weather or heavy demand can sometimes delay the application for several days.

Ground application of insecticides can lead to many problems, such as soil compaction, mechanical damage to the crop, operator hazards and machinery, fuel and labor costs. Both aerial application and chemigation can reduce the impact of many of these factors, Witkowski said. Aerial applicators particularly, are trained to handle chemicals too hazardous for farmer application.

Witkowski said cost comparisons are not easy, as such factors as labor, equipment, amount of chemical and carrier needed and actual operating expenses must be considered.

"Currently, aerial application charges are about $3.50 to $4 per acre," Witkowski said, "which reflect both fixed and operating costs." He added that "when people talk about costs of chemigation, they generally only talk about operating costs and assume that all fixed costs are charged to the irrigation alone."

WITKOWSKI SAID the average costs per acre for pivot application of the insecticide, apart from equipment outlays, are generally stated at about 70 cents to $1.25 per acre, which will vary depending on the system and how it is powered.

Equipment costs must be added to these figures, Witkowski said.

As the center-pivot is an existing piece of equipment, it is not generally regarded as a factor in cost comparisons with other methods. However, Witkowski noted, the equipment needed for injecting the insecticide into the pivot system is an additional cash outlay.

The piston pump injector commonly used in fertigation is not the most acceptable piece of equipment for injecting insecticides, according to the entomologist. These piston pumps typically have large pumping capacities and tend to be too inaccurate when pumping the ultra-low volumes associated with injecting insecticides.

Because of this and other potential leakage and safety factors associated with the piston pump injector, Witkowski recommended a constant displacement diaphragm pump for injecting insecticides. These pumps can be used for other types of chemigation.

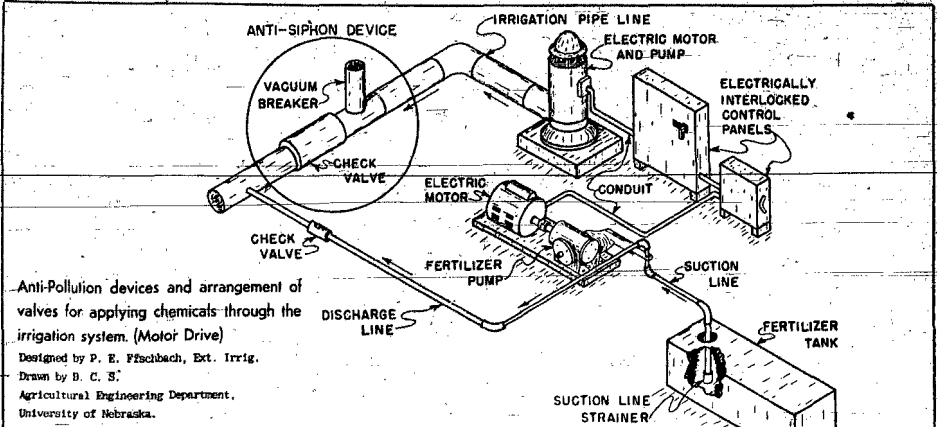

TO INJECT an insecticide into a center-pivot irrigation system, according to Witkowski, the operator needs four basic equipment items. These include the injector pump, holding tank with adequate agitation, a calibration tube and an injector assembly, which includes a check valve and a vacuum breaker.

"Contamination of underground water is of primary concern with the chemigation procedure," Witkowski said. "It should only be used with those systems equipped with proper check valves between the well and the point of injection on the main pipe."

A vacuum breaker should also be installed on the main pipe to relieve the suction behind the check valve when the system shuts down; Witkowski said it is also important that the injector pump and the pivot system be electrically interlocked to ensure simultaneous shutdown in case one of the systems stops.

The calibration tube consists of a graduated cylinder (marked in units of volume) which facilitates easy calibration of the proper injection volumes. To ensure maximum cost effectiveness of the chemigation procedure, Witkowski said proper calibration of the insecticide is essential. He said calibration is a simple, straight-forward, arithmetic process which assures that rates which are adequate, but no higher than necessary, will be applied.

As opposed to aerial spraying, the chemigation procedure is a ground-based operation which can pose safety problems for the operator, particularly if the system shuts down and needs attention.

The danger to the operator, which can be more serious with some insecticides than others, comes by absorbing insecticide directly through the skin or by inhaling the vapors. For this reason, an equipment breakdown could mean a significant delay in application.

UNTIL 1978, only one insecticide, Sevin 80S, could be legally used through center-pivot irrigation systems. In that year, however, the Federal Pesticide Act amended the restrictions so that unless a method of application is specifically prohibited, it may be used.

Recently, Lorsban-4E has been approved for center-pivot application. However, if certain specific safety precautions are not met, Witkowski said, users will be in violation of the label.

The label directions call for an equal mixture of Lorsban 4E with a non-emulsifiable oil. Since Lorsban 4E is a flammable liquid, the National Fire Protection Association and the National Electrical Code and the National Fire Protection Association dictate specific guidelines to handle the insecticide and oil mixture.

As the aerial application of insecticides is a well-established and effective method of getting the job done, Witkowski said chemigation is not expected to totally revolutionize the industry.

Research is continuing, however, on various aspects of injecting insecticides through center pivots. Including experiments with differing water volumes, the feasibility of adding non-emulsifying oils to reduce washing of the insecticide off the plant, reducing the rates of insecticides when adding oils as carriers and the distribution of the insecticide on the plant compared with other methods of application.

Witkowski said that all these factors need to be adequately researched before recommendations are issued and the future role of the chemigation process in Nebraska agriculture will be known.

the farmer's wife by pat meierhenry

In last Monday's paper, on the editorial page, there was a neat little article by Herb Lingren, the family life specialist for the extension service. It was about activities that families can enjoy doing together.

We've been one of our annual togetherness activities the past few weeks, chopping musk thistles, and my arms are aching.

Musk thistles are the Big Farmer's most persistent thorns in the flesh. When you have lots of pasture, you are most apt to grow them. And when you rent pasture, you can inherit the former renter's neglect.

WHEN WE FIRST rented a certain quarter years ago, there was a big hill on it we called Mount Muskie. Even Grandma and Grandpa were recruited to work on it. And after several years, we did conquer it. Then we rented the pasture to the west of it, and started over.

Now we have cows in a big, beautiful quarter several miles north of us. There is a roadside dam on it which is stocked with fish, and it is a popular spot. But the fishermen never offer to help us go after the thistles.

This project requires spades, salt, and man power. We all load into the pickup, with Ernie, the Black Lab dog, riding in the back or on the hood like an ornament.

We pile out at one end and start walking across, carrying a spade and a can with salt in it. When we come to a thistle, we cut it off at the roots and sprinkle sodium chloride on the part that's left in the ground. Salt kills it and it doesn't grow back.

THISTLES ARE pesky — they can grow very tall and have huge purple flowers that go to seed and leave thousands of baby thistles around.

Sometimes, by the time we get clear across the pasture, the purple flowers are blooming. They have to be pulled off with leather gloves because of the thistles, placed in buckets, and hauled home to be burned so they don't go to seed on the ground.

This is tedious, arm and leg aching, hot, sticky "togetherness." And they love it if they can talk Mom into helping. So I went out several mornings and chopped. Then, when we got home, they all grabbed kitchen chairs and yelled, "What's for lunch?" as if some genie was at home cooking.

So the Fourth of July was my last time out. As it happened, it wasn't hot that day.

But it's been hot since, and I've been grateful for the air conditioner. The TV blew a picture tube at the end of the awful week I told you about, and it's great! Kids are talking to each other, reading, and are much easier to talk into "togetherness" projects.

BUT THE DEADLINE for the 4H style show is coming closer, and the girls are sewing. The Big Farmer asked the other day why the sewing machine was hard of hearing. Guess my voice gets a little tense about a few little goats. Nobody here likes to rip out mistakes.

Jonathan, age 12, is here from Downer, Cal. He's feeding the bottle calf and keeping the organ warmed up. We spent the weekend at ball games. In fact, I think if we wanted to, we could spend every weekend at ball games. Six pitch has taken over. I kind of like that game — I can even hit the ball. What I don't like are the people who forget that it's only a game. They watch professionals on the boob tube and expect kids to perform like pros. Nothing irritates me more than unsportsmanlike conduct, on the part of players, coaches, or parents. End of sermonette.

"Last year Nebraska's independent PCAs paid over $2,100,000 in taxes."

It's because the 14 independent PCAs in Nebraska are taxpayers like other private enterprises.

Some people incorrectly believe that PCAs are government organizations or agencies. Far from it, PCAs are simply financial services cooperatives. Our Association is wholly-owned and financially supported by local producers. We lend both our own reserves and money raised through the sale of non-government bonds in the nation's money markets. Wall Street. If loans aren't repaid, or we have a loss, local members end-up footing the bill.

So, we operate our Association on a sound and business-like basis. Our directors, who are PCA members and borrowers, are elected by local members to set policy for the Association and hire professional management. This gives us the kind of direction which enables PCA to serve our own producers better and more completely through a professionally run organization.

PCAs are not alike. Although all of the 423 PCAs in the United States are operated under the same rules and regulations, like many businesses and industries today, each is independent and has its own management style based on the needs of the local producers. Our PCA is unique.

Yes, we did pay taxes. Nebraska's PCAs also returned $204,048 to Nebraska PCA members in 1982 in addition to providing professional quality financial services.

For many producers in Nebraska, PCA is smart business. That's why we say... PCA is for people who make a business out of agriculture.

Faculty profile

In the lower level of the Carhart Science Building on the Wayne State College campus rests the museum of vertebrate animals.

This exhibition is largely due to the work of Jewell Schock, associate professor of biology at Wayne State.

Since 1970, Schock has been responsible for developing the museum, and that responsibility lies directly with his interests in wildlife and the outdoors.

In his spare time, Schock enjoys bow hunting, fishing and canoeing.

Schock HAS been at Wayne State since 1964. He grew up in a small Iowa town called Bode, and graduated from high school there.

He attended Luther College in Decorah, Iowa, and earned his bachelor of arts degree from the University of Iowa.

Schock also earned a master of science degree in biology from Emporia State College in Emporia, Kan., and did additional graduate study at Oklahoma State University.

Before coming to Wayne State, he taught high school biology at Omaha Technical High School from 1960 to 1963.

Aukobon Society, the Nebraska Education Association and St. Paul's Lutheran Church. Schock serves as a Sunday school teacher and is a past member of the church council.

What does Schock like about Wayne State? "I enjoy the people I work with," he says, "and I thoroughly enjoy the opportunity to work closely with students. As a teacher, you can't do everything you should be doing just in the classroom."

Schock feels that he can offer students a lot of opportunities outside of regular class work. Schock and his wife, Evelyn, have two sons, David, 21, and Michael, 20.

Is Your Money Safer Under Your Mattress?

Maybe. Many people are reluctant to question their bank concerning its stability and safety. They assume that all banks are safe simply because they are called banks.

A bank's safety is measured by its Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation protection and its Federal Reserve protection. FDIC protection means that as a depositor, your accounts are insured to $100,000. And that your IRA or KEOGH plan accounts are insured separately for $100,000.

At the State National Bank and Trust Company your accounts are insured by the FDIC and protected by the Federal Reserve. Your money is safe with us.

So, don't assume that all banks are backed by the FDIC or the Federal Reserve, but don't start banking out of your mattress either. Come to the State National Bank and Trust Company, where your accounts are backed by the FDIC and the Federal Reserve.
