Drunk driving enforced

Traffic fatalities declining

Nebraska's stricter drunk driving law has been in effect since July 17, 1982 and state officials credit that law for a reduction in traffic fatalities.

Fred Zwonechek, administrator of the Motor Vehicles Department of Highway Safety, said the number of fatal crashes dropped from 321 in 1981 to 226 in 1982 and 222 in 1983. The number of fatalities in those crashes was 378 in 1981, 261 in 1982 and 255 in 1983, he said.

The number of alcohol-related fatal crashes declined from 149 in 1981 to 88 in 1982 and 89 in 1983. The number of alcohol-related traffic fatalities fell from 189 in 1981 to 102 in 1982 and 109 in 1983.

ZWONECHEK SAID he believes the stricter law is the main reason for the declining number of fatalities in the state. "There has been a dramatic difference and the only thing to really attribute it to is the tougher law. There has been a significant change in driving behavior," Zwonechek said.

He said that public attention to the issue of drinking and driving may have contributed to a decline in traffic fatalities before the law actually went into effect.

Major Wolbert of the Nebraska State Patrol Office said public awareness is a big factor in the declining number of fatalities.

Public awareness groups have made a national impact, he said.

The State Patrol Office also has concentrated its efforts toward drunk driving, Wolbert said. "I can't say that drunk driving is down. Drunk driving arrests are up. But fortunately fatalities are way down," he said.

Nebraska statistics
	1981	1982	1983
Fatal crashes	321	226	222
Fatalities	378	261	255
Alcohol related fatal crashes	149	88	89
Alcohol related fatalities	189	102	109

Wayne County Sheriff LeRoy Janssen said he believes his department has seen a similar trend in northeast Nebraska. The number of alcohol-related accidents reported to the Wayne County Sheriff's Office also has declined, Janssen said.

THE COUNTY also has not had an alcohol-related traffic fatality in the last 3 or 4 years, the sheriff said. Wayne County averages approximately 1 traffic fatality per year.

"I think the court system has made the law tougher and people took heed. We're also seeing a reduction of late night driving," Janssen said.

He also credited the highway safety board and sheriff's departments, adding that sheriff's offices are directing more enforcement toward driving restrictions.

However, Wayne City Police Chief Vern Fairchild said the trend in Wayne is the opposite of the state trend. He said arrests on drunk driving charges have increased in the last couple years.

The police department has tested many drivers on an intoximeter, Fairchild said. He pointed out that the convenience of the relatively new equipment makes it easier to test for intoxication.

Fairchild said that his staff has received better training and has become more aware of how to spot drunken drivers. "If you think you're drunk, don't drive," Fairchild added.

100 percent teaching CPR

The Northeast Nebraska Area has achieved 100 percent coverage for teaching cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) in the schools, according to Miron Jenness of Wayne. Jenness is an American Heart Association Basic Life Support Affiliate faculty member. All junior and senior high schools in the area currently teach CPR or plan to teach CPR to their students.

"We are very proud of this accomplishment," Jenness said. "Heart disease causes more than half of all Nebraskans to die, and we realize that this figure can be reduced. Statistics show that one-third of the people who die each year from sudden cardiac death could be saved through prompt application of CPR."

CPR enables the continued circulation of life-supporting oxygen and blood through a person whose heartbeats and breathing have stopped. The technique involves both mouth-to-mouth breathing, which inflates the lungs with oxygen, and vigorous, rhythmic external chest compressions, which forces blood through the heart, and supplies oxygen to the brain and other vital organs of the body. As the name indicates, cardiopulmonary resuscitation revives the heart and the lungs.

Possibility of state's liability

By Melvin Paul
Nebraska Press Association

The State Claims Board last week, acknowledging "a strong possibility of some liability on the part of the state" in the failure of Commonwealth Savings Co., approved a plan to revitalize the insolvent institution with the infusion of $60 million in state funds.

The Claims Board approval is a preliminary step to getting the question of repayment of Commonwealth depositors to the Legislature during the current session, which ends on or about April 7.

The Board acted on a class action tort claim brought on behalf of the depositors by Lincoln Attorney M.J. Bruckner. The claim sought a $60 million in payments from the state for failure in its role as the regulator of financial institutions.

The reorganization plan promises to return at least $47 million to the state over the next 10 years.

With claims board approval, the plan now goes to Lancaster District Court for review. If the court approves the plan, it would go to the Legislature where members would accept it, reject it or amend it.

In its written decision, the Board said the legal liability of state may arise from "certain actions of the Banking Department with regard to the Nebraska Depository Institution Guaranty (Corporation Act)." The Guaranty Corporation, which was created pursuant to state legislation and was supposedly regulated by the Banking Department, failed to live up to the advertised $30,000 per depositor guarantee when Commonwealth was declared insolvent last Nov. 1.

The plan calls for the sale of $5 million preferred and common stock to private investors, repayment of depositors of up to $30,000 within three years of the reorganization and issuance of preferred stock to depositors for the amount which they have in Commonwealth over $30,000.

Some state lawmakers last week were taking a dim view of a University of Nebraska decision to spend up to $275,000 this year on the proposed regional veterinary college.

The lawmakers, including Senator Tom Vickers of Farnam, said the expenditures violate the intent of the Bill.

An appropriations bill passed last year said $275,000 in state capital construction funds were to be spent only if NU had met certain conditions, including commitments from at least two other states to participate in the project. No other states have committed yet to the project.

Appropriations Committee Chairman Jerome Warner of Waverly said NU's expenditure of about $17,000 to revise the program statement for the vet college — the sum spent thus far — doesn't particularly bother him. But he would object to moving into the next phase of the project in which drawings (but not blueprints) would be developed.

"You don't need a pretty picture to sell it to other states," Warner said. "The attractiveness of the structure is not going to be what the other states' decisions turn on."

Lawmakers are expected to try to clarify NU's authority to spend the vet school money this year.

DESPITE WARNINGS from the State Banking Director Roger Beverage that the plan may ultimately be the cheapest route for the state, most senators from outside Lincoln seemed cool to the idea of spending the money.

STATE BANKING Director Roger Beverage said the Commonwealth reorganization plan was the subject of series of meetings over the last 30 days involving himself, Governor Bob Kerrey and others.

NU OFFICIALS were told by the State Department of Administrative Services that it may spend up to $275,000 anyway because

Cheap shot

The Wayne Herald received in the mail last week a letter to the editor with a forged signature.

The letter was directed at several individuals in Wayne. The author had enough nerve to criticize these individuals but not enough guts to sign his or her own name.

That's bad enough, but signing someone else's name to the letter is 10 times as bad. We don't know who wrote the letter. Perhaps it was even a friend.

But, we do know that putting someone else's name on the bottom of a letter is hitting below the belt.

The Wayne Herald has established a policy of contacting the authors of mailed letters which may be critical in order to verify that they were written by the authors listed.

The person whose name was listed on this particular letter was shocked when informed about the letter.

The author apparently felt he or she needed to be the one to cast the first stone but felt the blame could be shifted by pointing a finger at an innocent person.

We also noticed that the true author even misspelled the person's first name.

The action is a true insult to our intelligence and also to the intelligence of our readers. We detest the dirty and dishonest tactics used.

To the author of the phony letter we ask, "Does it make you proud to write a letter like this one and then put another person's name on it?"

In America we have a thing called FREEDOM OF SPEECH. Forgery isn't included in that freedom.

Too early

Reprinted from the Omaha World Herald

It isn't enough for television network executives to defend their early projections in the Iowa caucuses by saying that they were practicing responsible journalism.

Goldberg deserves a better answer. CBS Vice President Ralph Goldberg didn't address the issue when he said in testimony during a congressional hearing "We believe it is our role as journalists to report and not withhold the information we have. This is nothing unique to election reporting; with the rarest of exceptions, it is a fundamental journalistic credo."

Of course the job of a news organization is to report information. But the projections prepared by the networks on the Iowa caucuses were sketchy information at best.

CBS based its projections in part on information from caucus sign up sheets in sample precincts. Other network projections were based on interviews with Iowans who said they planned to participate in the caucuses.

Incredibly CBS and NBC broadcast their results before the caucus voting was scheduled to begin. That wasn't information about what was happening in the caucuses. It was merely a report reflecting probabilities or perhaps, guesswork — about what might be happening in the caucuses based on information received earlier.

The question is whether it is responsible for the networks to disclose projected "result" before anyone voted.

In some elections, the race to project results seems to be primarily a way of entertaining the audience while the votes are being counted.

But when projected results are announced before anyone has voted the issue becomes troubling.

According to Iowa Democratic Chairman Dave Nagle, many Iowans who attended the caucuses wondered aloud why they were there in view of the fact that the networks had already projected the results.

Nof all television people defend the practice.

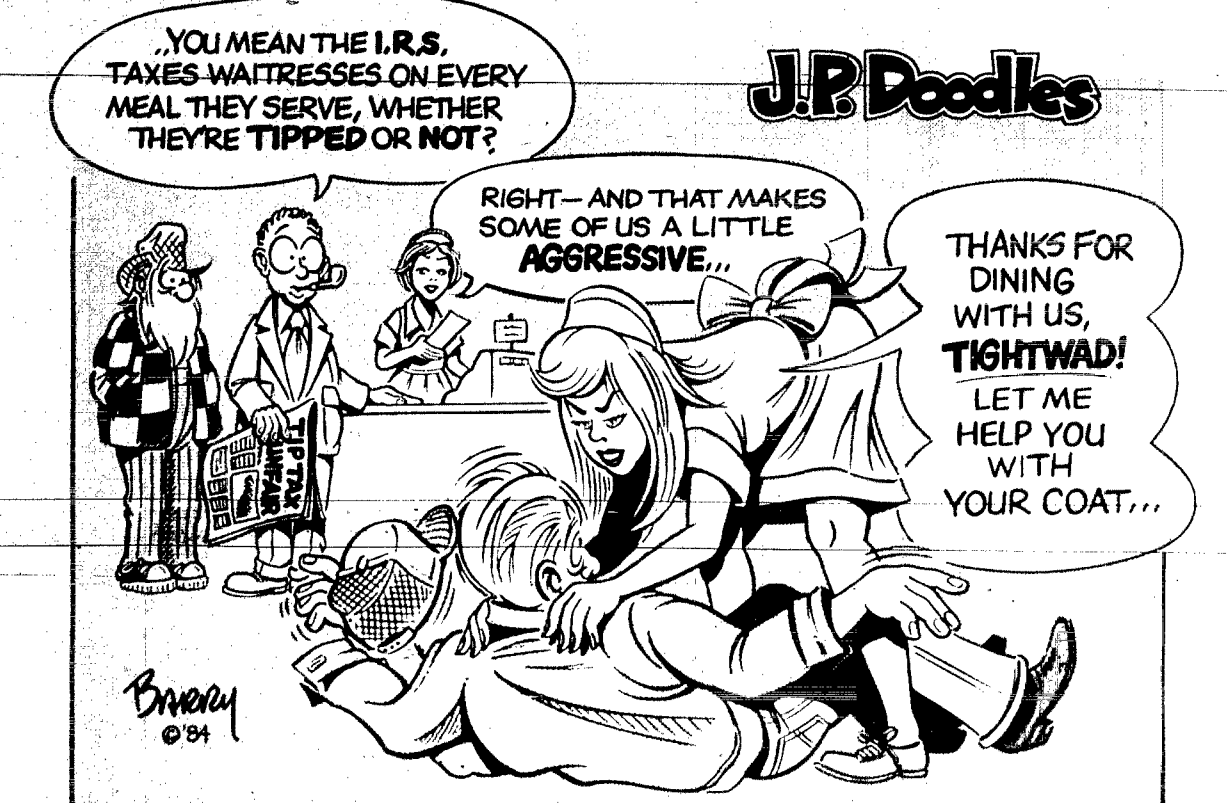

Ted Turner, chairman of the Turner Broadcasting System, said he thinks it is irresponsible when results are influenced by projections "which are manufactured by the computer manipulation of exit polling data."

Network news executives should heed his words. Elections are too important to the proper working of a democratic system to risk influencing the results with what Nagle called a "silly race to be first."

The pride of small family farmsteads is defended

To the editor:

People who are willing to work on a small farm (not thousands of acres) can make a good living. Don't be ashamed of your small farm. If it is all paid for you can be proud of it.

Don't feel bad if your neighbor has more than you have, as he most likely doesn't have the machinery paid for and may never. My family farmed (Organic Farming) for 67 years and we all worked together. At first we had horses and not such expensive machinery which wasn't so hard to pay for.

Take for instance the Amish. They use horses for every line of work. Their farmsteads are so neat and they should be proud. Well we finally had to buy a tractor and we paid cash for it along with the other machinery.

Our parents didn't buy anything unless there was money to pay for it right away. There are thousands of cattle fed on farms today where there used to be just hundreds. This year was a terrible and discouraging one with water standing in the fields and can't be planted. Also there were tornadoes and hail to put up with. No one is to blame.

One consolation is to have hail and tornado insurance and also the livestock.

You can enjoy lots of good things on an acre farm.

Of course there is plenty of hard work and some is disagreeable such as cleaning the barn and sheds. Especially the hen houses, after a hard winter. All the litter was frozen down on the floor and had to be scraped off way down to the cement and then lugged out to be hauled onto the fields.

The calf shed was another hard one to clean. But with plenty of dry straw the calves enjoyed a clean bed. In the spring a load of dirt from the potato patch was brought in and was put in the holes so the calves had a nice clean shed.

All livestock live in warm beds. We build sheds for all our livestock and they appreciate it and we feel better too in knowing that they were inside as we were.

So we lived well on our small farm. We had plenty of wood and coal for our cookstove. The range warmed up the kitchen in a hurry with the furnace for the rest of the house. Wood splits the best when it is cold — very cold.

So don't feel discouraged because you live on a small farm. Maybe you have a larger bank account. Maybe you can't afford a new car every year. Some people live on the road going here and there. We had lots of pleasure on our 80. Lots of beautiful flowers, fruit, all kinds of vegetables, with some to sell.

Hearing the birds sing and all the other wonders of nature, who can ask for more.

Area educators are recognized

To the editor:

The Wayne Board of Education joins with the American Association of University Women and the Nebraska Association of School Boards in issuing an official thank you to the teachers who work in the Wayne Carroll School system.

The Wayne Board of Education concurs with the original purpose of the week which states that: (1) we want teachers to know

Controversial bills reach legislature's floor debate

Last week was one of the busiest of the session as the Legislature finished up its public hearings and began full day floor debate. It was a week of lengthy floor debate and political maneuvering as the Legislature considered some of the most controversial bills of the session.

On Monday morning the Unicameral discussed LB 426. This is the measure I spoke of last week in my attempt to control nitrate levels in our underground water supply. This bill has created a stir among rural Senators many of which dispute the seriousness of the nitrate contamination and who prefer to see the matter handled by the Natural Resources Committee.

The bill would empower the State Department of Environmental Control to conduct and halt the source of the source can be found. After lengthy debate, LB 426 was killed on a vote of 28-16.

ANOTHER BILL of some interest to those who drive was discussed Monday and advanced to floor debate on a vote of 26-15. LB 694 would exempt persons who have not had any moving violations during the preceding 4 years from taking a written driver's license examination to re-obtain their license.

I have some reservations about the merits of this bill but have decided to support it. Examinations will continue to be required and the exam fee remains the option of requiring you to perform the driving portion of the exam.

senator merle von minden

It also provided for the establishment of a state lottery. There was not enough support for this proposal as the amendment was rejected on a vote of 16-27. A time limit of 1 hour and 15 minutes had been set aside by the speaker for consideration of the bill but it was decided to extend the time limit in an effort to arrive at a vote on advancement.

However, a motion was subsequently made to indefinitely postpone the bill and time ran out as debate ensued on this motion. An attempt to further extend debate failed so the bill remains on general file awaiting further discussion of the bill motion.

THIS SESSION'S agenda bill, LB 695, was advanced to select file on Thursday, March 1. Every attempt at amending or restricting abortions over the last several years has been struck down as unconstitutional by the courts. As a result, Nebraska really has no law on the books pertaining to availability of abortions.

However, the courts have carefully detailed what can be done to regulate the performance of abortions at various stages of a pregnancy. LB 695 is an attempt to restrict abortions to the maximum extent allowed by these recent federal court decisions.

A major provision of the bill requires physicians to treat fetuses that are aborted but remain alive. I'm sure many of you have heard about the doctor who allowed an aborted fetus which was born alive to die. LB 695 requires a doctor in these circumstances to do everything he can to insure survival of the fetus.

Surprisingly, the measure advanced on a vote of 31-0. However, opponents of the bill plan to try to amend the bill at the next stage of consideration. I expect some resistance to its advancement, but I will continue to support it.

Most of the Legislature's energy was expended on debate on LB 994 Thursday afternoon and evening. This is the Governor's proposal to improve education in Nebraska. Although the bill has many good aspects such as a re-emphasis on the basics, I don't feel I can support the bill in its present form due to the initial estimated cost to the state of $20 million this year and the vague method of distributing these funds. With several amendments pending, the bill may undergo considerable change before it comes up for final reading.

It also provided for the establishment of a state lottery. There was not enough support for this proposal as the amendment was rejected on a vote of 16-27. A time limit of 1 hour and 15 minutes had been set aside by the speaker for consideration of the bill but it was decided to extend the time limit in an effort to arrive at a vote on advancement.

Awwww, that's too bad

If sure was too bad to read about Kearney State's baseball team getting dismantled 20-4 by the Nebraska Cornhuskers last Sunday. The Lopers dropped a double header to the Huskers the day before, so Wildcat mentor Lenny Klaver shouldn't feel too bad about Wayne State's 12-2 and 11-1 defeats at Buck Bellizer field last Thursday.

Wayne Herald managing editor Randy Hascall accompanied me to Lincoln for the Cal's Huskers affair. Hascall agreed with me that Nebraska coach John Sanders conducted himself in such a pompous manner that George Steinbrenner would have seemed loveable in comparison.

It'll probably root for the Cornhuskers the rest of the season, but if I go to another game I'm going to sit high enough in the stands so that I don't have to listen to his arrogant ravings.

Mega mega bucks

If you're still reeling from the 60 million plus contract signed this week by BYU quarterback Steve Young with the Los Angeles Express of the USFL, join the club. That transaction must make millionaires Mike Rozier and company feel like they got cheated.

If the USFL doesn't watch it, it's going to price itself right out of existence. Remember, it was just last season that the fledgling league said it would limit each team's players' salaries to $1.6 million the first year, $1.75 million this year and $2.1 million next season.

Now, it couldn't be

From the "Tell me it ain't true department" comes the story of Oklahoma Southern Mississippi running back Marcus Dupree's $6 million signing with the Los Angeles Express of the USFL.

Dupree is a running back alright - he always goes running back to momma. If I had the good under contract, I'd hire a 24-hour bodyguard to make sure Marcus didn't run home the first time a coach asks him to break the sweat barrier.

See me?

Just a little update on my column on last month's trip to see a Sioux City Muskateers hockey game with KTIV TV sports director Steve Taylor.

I sent Taylor a copy of the column and he now claims complete innocence to my accounts of his decadent behavior while at the Sioux City Arena.

He says his attorney will be in touch.

Well that's O.K. by me. My boss, Jim Marsh, doesn't care what I write in this column. If I want to I can insult anybody I want to without fear of censorship. Right Jim?

High school seniors invited to audition for music scholarships

Wayne State College will hold music scholarship auditions on Friday, March 16 in the Val Peterson Fine Arts Center.

The auditions, which are by appointment only, are for any high school senior who wishes to compete for a music scholarship in either vocal or instrumental music.

According to Dr. Jay O'Leary, division head of the fine arts department, scholarships will be awarded primarily to the most competent, perspective music majors.

O'Leary said that music minors and non music majors also will be considered for scholarships.

JUDGES FOR the auditions will be Dr. O'Leary, as well as Dr. Cornell Runstad, Dr. Raymond Kelton, and James Day of the Wayne State music faculty.

Each audition will last approximately 15 minutes and students can audition on more than one instrument if they desire.

Students should prepare a piece of their own choice in standard repertoire for their instrument before auditioning.

ANY STUDENT interested in obtaining an audition application form should contact the Wayne State College music department as soon as possible.

Call (402) 375-2200, or write to Wayne State College, Music Department, Wayne, Neb. 68787.

March CLEP exams scheduled at WSC

A program that enables persons to earn college credits by examination will be offered March 14 at Wayne State College.

The College Level Examination Program (CLEP) provides students the option of earning college credit without enrolling in college courses, enabling them to save both time and money in earning a college education.

Students wishing to participate must register on or before Monday, March 12.

ANYONE CAN take CLEP exams and submit scores to one or more of 2,500 participating institutions. To receive college credit at Wayne State, students must either be currently enrolled or have met Wayne State admission requirements.

Students can get a good overview of the areas they select to take a CLEP exam by obtaining a booklet, titled "Guide to the CLEP Examinations" from the Student Services Office at Wayne State.

The booklet can usually help students decide if they have enough knowledge about particular academic areas to attempt the related CLEP examinations. The booklet may be borrowed on an overnight basis or purchased for $5.

CREDIT RECEIVED for CLEP is entered on a student's record without a grade, thereby not affecting grade point averages.

There is no official record entered if the CLEP exam is failed, and students can re-take the same exam again provided appropriate fees are paid.

Wayne State places no limit on the maximum number of credit hours earned through CLEP and taken before the senior year.

Each CLEP exam usually takes about 90 minutes to complete. The fee for general and subject examinations is $28 per exam.

Scores are reported to the student and the college within one week.

FOR MORE information contact the Wayne State College Student Services Office - CLEP, (402) 375-2200, ext. 213.

Faculty profiles

"What I enjoy most is that both the athletes and students are really spirited people. They make the job really rewarding," says Sue Kovar, assistant professor of health, physical education and recreation at Wayne State College.

Kovar also is women's softball coach. She came to Wayne State to teach and coach in 1976.

She received her undergraduate degree from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln in 1967 and went on to earn her master's from the University of Illinois in 1970.

She currently is working on a dissertation for her Ph.D. from the University of Minnesota.

KOVAR, HER husband Ernie and their two children, Amy, 11, and Andrew, 2, live in Wakefield where Ernie teaches physical education.

Kovar belongs to several professional organizations, including the Nebraska Education Association and the American and Nebraska Alliances of Health, Physical Education and Recreation.

As a coach, she is a member of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, and civically she is a member of the Second Guessers Club and St. Mary's Catholic Church in Wayne, where she is involved in religious education.

In her spare time, Kovar likes to relax by reading and by traveling to see friends around the United States.

"ATHLETICALLY," Kovar commented, "our softball program has really improved over the past years."

SUE KOVAR

She went on to say the program has developed as far as it can unless there is an increase of funds.

Kovar said as a whole, Wayne State has grown visibly and that "overall the institution has grown and developed better in many ways and in various departments, and that's good because we need to continue to make progress."

Kovar also said she thinks the physical education department is strong and "has grown stronger as far as providing a good education for those who want to teach physical education."

Graduate record exams offered

Graduate Record Examinations (GRE) will be offered at Wayne State College next month in the Nebraska room located in the lower level of the Student Center.

The exam is taken by graduate students during their first nine hours of study. The exams are used by the graduate office to assist in advising students as to their potential for graduate study.

Each year, the GRE tests are given nationally at many locations.

THE FOURTH of five exams will be April 28 at Wayne State, with registration deadline on March 23. Mike Ganaway, assistant dean of Student Services, will administer the exam beginning at 8 a.m. and concluding at 12:35 p.m. Fee for the examination is $29.

THE GRE measures certain developed verbal, quantitative and analytical abilities that are important for academic achievement.

In doing so, the test necessarily reflects the opportunities and efforts that have contributed to the development of those abilities.

A general information bulletin containing registration forms and sample tests may be obtained from the Student Services Office located in Hahn, or the Graduate Office located in Brandenburg Education building on the Wayne State campus.

"Ballantyne's for over 70 years furnishing the homes of thousands of Nebraska and South Dakota families!"

A Very Special Message . . . To All Residents Of Nebraska And South Dakota

For over 70 years, Ballantyne's of Norfolk, Nebraska, has been one of the largest suppliers of home furnishings products in northern Nebraska. And for the first time in our history, because of the vast inventory we have accumulated, we have made the decision to liquidate at least 50% of our 11,000 items of furniture, including our entire inventory of lamps. This decision will allow Ballantyne's Furniture Plaza to continue through 1984 with a vigorous expansion program that will allow expansion potential and positive lower prices for Nebraska and South Dakota residents. And further, during the course of this liquidation sale and every product will be sold entirely on a first come first served basis and all items will be sold at the lowest possible price. And finally, this sale is not a clearance sale but a liquidation sale with instructions to advertise, sell and in other ways promote and give liquidation.

Thank You, John & Byron Ballantyne
 For Ballantyne's Furniture, Inc.

Professor downgrades hip height of beef cattle

The traits to look for in breeding and selection programs that are of importance in the beef cattle business are reproductive efficiency, growth rate of gain per unit feed, composition (muscle, bone and fat in a beef animal) and breed cow longevity.

This assertion was made during a talk by R.A. Long, professor of animal science at Texas Tech University, Lubbock, and a longtime observer and commentator on the beef industry. Long spoke to separate audiences of cow-calf operators and cattle feeders at a recent Nebraska Cattlemen's Exposition in Columbus.

Service, Long raised critical questions about the validity of several other traits of varying heritability in beef cattle, which are in current vogue in many beef production circles. Among these were height measured at the hip — a criterion now being used to classify cattle for judging in many live shows — as well as length, stretch and profile.

THE BOTTOM LINE. Long said, "over-reaching all other traits, is reproductive efficiency. Cows need to develop sexually, cycle, conceive and have a calf or wet or hot or dry — and that's a big order." Long said: "A beef female needs to calve when she's a 2-year-old, he said, and then do it every 12 months thereafter.

"It's the most important trait in the cattle business; therefore, it ought to receive the most emphasis," Long said, adding that, unfortunately, maternal traits have low heritability. "You don't make much progress selecting for it (in breeding programs)."

Producers throughout the industry are looking for superior genes in beef cattle, Long said, but may not always be financially rewarded for their search.

Speaking to cow-calf operators, Long said, "If you carry out the recommended breeding program and spend the time and money that it takes to get the job done, you'd better hang on to those calves and feed them yourself — not necessarily in your feedlot, but you'd better retain ownership.

Parties who are buying feeder cattle in most cases won't pay for genetic potential for growth and for carcass desirability, the animal scientist said.

Mostly, "they just say, 'What does he (a steer) weigh?'" he commented.

LONG SPENT some time in his talk underscoring his argument that height at the hip is not a significant evaluator of beef cattle quality.

"Why teach a kid in a steer show that how far he (the calf) sticks up in the air has anything to do with his ability to produce beef?" he asked.

(profiles) don't have anything to do with beef production.

Long said the taller cattle, often judged first in show situations, are likely less muscled. He said many in the industry in recent years have said, "I want a smooth, flat muscle pattern." This does not jibe with desirable carcass cattle, he said. The latter "have some bumps (well-developed muscles) on them."

Long also scorned frame size, a trait highly sought in selection. "It's a pee pee of mine," he cited an example of three steers with the same weight (1,250 pounds) and skeleton size but with different hip height measurements. One had an inch of outside fat and a 12-inch loin eye; another one-half inch of fat and a 15-inch loin eye; another 15-inch fat and a highly desirable 18-inch loin eye.

"DON'T EVALUATE slaughter steers on the basis of the size of their skeleton," he counseled. "It has nothing to do with reproductive efficiency."

If feeders put enough muscle on a big framed steer to give him desirable composition present market weights that people are paying for, you cannot have a big framed steer, that's any good." The dilemma: "If you put enough weight on (a big skeleton) to make him a good one, he weighs 1,500 to 1,600 pounds; if you sell him when he weighs 1,100 pounds he won't grade and no one wants him."

Long criticized length as a viable trait for evaluation. "If he's too fat, you just have more steer than's too fat. Length of his body has nothing to do with his yield of edible portion."

On cow longevity, Long conceded that poultry, swine and sheep have a big advantage over beef cattle in reproductive efficiency. "Sows lay down and have a litter of 10 pigs twice a year; hens lay 300 eggs a year." Beef producers' major costs are — those of reproduction. Once a cow that delivers a good calf every year is identified, Long said, "we need to keep her working" as long as possible.

LONG BRANDED as false connotations by some in the beef industry that producers could make more money if federal grading standards were changed.

"We might (under revised standards) be producing that lower quality product a little more efficiently or a little cheaper, but if everybody's doing it, the man that is setting the price just changes his scale... slides it up and down a little bit... and we still have problems.

"I don't think you can legislate a profit in the beef industry," he said, in an industry "with billions of dollars changing hands." Long said he still thinks there's a place "for people who can do it better than others, who can do more of it or willing to work harder and do more of it, and those are the people that make some money."

Factors in purchasing a microcomputer for farm business use, the first question that should be answered is "what do I want the computer to do?" The steps the farmer should go through are:

1. Determine the business objective in buying a computer, or specify the problem the computer will solve. Determine the priority use for the computer.
2. Investigate available software to meet the specified objectives.
3. Compare software packages that generally do what you want done.
4. Select the software package that best meets your needs and is easiest for you to use and appears to be the most reliable.
5. Select hardware that will run the software you have selected.
6. To use your microcomputer as a terminal to operate AGNET programs, discuss the auxiliary hardware necessary with the computer dealer. Have the dealer demonstrate the interfacing with AGNET before you buy any of the computer components from him.

Crossbreeding in small beef herds
Small herd sizes (less than 50 cows) make two or three breed rotational or rotational terminal crossbreeding system very difficult, if not impossible to manage.

Use of artificial insemination (A.I.) may be an option to avoid having to maintain several breeds of bulls; however, A.I. requires a higher level of management and may not be feasible for many small herds.

If the small herd owner can purchase replacement crossbred females and acceptable performance, the use of a general purpose or terminal breed type bull is a simple way to glean maximum hybrid vigor.

Options set

FmHA will continue normal loan servicing

The U.S. Department of Agriculture's Farmers Home Administration has notified its field offices to continue normal farm loan servicing under procedures that were distributed to local offices in December.

FmHA Administrator Charles W. Shuman issued the instructions as a result of a court order entered in Coleman versus Block, a federal court suit in Bismarck, N.D. U.S. District Court Judge Bruce Van Sickle issued the permanent injunction Feb. 17 prohibiting the Farmers Home Administration from foreclosing or taking other adverse action without prior written notice to the borrowers of their rights and options under the circumstances.

However, the judicial order will have little effect on Farmers Home operations as new procedures already had been adopted under a temporary injunction of the court. The procedures specify options available to Farmers Home Administration farm borrowers who may be having trouble repaying their loans, Shuman said. "We also will explain to those borrowers the requirements they must meet to qualify for loan servicing options, which could include consolidation of loans, rescheduling, reamortizing loans or deferral of payments.

"We will continue to work with farmers on a fair, and businesslike basis, and we will continue to use all available options open to us to help farmers whose operations are feasible," he said.

Farmers Home Administration farm borrowers must continue to live up to their agreements with the agency, a credit arm of USDA, Shuman said. "Nothing in the North Dakota court order relieves borrowers of their loan repayment responsibilities."

terminal breed type bull is a simple way to glean maximum hybrid vigor.

Only one breeding pasture and one breed of bulls (perhaps only one bull is required). If replacement cows, not heifers, are purchased then calving difficulty should not be a major problem with the use of terminal breed type bulls.

Many cow herd owners want to raise their own replacement females and this rejects the idea of purchasing replacements. If the herd size is a two-bull unit (35 to 70 cows) a two-breed cross is feasible and yields about 67 percent of maximum hybrid vigor.

To avoid major calving problems the two breeds should be of maternal or general purpose types since heifers would be bred to each of the two bull breeds.

Another possible method of using crossbreeding in one bull herd would be simply to rotate bull breeds every 3 to 4 years. Obviously in one bull herd some sire daughter matings would occur in the third and fourth year. If avoidance of inbreeding is a major concern, the bull breeds could be rotated every two years.

The use of "composite breed" bulls offers a convenient method for utilizing and maintaining hybrid vigor in small herds. Composite breeds are crosses of two or more breeds (usually four breeds) which have been designed to fit a particular purpose and environment.

The availability of composite breeds is limited presently, but will increase in the future.

The small herd owner has limited flexibility in his choice of crossbreeding system, however, there are some simple alternatives which allow some of the advantages of crossbreeding to be obtained

Farm safety day planned

The eighth annual Nebraska Safety Day and Safety Awards Luncheon will be held March 23 at the new Cornhusker Hotel in Lincoln. The purpose of the event is to draw attention to Nebraska's safety leaders and to present education programs on modern safety techniques.

The 1984 NEBRASKA SAFETY DAY is being sponsored by the Safety Council of Nebraska. Persons may register for the entire day or may purchase luncheon tickets. For further details, contact the Safety Council of Nebraska, Box 30578, Lincoln 68503. Telephone number (402) 483-2511.

Lung hazards on the farm

The American Lung Association of Nebraska will hold a special seminar entitled "Lung Hazards in Agriculture" on March 20, from 2 to 5 p.m., at the Northeast Technical Community College in Norfolk.

The program is designed for anyone involved in ag. business and will explain the many respiratory hazards encountered daily in the agricultural setting.

Those interested are asked to pre-register by calling Maddie Pedersen, Madison County Extension Service, 625-2785, or by writing the American Lung Association of Nebraska, 8901 Indian Hills Drive, Suite 107, Omaha, Nebraska 68114.

Cosponsors of the program are the Madison County Extension Service and the City of Norfolk, Health Division.

Cattle weigh-in is Saturday

The Wayne County 4-H beef weigh-in will be held Saturday (March 10) from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Farmers Marketing Association (formerly Wayne Sale Barn) according to Don C. Spitzer, Wayne County extension agent.

Tree orders are due soon

Wayne County producers who wish to plant trees for windbreaks or wildlife need to do so soon. The deadline for tree orders will be March 16. Supplies of shrubs are generally good. Hardwood and conifer supplies are small due to erosion in the seedbeds. The price for 100 trees is $28 which includes shipping.

The Lower Elkhorn NRD has a tree planter and crew available for a small fee. If you haven't ordered your trees, contact the Soil Conservation Service or the Extension Service.

Pesticide recertification due

The last meeting for farmers to get recertified for pesticide certificates for application of restricted pesticides will be Monday (March 12) at 1 p.m. at the Wayne city auditorium.

The meeting is for holders of the blue card that expires in 1984 (blue card is the only card that counts). If a farmer's blue card has expired before 1984, they are considered the same as new applicants and must attend 2 meetings -- 1 of the recertification meetings held March 2, 6 or 12 plus the meeting to be held at ASCS office March 26 at 1:15 p.m.

Farm, ranch conference attended

Ron and Karma Magnuson of Carroll attended the Young Farmers and Ranchers Conference sponsored by Nebraska Farm Bureau at Kearney Feb. 26-28. The conference is for Farm Bureau members between the ages of 18 and 30 and this year's theme was "Learning from Today - Preparing for Tomorrow."

Erosion can be controlled

Residue and vegetative covers play an important role in reducing the erosion process in Nebraska row crop production areas, according to David Shelton, extension agricultural engineer at the University of Nebraska Northeast Station.

Soil erosion, one of the topics under discussion at the 1984 Conservation Tillage Area Meetings being conducted across the state, exceeds 140 million tons of agricultural land annually, he said, with nearly 70 percent of the loss coming from row crop production areas.

Leaving residues on the surface help prevent erosion losses, he said, since "residues form an intricate and complex series of small three-quarter-inch openings that reduce runoff rate, reducing the amount of soil particles that are eroded and the transport capacity of the runoff."

In addition, slowing the runoff rate allows more time for infiltration to occur, further reducing the erosion rate.

I stayed up late Saturday night to watch Henderson defeat Grant in the boys class C2 basketball tournament. They are going to try for the tripe crown, champs in football and basketball, with track still ahead.

When I was in high school, Henderson was in our conference. And they excelled in music. I were tough to beat at district music contests. I will always remember a young man from that schooling, "There is a Balkin in a lead" in what would definitely be "soul style" today. It gave us goose bumps.

Henderson is a Mennonite community, just west of York. It is a town of German Russians, faithful to their church, hard working, progressive, famous for its annual snorgasbord of ethnic dishes.

THERE ARE other Mennonite communities, one at Newton, Kansas, home of their Bethel College; and another in Saskatoon, where my brother in law grew up. When you read their newspapers, you see the same names in each community: Kroeker, Butler, Pankratz, Friesen, Thieszen, Epp, Ediger. Henderson's basketball team is made up of those same surnames, the best known of which is John Kroeker, who is a radio personality on a football scholarship.

This young man is quite an athlete.

created by the residue protects the soil from sun and wind reducing evaporation losses. Standing residues in the winter can also conserve moisture by trapping snowfall. The moisture conserved can reduce irrigation requirements and "save" a dryland crop in dry years," Shelton said.

Although residue management can effectively control erosion, he added, some problems can emerge with increased residue levels.

Residues can provide a good weed seed environment," he said, "and may block herbicide movement to the soil."

Later in the season, much EXCESSIVE RESIDUES can hamper tillage and planting operations and in spring provide a winter habitat for insects, birds and pathogens.

Potential problems (that should be ignored by the producer)," Shelton said, "but good management, he argues, can minimize many of the disadvantages associated with higher levels of residue.

Residue covers of 50 percent can reduce soil erosion losses by about 50 percent of that occurring from clean, tilled fields, and he added, with proper management, conservation tillage can conserve soil, water, nutrients, fuel and labor while maintaining yields.

For instance, of its weather he says, "Spring is usually between 7 o'clock and 1 o'clock on 1 afternoon in April or maybe June, depending on the year. Fall is one afternoon in September or October or November Or December Or none of the above."

OF LINCOLN'S institutions, he writes, "The Legislature saw fit to put the University and the Asylum in the same town, thinking that the University could provide clients for the Asylum and the Asylum could provide faculty for the University."

I tried 2 new recipes today, and actually made them the way they were written. I had all the ingredients on hand. Usually, I'm like this verse from Farm Wife News:

I didn't have potatoes, so I substituted rice.
I didn't have paprika, so I used another spice.
I didn't have tomato sauce, I used tomato paste.

A whole can, not a half can, I don't believe in waste.
A friend gave me the recipe. She said you couldn't beat it.
There must be something wrong with her — I couldn't even eat it!

Soil specialist: don't expect miracles

Can new soil additives really improve or revitalize soil and boost crop yields in the way manufacturers say they can? A University of Nebraska extension soil specialist doesn't think so.

Under the Nebraska Fertilizer and Soil Conditioner Act that went into effect Jan. 1, 1976, a soil conditioner can be anything but lime, commercial fertilizer or manure. All other products must be labeled.

Wiese said that under the law a company can sell anything. The law only requires the manufacturer of any product to register it for sale, and label it truthfully. The law does not approve the product, it simply requires registration and proper labeling.

Wiese gave an example of a potential pitfall to beware of even when purchasing chemicals containing familiar ingredients.

One soil conditioning product had the chemical Ammonium sulfate laurethyl listed on its label. A producer may know that monium sulfate laurethyl is a detergent.

"But putting too much of this on the soil can be detrimental," Wiese said. "All detergents make water wetter. They don't do anything for yields."

TO UNDERSTAND the effects of chemicals on labels, Wiese suggests producers call an expert.

Before spending $600 to $800, why not spend $20 or less calling someone who knows what the product is," Wiese said. He suggested calling an extension agent or someone referred by an extension agent.

Wiese also warned against a perception of credibility by association. Some salespeople may say they are associated with a university or other credible source, he noted. Written and verbal statements to these ends should be ignored, he said.

Wiese warned against relying on a close source you feel is credible. "Maybe a next door neighbor is selling the product," he explained. Again, check with an expert.

Russell Moorman, extension crop and weed specialist at the NU Northeast Station, Concord, will discuss problems in planting soybeans in sandy soil, a fairly common situation expected in the post-PIK crop season.

MOORMAN SAID there are a lot of differences in planting in sandy soils compared to clay type soils in eastern Nebraska. Some things to consider are variety, planting rates, row spacing and weed control.

He listed pros and cons of planting soybeans in sandy soil.

There's added benefits from rotation because there will be a yield increase from soybeans after corn," he said.

A negative aspect is the fact that soybeans may increase soil erosion. "In sandy soil, erosion is bad anyway, and soybeans may loosen the soil further," he said.

Association seeks members

Livestock producers do not stand alone in this highly organized world, according to Don Bruning, president of the Cedar County Livestock Feeders Association.

They rely on the team effort of our association along with the Nebraska Livestock Feeders Association and the National Cattlemen's Association, he said, to give them the representation needed at the local, state and national level.

The Animal Rights Movement, state and national government regulation, and state and federal legislation are just a few of the many concerns of livestock people in this area, Bruning added.

CEDAR COUNTY Livestock Feeders Association officers and directors planned a membership drive in Cedar County, which started Feb. 29 in Coleridge.

A strong membership base is an essential part of effective representation in all matters concerning livestock people.

Other directors of the Cedar County Livestock Feeders Association include: Richard Heine, Harlington, vice president; Larry Paulsen, Coleridge, secretary-treasurer; Norman Vogel and Roger Jorgensen, Coleridge; Terry Pinkelman, Wynot; Dave Hoelsing, Harlington; Dick Theis and Paul Korih, Randolph; and Larry Smith, Laurel.

With the recent Nebraska Supreme Court ruling of the evaluation of Nebraska farmland, it is even more important that livestock producers join and support their association, Bruning said. We have a continuing challenge of keeping the personal property tax off of livestock, machinery and business inventory, he added.

Block extends farm program sign-up period

Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block had extended the sign-up period for 1984 cotton, feed grain, rice and wheat programs by three weeks, through March 16.

Block also said he has changed summer fallow rules so that the requirements would be the same as they were in 1983 and previous programs. Prior to this action, acreage designated for the 1984 programs could not have been land intended for summer fallow in the current year. Other provisions of the 1984 programs will remain unchanged, he said.

Block said he took these actions to clear away some of the obstacles which made it difficult for farmers to make sound decisions about the programs. Also, many farmers have not been able to finalize crop operating plans including financing and lease arrangements. Since producers must sign a binding contract in the 1984 acreage reduction programs, with liquidated damages for failure to comply, they are reluctant to sign up until their operating plans are more complete, he said.

Both USDA and private sector analysts say that when most farmers compare these programs with their advantage, Block said. This extension will give producers the time needed to weigh the benefits of participation against the risks of no price protection, which they would otherwise face.

Block encouraged farmers to avoid a last minute rush to USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Services county offices so that they can better serve each farmer.

Water outlook good for West

Despite below normal precipitation in most of the West in January, the outlook for the region's water supply for the year remains good, the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Department of Commerce reported.

Peter C. Myers, chief of USDA's Soil Conservation Service, said the agency's latest snow surveys show a very low snowpack accumulation since Jan. 1 on most of the West's mountain ranges.

Over much of the region, the first month this year may go down in weather records as the driest January in the West. Major exceptions were several snow courses in western Colorado that set or tied previous records.

AREAS WHERE snowpacks remained below normal were western Oregon, western Washington, central and northern Idaho, central Arizona, all of western Montana, and nearly all of the areas draining into the Missouri River.

Water stored in reservoirs remains about average levels throughout the West, and snowmelt in the spring probably still will push all lakes in the Great Basin to or close to their highest water levels of this century.

State energy office will distribute funds to schools

The Nebraska Energy Office is preparing to distribute more than $4 million in Nebraska School Weatherization Program funds to qualified public school districts.

To help prepare school officials as the program enters its sixth cycle, the energy office has scheduled a series of informational meetings to review program procedures and answer questions of administrators and school board members. An energy office team will visit with Norfolk area officials today (Thursday) at the Holiday Inn.

The meeting will run from 9 a.m. through noon.

Kandra Hahn, director of the Nebraska Energy Office, explained that the program money is to be used to finance projects which will help schools save money by decreasing their energy use. If a school district receives a grant, the state pays between 80 and 85 percent of the estimated cost of the project, while the school district picks up the remaining costs. "Most corporate administrators now recognize that money used on energy efficiency projects will be paid back in one to fifteen years through the energy that's saved. We want to help our schools get in on those savings," she said.

The deadline to submit applications to the NEO is April 20. All grants will be awarded by June 22. "The Nebraska Energy Office is here to help in the filling out of applications," Hahn said.

In the first 5 grant cycles, nearly $9 million was awarded to more than 200 school districts. Funded projects include adding insulation to walls and ceilings, installing storm window, weatherstripping doors, putting thermostat controls on radiators and heating systems, installing new boilers and burners, replacing incandescent lights with fluorescent fixtures, etc.

An annual dollar savings of approximately $2.4 million is expected from the 1,415 projects awarded. This represents a yearly energy savings equal to 92,249 barrels of imported oil.

"This weatherization program allows schools to be at the forefront of energy conservation in Nebraska," Hahn said.
