THE WAYNE HERALD

Senatorial candidates eye Exon's office

Republican forum held

Half of the Republican candidates for the U.S. Senate seat held by James Exon were in Wayne Friday night to promote their campaigns.

A Republican forum, organized by Wayne County Republican Chairman Charles Maas, was held in the Woman's Club room of the Wayne city auditorium.

Candidates Ken Cameron, Fred Lockwood and Richard Thompson attended the forum while John DeCamp, George Boucher and Nancy Hoch turned down invitations.

Each candidate was allowed nine minutes to speak, six minutes to answer questions from the audience and three minutes to make closing remarks.

Some of the candidates' comments are included here.

Ken Cameron of Blair
Cameron said the shape of the state has changed 180 degrees under President Reagan. He added that if the Republicans lose five seats in the Senate, Reagan will be "dead in the water."

"I decided that people need a voice in Washington from Nebraska," Cameron said, explaining why he declared his candidacy. He added that Exon voted in agreement with Reagan only 32 percent of the time.

Addressing the ailing farm situation, Cameron summed up his feelings in nine words: "We grow too much and we sell too little," he said.

The Blair candidate said he does not favor restrictions on growing because that is government control. "We have to begin selling our products. If we wait, nothing will happen. I would like to see a free market," said Cameron, accusing "(former president) Carter and Exon" of eliminating the market.

During the question and answer period, Cameron told the audience that Nebraska has no connection in Washington. "My connection is through Reagan," he said. He said a booming economy is the way to get out of the deficit.

When asked how the United States can sell more commodities, he replied: "We can't take our product and yell down a well and sell it. We have to package our products to meet the needs and we need to promote."

In his closing remarks, Cameron told his listeners that we need to join the recovery that is going on today in the U.S. "Exon doesn't believe in selling Nebraska. I want to be that reliable Republican Senator from Nebraska."

Fred Lockwood of Gering
Lockwood told the audience that his background gives him the tools to serve as Senator. He said he has a background in certified public accounting, business and farming. He served four years as a Republican county chairman.

The candidate said that the number one issue in Nebraska is the agricultural economy. "I see the frustration they have in their faces and there is no easy solution," he said.

He added that the farm bill recently passed for 1984 has some problems but is important.

Lockwood said the tax system is another real concern. "People feel it's not fair and in many ways it's not," he said.

Addressing the issue of nuclear arms, Lockwood said he is totally opposed to a nuclear arm freeze but added that he would accept a nuclear build down program. He pointed out to his listeners that the Soviet Union violated the Salt I and II treaties.

When asked how he would try to balance the budget, Lockwood said he would be in favor of cutting excess spending. He added that entitlement programs need to be looked at for possible cuts. There are far too many programs that need to be trimmed, he added.

In his closing remarks, Lockwood reminded the audience that in the last 10 years, Nebraska Republicans have lost five of six elections for senatorial and gubernatorial seats.

"We have two Democratic senators and a Democratic governor and I feel I'm the breath of fresh air from the west. Nebraska needs a senator with independent thinking. Exon is becoming more and more liberal."

Richard Thompson of Lincoln
Thompson, a Newman Grove native, has ties to Wayne. He attended Wayne State College two years before obtaining his degree from the University of Nebraska College of Law. His wife is the former Dorothy Bilson of Wayne.

The candidate said that we need to turn grain commodities into products for which there is demand. He added that incentives need to be offered to business and agriculture.

"We need to do everything we can to stimulate agriculture. We need to do more for ourselves," Thompson said.

He said one of the reasons he entered the senatorial race is because of President Reagan, a man he said he has supported throughout.

"There is a challenge before us to control the Senate so Reagan can have one body to work with," Thompson said that former Senator Carl Curly told him Nebraska could be pivotal to who controls the Senate. It could become the "Tip and Teddy Show," he said referring to Tip O'Neill and Ted Kennedy.

Thompson said he believes the Reagan program has been successful but added that it needs to continue

"Reagan is not a deficit man, he is a deficit eliminator. I want to help him get the job done."

The candidate said that real peace can be achieved through real strength in defense. The two superpowers both respect strong defenses, he added.

In his closing remarks, Thompson asked the audience what Exon has done in the Senate for five years. He added that Exon's terms as governor were made easy because of ground work laid by the Thieman administration.

Bill to outlaw video slot machines passes, awaits Kerrey signature

A bill that would ban video lottery machines in Nebraska beginning Jan. 1, 1985 was passed 46-0 by the Legislature Monday. It was then sent to Gov. Bob Kerrey for his signature, which is expected soon.

Legislative Bill 744 contains an emergency clause that will put the bill into effect immediately after Kerrey signs it.

ONCE SIGNED, the bill will prohibit Nebraska cities or counties that haven't already authorized video machines from authorizing their use.

Wayne is one of seven cities or counties in the state to authorize use of the machines. City Administrator Phil Kloster said Wayne's video machine business has grown considerably since machines were placed in town last October.

Kloster said the machines are currently netting about $1,400 a week. If the bill is signed, Wayne will be required to immediately move its machines from all other communities. The ones in Wayne will be allowed to operate until Jan. 1.

Plans were being made in Wayne to use the city's share of the profits for improvements to the softball complex and senior citizens center, Kloster said.

THE BILL had stirred controversy in the Legislature before it was passed by a lopsided margin. Proponents of the video ban agreed to go along with a delay in outlawing the machines until Jan. 1 in exchange for an emergency clause which prohibits any further authorization of video lotteries in Nebraska.

The video lottery bill was passed with only three days remaining in the session.

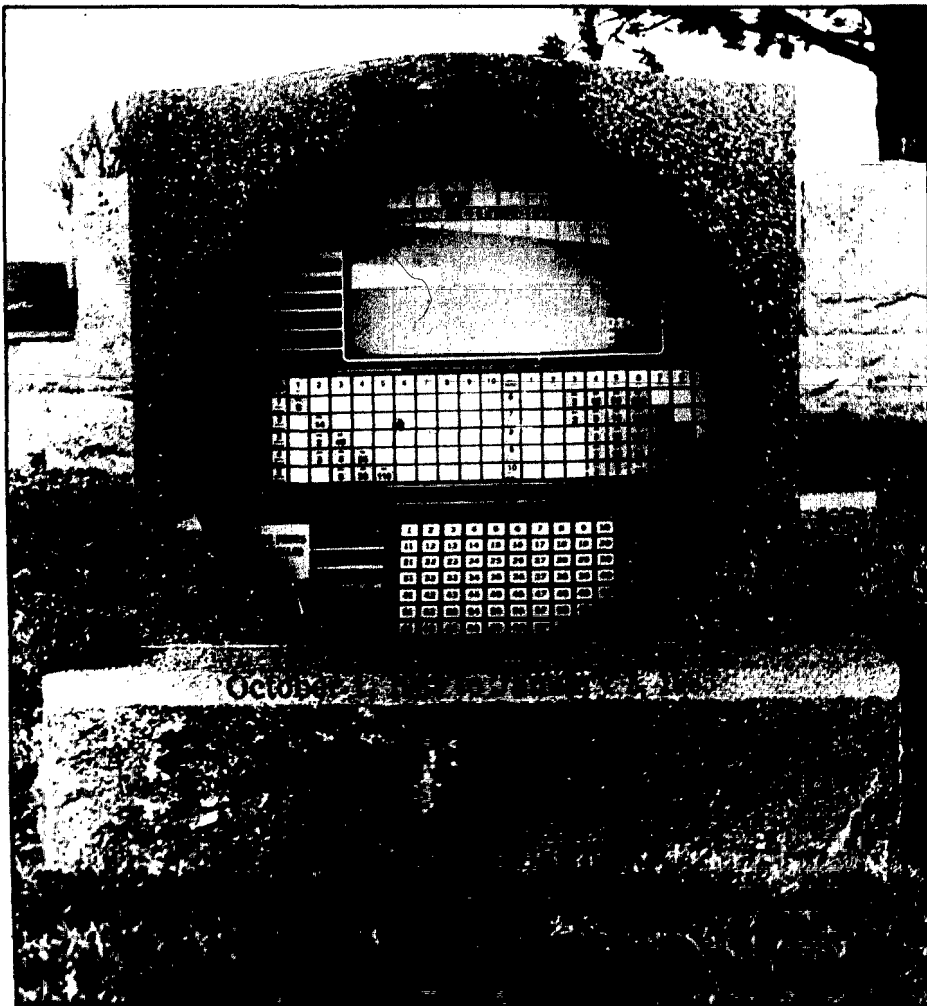

Senator Loran Schmit of Bellwood was present but did not vote. Senators Harry Christner of Schuyler and Glenn Goodrich of Omaha were absent. Schmit is part owner of a company that distributes the video machines.

Omaha Senator Peter Hoagland, who was the leading sponsor of the bill, said that considerable amounts of money were spent by the gambling interests to oppose it.

HE SAID that supporters of legalized video gambling would not get up early. He added that he expects companies that sell the machines to contribute to legislative candidates this year. Twenty-six senators are up for re-election.

South Sioux City officials said their city will lose at least $20,000 a month if the bill passes. The community's share of the video machine profits since mid-September has been more than $100,000, they said.

Plans to place the video machines in the city of Wayne will be announced later.

IF GOV. Kerrey signs LB 744, video lottery machines will be laid to rest Jan. 1.

The breakfast is sponsored by the Golden Rod Hills Council and Tri-County Council of Government and is free to the public. Coffee, rolls and juice will be served.

Last year's legislative breakfast drew more than 400 persons, according to Tim Tushie, publicity chairman for the event.

Autopsy indicates McArdle's death was self-inflicted

An autopsy report released Tuesday afternoon states that Wayne State College football player Kevin McArdle died of a probable self-inflicted gunshot wound.

McArdle, 21, was found dead in his Wayne apartment March 12. McArdle's roommate, Bill Luxford, discovered the body on McArdle's bed at about 8:30 a.m. that day.

County Attorney and Coroner Bob Ensz said that the information collected by the autopsy indicates that McArdle's death was self-inflicted.

Dr. Gene Herbek of St. Luke's Regional Medical Center morgue in Sioux City performed the autopsy.

THE REPORT Herbek gave to Ensz said that blood tests found no evidence of any controlled substance in McArdle's body.

However, tests did determine an alcohol content of 16 percent, which is above Nebraska's legal intoxication level of 10 percent.

According to the report, the shotgun blast entered McArdle's chest at a slightly downward angle and did not exit the body.

Ensz said that McArdle died sometime after 2:30 a.m. on March 12. A 12-gauge shotgun, believed to be owned by McArdle, was found on the floor near the bed.

LUXFORD WAS asleep in his bedroom next to McArdle's room but did not hear the shot which probably was muffled, Ensz said.

The county attorney said that the barrel of the shotgun apparently was in contact with McArdle's chest. Because the blast did not exit the body, it would have been greatly muffled, Ensz explained.

McArdle, a junior at Wayne State, was a three-year starter for the WSC football team and a professional football prospect. He had one year of athletic eligibility remaining.

As a linebacker for the Wildcats, McArdle was named honorable mention NAIA Division I All-American for last season.

The 6-5, 230-pound McArdle led the Wildcats with 152 tackles during the 1984 season. The 1981 graduate of Omaha Roncalli High School was majoring in physical education.

Legislature struggles to end business

viewpoint

The days have become long and hectic as the Legislature struggles to finish its legislative business before the session draws to a close on April 9.

Attention was primarily focused on the governor's line-item vetoes of the appropriation bills and how the Legislature was going to react to them. However, there were several other bills of importance acted upon during the week.

On Monday, the Unicameral considered LB 892, the measure which establishes the income and sales tax rates. For the first time, responsibility for setting the tax rates rests with the Legislature. Previously, sales and income tax rates were set by the State Board of Equalization and Assessment made up of the governor, state auditor, state treasurer, secretary of state, and the tax commissioner.

WHEN ADVANCED to select file, the bill called for a sales tax rate of 3 1/2 percent and an income tax rate of 19 percent. The sales tax rate is currently 4 percent although one-half percent of this is a temporary tax which automatically terminated at the end of March. Although the 19 percent income tax rate represents a true reduction of 1 percent from the current 20 percent tax rate, it is unfortunate that more budget restraint couldn't have been exercised by the Legislature allowing for greater tax relief. The Legislature also considered LB 530 early in the week. This bill would gradually phase out the 5 percent per gallon tax exemption which gasoline currently receives. I supported an effort to reject the bill which succeeded in stalling it on general file. I do not support the measure because I think it will have a detrimental effect on the gasoline industry. Production of gasoline creates an increased demand for corn which in turn benefits farmers by the resulting increase in the market price of corn.

This fledgling industry needs the help. The increased economic activity it generates will more than offset the dollar amount of the tax exemption it receives.

A BILL WHICH I co-sponsored advanced to Final Reading on Wednesday morning despite stiff resistance. LB 970 authorizes Wayne State and the other state colleges to offer Masters programs in Business Administration. At present only the university offers the MBA degree.

Our area, served by Wayne State has a need for advanced instruction in business which isn't being adequately served by the university. Approval of this measure will help fulfill this need and improve the ability of Wayne State to meet the demands of the community it serves.

Also on Wednesday, the Legislature advanced LR 235 to Final Reading. This is my priority bill which eliminates the confidentially surrounding judicial disciplinary proceedings.

Although the resolution advanced on a voice vote, I expect intense lobbying against its passage on final reading. If successful, voters will be given the opportunity to vote on its inclusion in the state constitution next November.

THE END OF the week was reserved for attempts to override the Governor's vetoes. The Legislature attempted to restore approximately $7.5 million of the more than $15 million in appropriations which the governor eliminated from the budget on Tuesday afternoon.

An attempt was made to lump all override motions into one so that it could be voted on as a package. However, the effort was unsuccessful. Tactics were then switched and each line-item veto override motion was addressed separately.

I supported successful efforts to restore funding for driver's education and the community based mental retardation programs. These are both excellent programs of benefit to the community which I felt deserved support.

I also voted to restore $250,000 to the budgets of the state colleges. Their needs are often overlooked due to the predominance of the University. All told, several million dollars was restored to the budget before the Legislature adjourned for the weekend.

Killing corruption

Thank goodness the evil devices in our fine community are on their way out. Nebraska's Legislature voted to rid our fine state of those dreaded, devilish video lottery machines.

The world will be a much better place for their actions. There will be no more gambling or corruption. The terrible crime experienced in Wayne as a result of the machines will cease.

There will be no more murders over the machines and no more families will be broken up and in debt because of a "gambling habit" that caused poor victims to mortgage their homes because of addiction to the 25 cent machines.

We all know that Wayne doesn't need improvements made on its softball fields or its senior citizens center. After all, recreation and senior citizens aren't important to our community.

And if any improvements are ever needed, we can always raise taxes. We would all love to pay higher taxes.

The revenue generated for the city from those evil machines should be burned. We don't dare use money raised from gambling to help improve our town. Never mind that horse racing revenue has led to many improvements in Nebraska.

Getting rid of the video machines is bound to cure the addiction of all gamblers. They will no longer lose $100 per race at the horse or dog races.

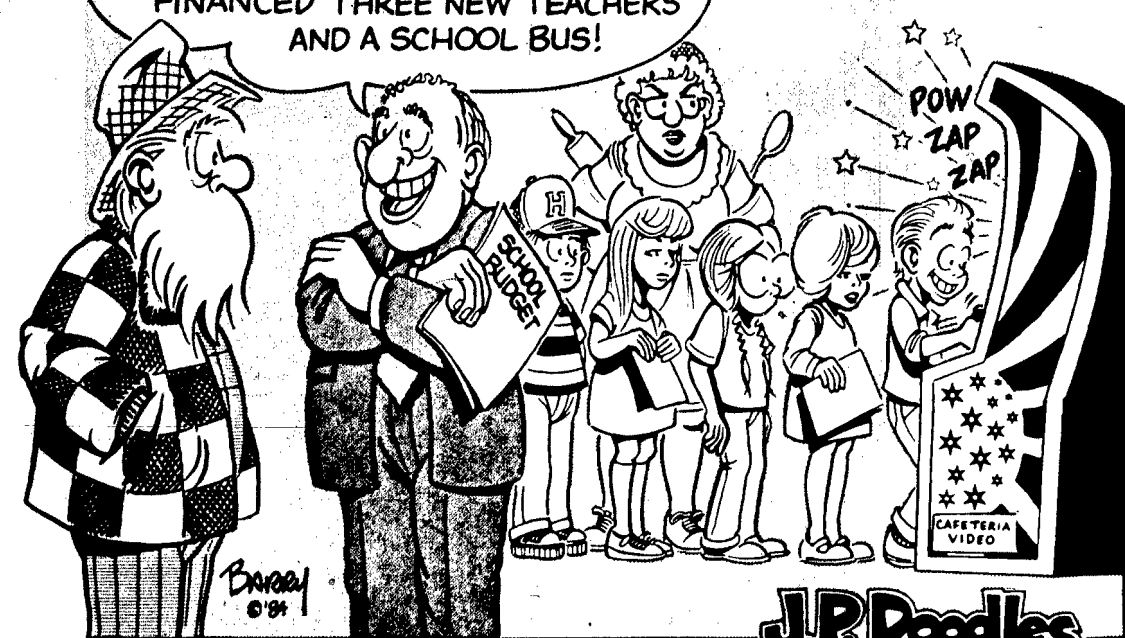

They will not place illegal bets on football games with local bookies. They'll never spend their money on punch boards, raffles, bingo or poker games. And of course, none of them will ever take their money outstate to Las Vegas to blow it on blackjack tables or slot machines.

We've solved all of our problems with one simple legislative bill. Our children will be able to walk the streets of Wayne and other Nebraska communities without ever having to fear that they will fall prey to the awful video lottery machines.

Instead they can continue to spend their quarters to shoot invaders from outer space in numerous video games that will educate them and help them in their future.

Thank goodness all of our problems are solved. How lucky we are. By Randy Hascall, Wayne Herald editor

Women in history celebrated

To the editor: As organizers of the Women's History Week Project we would like to publicly thank the many individuals and organizations that made our celebration possible.

Anna Meier, Lucile Larson and Mildred Jones are the first in a long list of individuals. Thanks to these wonderful women we were able to glimpse at a past that will never be seen again. These women provided us with a lively evening of reminiscences from the past that will be long remembered.

A special thank you to Jacqueline St. John for speaking on the contribution of women throughout American history. Her enthusiasm inspired pride in our role as women.

The Wayne County Historical Society and the Mill Creek Museum of Alma, Kan. provided us with many wonderful items for our display case. We are grateful for the contribution they made in recalling the lives of women from a different era. We are especially grateful to Bess Baier and Myrtle Thierer for their counsel and advice.

We are also thankful for the combined efforts of the Campus Coalition for Women who sponsored the event, the WSC Humanities Division who funded the films, the AAUW for sponsoring Jacqueline St. John from UNO as a speaker, and U S Conn Library at WSC for use of display space.

A great deal of work was involved by many people, bringing forth a memorable week of activities which reminded us of the rich heritage we share as women in America. Thanks again to all who participated in this event.

In-state, out-state bankers struggle over bill

By Melvin Paul, Nebraska Press Association

State lawmakers struggled with dozens of major and minor problems last week. Their last full week of the 1984 session.

Among the last minute flare-ups was a struggle between in-state and out-of-state bankers over a bill which could play a role solving some of the problems related to the Commonwealth Savings Company insolvency.

United Banks of Colorado, a giant Denver based holding company, continued to promote its offer to acquire some of the Commonwealth assets and the legislative bill which it needs to enter the banking business in Nebraska. In-state bankers, concerned about the potential competition, stepped up their lobbying effort to defeat the legislation, LB 1027.

GOV. BOB KERREY said he's undecided whether to sign the bill if it gets to his desk. LB 1027 would allow out-of-state holding companies to enter Nebraska to acquire a failed industrial loan and investment company such as Commonwealth.

Once in the state, the holding company would have the same privileges as a Nebraska bank holding company, including the right to acquire additional banks and as much as $1.5 billion in deposits.

Lawmakers also sent nine bills to Kerrey which called for $850.2 million in state general fund spending over the next 15 months.

Kerrey promptly returned some of them with $15 million in line-item vetoes and more vetoes were expected.

Lawmakers attempted to override some of the Kerrey vetoes later in the week. The give and take between the executive and legislative branches on the fiscal year 1984-85 state budget is expected to continue until next Monday (April 9), when the lawmakers will adjourn for the year.

AT WEEK'S END, Kerrey and the lawmakers were hoping to accommodate spending with rates of 3.5 percent for the sales tax and 19 percent of federal liability for the individual income tax. The current state sales tax is 3.5 percent and the income tax rate is 20 percent.

Kerrey's own office appropriation for next year, $582,335, was the target of verbal blasts on the floor of the Legislature as senators saw many of their own favored projects fall to the governor's veto pen. The governor's office appropriation, which includes funds for additional staff, represents a 38.4 percent increase over the current year appropriation.

Lawmakers decided tentatively last week to prohibit state government investments in many of the companies which do business in South Africa. Lawmakers advanced the disinvestment bill 25-11 from first round debate.

As introduced by Sen. Ernest Chambers of Omaha, the bill, LB 553, would have required the state to divest itself totally from companies that do business in South Africa in return for that country's official policy of apartheid, the separation under the law of blacks and whites.

BEFORE ADVANCEMENT, however lawmakers weakened the original measure. As amended the bill would allow continued investment in companies doing business in South Africa if they have agreed to, and are making progress in implementing, a set of principles which foster equality between the races.

Teachers, administrators and other public school employees who retire in the future would receive significantly increased pension benefits under a bill given 38-4 first round approval last week.

To fund the improved benefits provided in LB 457 state government, local school districts and the employees themselves would increase their contributions to the retirement plan by $22.4 million annually, a 73 percent increase.

Sen. Chris Beutler called the bill "the biggest rip-off of this session." Beutler said the strong legislative support for the bill is largely the result of colleagues' guilt over killing a proposal to increase teachers' salaries through an annual stipend.

Economic future related to agriculture

By Cheryl Stubbendiek, Nebraska Farm Bureau

It's always pleasant when empirical evidence confirms one's strongly held, if subjective, beliefs. Those who believe that smaller communities will continue to be interdependent with agriculture find such confirmation in a recent marketing study conducted for the city of Chadron.

Chadron, long a regional trade center in the northern Panhandle, undertook the study to provide direction for its future. Local businessmen and other citizens wondered whether the community should shift its focus from an ag orientation to something else. The study conducted by two Colorado firms shows that Chadron is on the right track.

Agriculture accounted for 16 percent of total employment in Dawes County where Chadron is located, compared with 21 percent for the state as a whole. 25 percent for retail trade and 4 percent for transportation, communication and utilities. The value of ag products sold was $10 million in 1978, and for the four county northern Panhandle area, more than $132 million. Travel and tourism had an impact of just over $13 million on the county in 1981, while industrial activity has declined steadily over the past 20 years.

THERE ARE MANY more figures in the report, but the bottom line is that Chadron's economic future lies in increasing its strength as an agricultural center.

One exciting concept proposed for the city is development of an agribusines center of agricultural business park. Such a park, or agricultural shopping mall, would include retail activities, such as farm implement dealers, sales and service of farming and ranching supplies and professional services geared to the ag community, including legal, veterinary, agricultural business and finance. It also could include processing, packaging and the distribution facilities for raw products produced in the Chadron area. Such an ag business center would be unique in the state and would help to attract the retail trade area. In addition, the center would benefit Chadron State College and vice versa.

The college would be strengthened through locally available expertise and job opportunities, and the college would be available as a source for quality research and help with development activity.

ANOTHER EXCITING idea is re-establishment of a flour mill in Chadron. The old family owned mill burned down in 1982 when the owners were near retirement. It wasn't rebuilt and 25 jobs were lost along with a nearby market for producers.

The new mill would be more of a wheat processing center to take advantage of the area's high protein hard red winter wheat (Flour 93) gluten and alcohol could be produced in such a facility. By products from legal feed and meat processing facilities. Chadron's idea for a wheat processing center that attracted the interest and support of the state's Department of Economic Development. Along with Nebraska's agricultural producers, the department sees the need to add value to ag products before they leave the state.

The study notes that much of this new economic activity should be supported by private or quasi-public sources, although the staff assistance of the Department of Economic Development is certainly appropriate and welcome.

One local leader notes the need for a one cent sales tax, a move which traditionally has been opposed by people living outside the city. These people, who use and enjoy city services, can logically be expected to share in the cost of them.

The Chadron study, costing $20,000, was certainly money well spent, because it confirms the interdependency of the city and area ranchers and farmers. If anyone in the city doubts the returns from that investment, they need only look at other Nebraska cities and towns where the business community has neglected the surrounding area agricultural producers, to the communities' lasting regret.

Cancer Society kicks off crusade in Wayne County

April is Cancer Control Month and the Wayne County unit of the American Cancer Society has launched its annual county wide crusade.

The unit held its kickoff meeting March 29 and is now working toward the goal of visiting every home in the county with life saving information.

County President Donna Hansen said during the month volunteers will call on homes with educational and informational material.

Volunteers also will be asking for contributions to help support the work of the American Cancer Society.

"HOPE IS keynote," said Mrs. Hansen, adding that during the last 20 years deaths in children from cancer have been cut in half.

Mrs. Hansen, along with Bonnie Sandahl and Linda Baddorf of Wayne, attended the American Cancer Society's state crusade kickoff in Lincoln on March 31.

During the session, volunteers learned that the major educational focus of the American Cancer Society during the next few years will be on colorectal cancer.

Some 1,100 Nebraskans are estimated to get colorectal cancer in 1984 and 500 to die from it. However, advances in early detection and treatment have provided the means to save two thirds of all persons getting this type of cancer.

RESIDENTIAL chairman for this year's crusade in Wayne is Chris Giese. Assisting her are Zita Jenkins, south Wayne, and Marcie Uken, north Wayne.

Brent Pedersen is chairman of Wayne's business district crusade.

Community Theatre expands board, plans for upcoming plays

Wayne Community Theatre elected officers Monday night and voted to expand its board of directors by two members. Chosen as officers were Lyla Seymour, vice president; and Char Blake, treasurer.

They will take office in October when current vice president Helen Russell moves to president, and Hazel Engle retires as treasurer.

DICK MANLEY, current president, said Community Theatre members attending the annual meeting at the Black Knight also voted to expand the board from seven to nine members.

"We think the extra members will bring new people and new ideas to promote dramatic arts in Wayne," said Manley.

Three new directors elected to join the board are Margaret Lundstrom, Gwen Brandenburg and John Merriman — all with a long-time interest in theatre. One current board member, Clyde Flowers, was re-elected.

Jan Merriman will continue to serve as secretary of the board for another year, and Manley will continue as president.

NEXT PRODUCTION of Wayne Community Theatre will be a revival of the classic melodrama, "East Lynne," a late 18th century play which will fit into Wayne's centennial celebration.

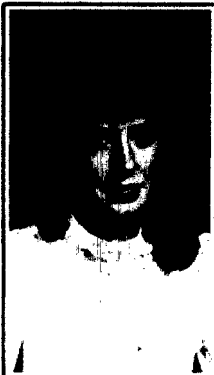

The play will be staged Friday and Saturday, May 4-5, in Ley Theatre in the Bradenburg Education building on the Wayne State College campus.

Rehearsals for the production are well underway according to Michelle Johnson, a Wayne State student directing "East Lynne."

HELEN RUSSELL reported progress on the Community Theatre's other major effort this year — a centennial pageant scheduled to be performed during the Labor Day weekend.

It will be an original production with research, writing and production by Dr. Russell and Margaret Lundstrom.

The pageant will recount Wayne's first century with 10 scenes — one for each decade from 1884 to 1984 — and will feature a variety of songs and dance to spice the dialogue by fictional characters representing residents of the community.

Hi Everyone!
Will it ever get snowing? Even the robins look rather doubtful. It seems so dreary that I put on some music to brighten up things some.

Welcome to school. Ulrich and Dorothy Thun. Hope that you enjoy your stay with us.

Deep sympathy goes out to the families of Robert Kraus who passed away on March 10. Gladys Nisco also on the 10th. Art Reed on March 11. Marlene Walter on March 14 and Ben Richardson on March 14. We will miss them all.

Among the activities at the home are movies on Monday afternoon. Also on Monday there is a short church service by Pastor Gordon. On the second Monday of each month, St. Mary's ladies come with treats. The Redeemer ladies come on Thursday, the 12th to help with bingo playing. They furnish popcorn for us to enjoy while watching the movies.

On Tuesday afternoon, we have a sing-a-long in the dining room.

On Wednesday afternoon we have cards and dominoes in the dining room.

The Home received a professional bingo set from the family of George Baird. I know that every bingo lover is going to enjoy it and thank you.

On Friday there is bingo for a small group in the chapel room.

On Saturday is Rhythm Band which sometimes has a violinist and accordionist for accompanying. It has been on the 3rd Thursday, the Altone ladies come with treats.

State more than at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln because here I'm exposed to a cross-section of social science teachers. At UN-L I was only exposed to economic instructors," he said.

Massoudnia, a native of Tehran, Iran, received his B.S. degree in mathematics and economics management from Karadji School in Iran in 1974.

HE THEN came to the United States and received his master's degree from Texas A. and M. University in 1977. He went on to receive his Ph.D. in economics from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln in 1983.

Massoudnia taught at UN-L as a graduate assistant and as a full-time faculty member before coming to Wayne State College in the fall of 1982.

HE IS A member of the Economics Graduate Student Association, the American Economics Association, the Association for Evolutionary Economics, and the Nebraska Economics and Business Association.

His hobbies include playing volleyball and reading.

The Wayne State College European Programs will be using some internationally known sites as classrooms this summer.

In addition to living quarters once used by Hans Christian Andersen on Nyhavn in the city of Copenhagen, Denmark, and the well-known hotels Kalastajatorpe in Helsinki, Finland and Alhambra in Granada, Spain, participants in the program will have an opportunity to attend the Passion Play in Oberammergau, Germany.

THE WSC international program, now in its 15th year, offers opportunities for participants to travel and learn about foreign cultures through four different programs offered in June and July.

The Scandinavian Program (June 5-19) is conducted in Copenhagen, Stockholm, Helsinki and includes a three-day tour to Leningrad, Russia.

The Spanish Program (June

6-28) is centered in Valencia with a nine day tour to Granada, Seville and Madrid.

Two programs in Germany are offered, June 6-28 and June 27-July 16. Each German program includes an attendance at the Passion Play as well as colorful tours through eastern France, Switzerland, Austria and southern Germany.

PARTICIPANTS can earn from three to six undergraduate credit or three hours graduate credit depending upon program selection, or just enjoy an enriching learning experience.

The programs are open to the public as well as to students who must be at least a high school senior.

Persons who would like free brochures are asked to call (402) 375-2200, ext. 229, or write to International Programs Office, Wayne State College, Wayne, Neb., 68787.

SEVEN AREA HIGH SCHOOL seniors have been offered Board of Trustees Scholarships to attend Wayne State College, including David Remer, Colette Gehner, Francine Gross and LeAnn Janke, all of Wayne-Carroll High School, Carol Osborne and Monica Hanson, both of Laurel-Concord High School, and Sheila Koch of Allen High School. Remer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Remer of Wayne, plans to major in pre-medicine, and Gehner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Gehner of Wayne, plans to major in business administration. Gross is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Pat Gross of Wayne. Janke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Byron Janke of Carroll, plans to major in English. Osborne, daughter of James and Barbara Osborne of Laurel, plans to major in pre-dentistry, and Koch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy Koch of Concord, plans to major in business administration with an emphasis in finance and marketing. Hanson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hanson of Concord, will major in accounting. Board of Trustees Scholarships provide for full tuition for four years at Wayne State College.

Center is established

The question of economics can be answered closer to home with the recent establishment of a Center for Economic Education at Wayne State College.

The establishment of the center was recently approved by the National Joint Council for Economic Education and the Nebraska Council for Economic Education.

The Wayne State center becomes the fifth center in the Nebraska Council's network.

WAYNE STATE College President Ed Elliott, also a member of the executive council of the Nebraska Council for Economic Education, has appointed Cliff Ginn, Wayne State social science division head, to be director of the Wayne State center.

Ginn said basic functions of the center will be to promote economic education and understanding within the school systems of northeast Nebraska.

"I look forward to working with area teachers and also with leaders of area community organizations in promoting economic understanding both among our school population and the general public," Ginn said.

ELLIOTT FEELS the center will provide an excellent opportunity for residents in northeast Nebraska.

"An important benefit of the center will be the actual delivery of courses in economics to people in the area to improve the whole notion of economic understanding," Elliott said.

Activities planned by the center include the offering of a course in June at Wayne State titled "Economics for Teachers" a workshop for teachers as well as the development of further workshops and courses for teachers.

Competing in forensics

Wayne State College students Marita Morris Whetstone, Corinne Morris and David Blenderman will travel to Georgia Southern College in Statesboro, Ga. April 26-28 to compete in the National Forensics Tournament.

Forensics is the art of formal debate. Coach at Wayne State is Ron White, instructor of humanities.

Whetstone, a senior from McCook, has garnered numerous honors for herself through the WSC forensics team, recently qualifying to compete in five argumentative public discussion events at the national forensics

The events in which Whetstone qualified for are poetry interpretation, prose interpretation, informative public address, persuasion and duet acting.

WHETSTONE interprets works by Howard Moss and Joyce Kilmer Oates for poetry and prose interpretations respectively, as well as interprets two of her own compositions in the areas of informative public address and persuasion.

She teams up with fellow WSC student David Blenderman to present a cutting of Preston Jones' "Texas Trilogy" in the area of duet acting.

Whetstone and Blenderman took first place with this piece at the state championship on March 3. Whetstone also placed third in prose interpretation, fourth in informative public address, and ranked in the top six in poetry interpretation at the same meet.

She earned enough points at the state tournament to place fourth in the pentathlon.

Whetstone, who is in her first year of forensic competition, plans to graduate in May with a speech communications major and a theatre minor.

BLENDERMAN, a sophomore at Wayne State and a native of Wayne, qualified to compete in three events at the National Forensics Tournament.

He qualified for one piece in the prose interpretation category and two pieces in the duet acting category.

He will be assisted by Corinne Morris in one duet acting piece and Whetstone in the other.

MORRIS, a Wayne State senior from Carroll, qualified to compete in the national tournament in the category of duet acting, teaming up with Blenderman.

THIRTY-SIX council members were chosen for their ability to represent their own and similar organizations, for their technical expertise, and for their experience in making policy within their organizations.

The mission of the council is to review current health promotion activities occurring in the state, the available data concerning the occurrence of preventable morality, morbidity, and health risk factors, and the aspects of the State Health Plan related to health promotion.

The council also will recommend to the Statewide Health Coordinating Council a state health promotion plan.

IN ADDITION, the council will foster cooperation and coordination between agencies and programs interested in health promotion, and will foster the development of statewide programs designed to meet the intent of the State Health Promotion Plan.

The first meeting of the council took place April 3 in Lincoln, coinciding with Governor Kerrey's signing a proclamation declaring April as Health Promotion Month.

Elliott's appointment to the council is for a one-year term.

Stopping shattercane takes big effort

How do you keep moles from digging in yards?
Moles feed mostly on earthworms, grub and other insect larvae found in the soil. Their long burrows are sometimes seen on the surface of the ground and may be a nuisance in lawns and gardens. Although they do not eat much plant material, mice which use the same burrow systems may destroy bulbs and roots.

Because of their feeding habits, attempts to poison moles with toxic grain may be unsuccessful. Fumigants may be effective when used according to label directions.

Generally, trapping the moles or eliminating their food supply are the most effective methods of alleviating mole damage. The most commonly available trap is the harpoon-type, sold in many hardware and garden supply stores. Instructions for setting the trap are provided by the manufacturer. Choker traps and claw-traps are also available for mole control.

Elimination of worms, grubs, and larvae from a lawn or garden usually will cause moles to leave in search of food. To control these food items, apply an appropriate insecticide to the soil. All toxicants, fumigants and insecticides should be used only according to label directions. Some insecticides may be harmful to beneficial wildlife such as birds which also feed on larvae and earthworms.

Moles often invade lawns and gardens from adjacent wooded areas, ravines or similar areas. Insecticide treatment of a 20 to 40-foot barrier strip along the side of the lawn or garden will usually discourage moles from invading these areas.

Shelterbelt repair
Shelterbelts stopped a lot of snow this winter and in some instances caused damage to the trees. Evergreen usually receive most of the damage. Snow can strip all of the branches from pines and cedars. Most of the time the pines retain their leaders, whereas, the cedars can be entirely squashed.

When the evergreen leader (the very top-most branch) has been broken, drive or tie a stake near the center of the tree and tie with cord the most flexible remaining branch to the stake. It will become the new leader, and provide the tree with height growth.

When branches have been literally pulled out of the trunk of the tree, nothing can be done except to pile them where they will not interfere with growth. Where they have been broken, pruning the brush flush with the parent stem or trunk will result in early healing.

In some pines only the leader will remain, or just some tufts of needles. Leave this tree alone to let it recover in the way best suited for itself.

Damaged shrubs or deciduous trees can be severely pruned and make an excellent recovery in just a few years.

Check cedar windbreaks
Many cedar trees in windbreaks in southeast Nebraska in particular are severely infected with Cercospora needle blight, a University of Nebraska extension forester said this week.

Dennis M. Adams said numerous calls from landowners and inspection of samples have revealed the disease to be prevalent in cedars and junipers.

"Control is necessary, as severe infections over three or more years can kill the trees," Adams said. Often landowners do not recognize the problem until the disease is in the severe stage, he added.

Cercospora needle blight is readily distinguished from other juniper diseases because it infects older foliage first. Browning of foliage occurs from the interior of the tree crown outward and from the lower to the higher branches. Severely infected trees may have only a small tuft of green foliage on the branch tips, Adams said.

The blight can be controlled effectively by spraying with bordeaux mixture. At least two applications are necessary for best control, the forester said. Apply the first treatment during the second or third week of June and the second or about the third week of July.

Time to seed lawns
"I didn't get the lawn seeded last fall. Is spring a good time to do this?"
This is a question frequently asked by homeowners, a University of Nebraska extension horticulturist said. And the answer is "yes," if the seeding is done in time to allow grass plants to develop before hot weather.

Fall is definitely the best time to seed a lawn, according to Don Steinegger, but spring seeding can be successful if recommended practices are used.

Soil should work well after the winter months if not filled white to wet. Moisture is usually available, reducing irrigation time to keep the seedbed wet.

Brown evergreens may be alive
"Don't be in a hurry to cut down evergreens just because the needles browned this past winter," a University of Nebraska extension forester has advised homeowners.

"Give them until the last of May, at least, to see if they recover," said Dennis Adams.

Even though the foliage may be brown, the buds, which produce this year's new growth and green foliage, may be alive, he said. "In five years or less, the browning effects will not be noticeable," Adams said.

The browning comes from drying of needles, which was caused by warm, dry winds during the winter, Adams explained. Conduction of water through the tree is restricted by freezing of plant tissues or frozen soils.

In severe cases, the buds may have been killed, and the tree will not recover, the specialist said. If the tree has not budded out or new growth isn't evident by late May, it may be necessary to remove the stricken tree and plant a new one.

Ford dealer honored
Archie Feeds, Marshalltown, Iowa, recently honored Duane Duediker of Allen by presenting him with a Deaton Fisher casting of a boy feeding a calf.

The casting is mounted on a block of finished wood containing a personalized plate with Duediker's name and the inscription, "We came a long way together, farmer dealer since 1977."

Vigilance and a team effort by farmers, seed companies and university personnel is the key to solving the complex and costly problem of genetic contaminants, classed as weeds, in grain sorghum.

That was the conclusion of representatives of seed firms, university researchers and extension specialists and producers who attended a national conference March 28 in Lincoln. The conference was sponsored by the University of Nebraska Cooperative Extension Service and Agricultural Research Division and the Nebraska Grain Sorghum Development, Utilization and Marketing Board.

In a day-long forum, participants identified the scope and severity of the problem, much of which involves the need to control shattercane. And they agreed that all parties involved in the production process can contribute to solving a problem which a NU extension crops specialist said "has been a deterrent to most effective use of grain sorghum in Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and other states."

Don Hanway said some farmers are sacrificing yield advantages compared to other grains because they fear shattercane problems associated with sorghum.

HANWAY SAID Nebraska has worked on the shattercane problem for 25 years, "and only now does it appear that appropriate technologies and tools exist to bring weedy sorghum under control." But he pointed to another part of the problem, noting that some farmers would not take the risk of reinfestation by planting hybrid seed that they feel might carry contaminants.

Tom Hoegmeyer, a Nebraska sorghum seedsmen, said seed firms are willing to do their part, but this effort must be complemented by correct agronomic management practices by sorghum producers.

Hoegmeyer said seed companies must continue to strive to improve the purity of hybrid sorghum seed. At the same time, farmers must rotate crops and rogue undesirable plants — such as shattercane — from fields. Off-type sorghums must be treated the same as other weeds, he stressed. He said controlling these types of weeds with chemicals alone is not a realistic expectation.

Hoegmeyer said the university must continue to research effective control methods and cultural practices and to educate growers about the effectiveness of these measures.

Orvin Burnside, NU professor of agronomy specializing in weed research, said the axiom of "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" definitely applies to shattercane.

HE AGREED with Hoegmeyer and others that one of the best management practices is to destroy initial shattercane infestations by roguing before seed is produced.

He suggested that farmers ask seed dealers about their firms' methods of checking seed lots for off-type sorghums and whether the companies conduct grow-out tests to determine the possible presence of off-type sorghums in their hybrid seeds.

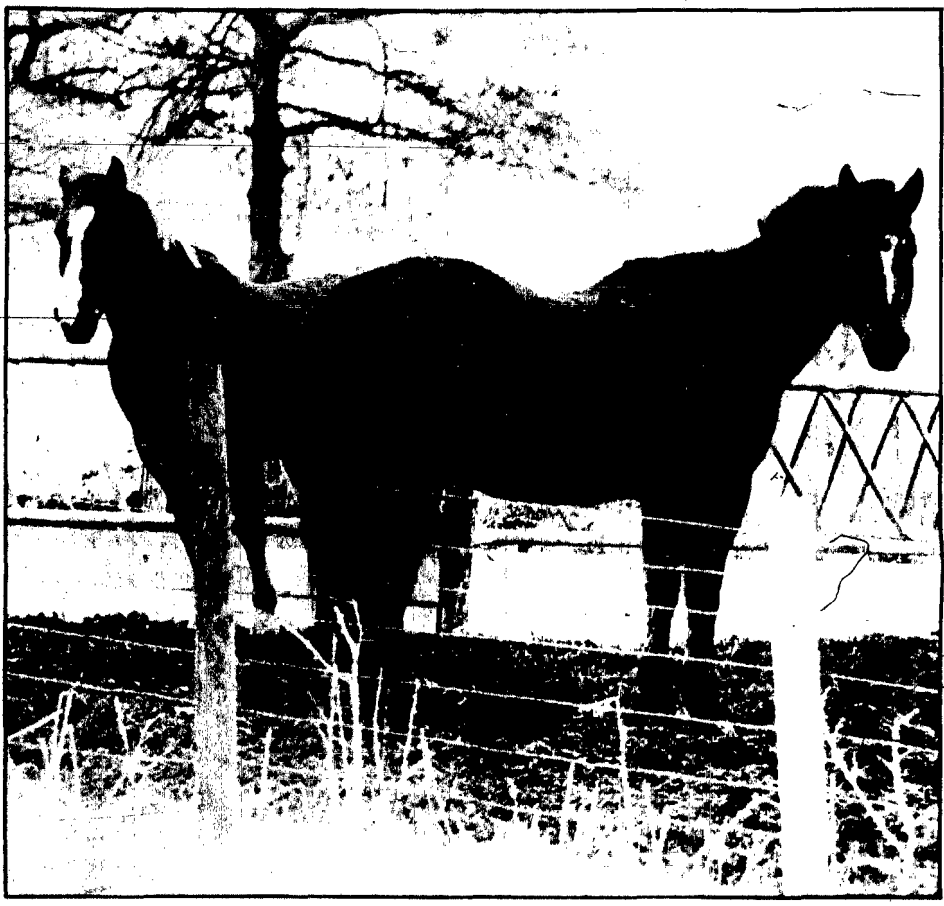

Burnside said commercial seed firms have made substantial improvements in reducing off-types present in hybrid sorghum seed offered for sale through grow-out tests and detailed attention to the entire seed production process. He also said the spread of shattercane from one field to another can be prevented in large part by producers thoroughly cleaning machinery, particularly combines and tillage equipment, before leaving an infested field.

The weed scientist also confirmed that crop rotations can help control shattercane because it cannot compete with small grains, alfalfa or perennial grasses.

MODERATE SHATTERCANE infestations can be controlled in corn and soybeans with a combination of herbicides and cultivation, "but neither herbicides nor cultivation will do the job alone."

Fred Roeth, extension weed control specialist, NU South Central Station, Clay Center, said "at present there are no promising experimental herbicides being evaluated for shattercane control in sorghum."

Selective soil-applied herbicides for shattercane control in corn are available, he said, but two problems make it difficult to maintain acceptable control year after year: accelerated biodegradation of active ingredients in effective herbicides — a herbicide may last only a week instead of four weeks — and the lack of effective postemergence herbicides to control shattercane escapes.

Watch for grass tetany in cattle herds

Grass tetany, a nutritional disorder most often seen in mature cows in early lactation, has been a concern for cow-calf operations during late winter feeding as well as during the change to spring pasture, according to a University of Nebraska extension beef specialist.

Grass tetany is a condition caused by low blood magnesium in ruminant animals such as cattle or sheep. It usually develops during the transition from normal winter feeds to new grass in the spring. The critical period is from early April through May when cows feed on immature, lush grasses.

This winter, however, beef producers have reported cases of grass tetany which is fatal if not treated during the winter feeding months, Paul Guyer said. Those cases occurred following grazing of wheat pastures in the fall or after feeding wheat hay during the winter, he said.

PRAIRIE, GRASS or small grain hay has a lower content of the required magnesium than legume hay such as alfalfa. "We think it's wise to feed some magnesium supplement before going to grass, especially if they (producers) have not been feeding legume hay as a significant portion of the winter feed," Guyer said.

NU beef management researcher John Ward said some conditions are conducive to low magnesium in pasture grasses: heavy fertilizing with nitrogen, soil with high amounts of potassium, and early warm up in the spring followed by cool, wet periods of weather.

In Nebraska, immature grasses such as brome grass are the chief problem for producers when cattle must be on pasture early, especially in pastures closely grazed during the previous year. Ward said he would recommend delaying grazing until grass is six inches or more, but if that is impossible he said a magnesium supplement again is the best way to prevent grass tetany.

MINERAL MIXES available for this purpose should contain from 8 to 16 percent magnesium, Ward said. In order to provide the 10 grams of magnesium needed daily to prevent grass tetany, operators might need to feed as much as a quarter pound of the 8 percent mix daily (half that amount of the 16 percent mix).

One mix recommended by Ward is composed of 50 percent salt, 25 percent dicalcium phosphate and 25 percent magnesium oxide. At the NU Field Lab, Ward said he feeds a mix that is one third ground corn, one third salt and minerals and one third magnesium oxide.

Ready-made protein supplements, range cake or protein blocks containing magnesium also can be purchased.

If an animal contracts the disease, grass tetany must be treated immediately to save the animal. Ward said an intravenous injection of a solution of dextrose containing magnesium and calcium is usually successful.

Cow-calf operators need to check for early symptoms, Ward said, which include weakness, staggering and sometimes aggressive behavior. Later symptoms include paralysis, inability to get up and a resemblance to milk fever. Because the disease progresses so rapidly, producers frequently will recognize the disease only after finding a cow dead, he said.

Guyer said producers need to plan ahead with a veterinarian about what can be done to deal with the recurring problem.

Check cedar windbreaks
Many cedar trees in windbreaks in southeast Nebraska in particular are severely infected with Cercospora needle blight, a University of Nebraska extension forester said this week.

Dennis M. Adams said numerous calls from landowners and inspection of samples have revealed the disease to be prevalent in cedars and junipers.

"Control is necessary, as severe infections over three or more years can kill the trees," Adams said. Often landowners do not recognize the problem until the disease is in the severe stage, he added.

Cercospora needle blight is readily distinguished from other juniper diseases because it infects older foliage first. Browning of foliage occurs from the interior of the tree crown outward and from the lower to the higher branches. Severely infected trees may have only a small tuft of green foliage on the branch tips, Adams said.

The blight can be controlled effectively by spraying with bordeaux mixture. At least two applications are necessary for best control, the forester said. Apply the first treatment during the second or third week of June and the second or about the third week of July.

Time to seed lawns
"I didn't get the lawn seeded last fall. Is spring a good time to do this?"
This is a question frequently asked by homeowners, a University of Nebraska extension horticulturist said. And the answer is "yes," if the seeding is done in time to allow grass plants to develop before hot weather.

Fall is definitely the best time to seed a lawn, according to Don Steinegger, but spring seeding can be successful if recommended practices are used.

Soil should work well after the winter months if not filled white to wet. Moisture is usually available, reducing irrigation time to keep the seedbed wet.

Brown evergreens may be alive
"Don't be in a hurry to cut down evergreens just because the needles browned this past winter," a University of Nebraska extension forester has advised homeowners.

"Give them until the last of May, at least, to see if they recover," said Dennis Adams.

Even though the foliage may be brown, the buds, which produce this year's new growth and green foliage, may be alive, he said. "In five years or less, the browning effects will not be noticeable," Adams said.

The browning comes from drying of needles, which was caused by warm, dry winds during the winter, Adams explained. Conduction of water through the tree is restricted by freezing of plant tissues or frozen soils.

In severe cases, the buds may have been killed, and the tree will not recover, the specialist said. If the tree has not budded out or new growth isn't evident by late May, it may be necessary to remove the stricken tree and plant a new one.

Drug approved Treatment can aid swine reproduction

The potential of a prostaglandin recently approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for use in pregnant sows to induce parturition (farrowing) will be discussed on the weekly "Farm & Ranch report" television program April 5.

Dr. Duane Rice, University of Nebraska extension veterinarian, said several prostaglandins are available, "but all need to be handled with care and utilized specifically at the right time."

Consultation with a veterinarian is a necessity, Rice said, and producers should avoid these drugs unless instructions are followed explicitly on each individual case. Each drug manufactured by the various companies is different.

THE PROSTAGLANDIN product for use in including birthing of pigs "is a reproductive management tool that can cause many adverse effects if not used properly," Rice said.

Dwane Zimmerman, NU professor of animal science specializing in reproductive physiology, will appear on the prostaglandin segment of the Nebraska ETV Network program, which is aired at 12:30 p.m. and repeats at 9:30 p.m.

Zimmerman said such a product can be useful in reducing farrowing time so that swine handlers can be present when farrowing occurs and possibly save additional pigs. He said this farrowing synchronization approach has been studied at NU for three years with some variation in response. A 90 percent response was achieved among sows in a swine production class last semester, Zimmerman said.

Zimmerman said the potential of a prostaglandin product has the potential to help producers efficiently utilize their farrowing facilities. "If sows can be moved in as a group and out as a group, it does benefit in efficiency of production," he said.

Rice stressed that when the product is used on pregnant sows, "good management and accurate breeding records are necessary because administration of the drug at the critical time is an absolute must." Wrong timing of administration could cause the entire litter to die, due to premature birth.

"ON THE OTHER hand, if used properly, this tool could increase the number of piglets saved due to improved supervision at farrowing. It could reduce labor," Rice said, and agreeing with Zimmerman, he added, "It could provide more efficient use of facilities."

He reiterated the necessity of veterinarian supervision "when using these potent animal drugs."

Another topic to be covered on the April 5 "Farm & Ranch Report" is calibration of chemical sprayers.

Rollie Schneider, NU extension safety specialist, recommends three precautions to observe in regard to spray nozzles.

1 Check to assure it is putting out the correct volume of material.

2 Clean nozzles and screen with a toothbrush or toothpick to make sure there are no obstructions.

3 Never get any of the chemical on hands and resist the urge to put the nozzle in your mouth to blow particles free.

Fruit trees, vines need fertilization soon

Now is the time to fertilize your fruit trees and vines.

Don Steinegger, University of Nebraska extension horticulturist, recommends these nitrogen levels:

An ounce of actual nitrogen per plant for grapes and bush fruits (raspberries and gooseberries); two or three ounces per fruit tree for each year of age to a maximum of a pound actual nitrogen for dwarf apple trees and other fruit trees. Two pounds for mature standard apple trees. For pecan and walnut trees, just one pound per tree.

When figuring amounts of actual nitrogen, note the percent of nitrogen in the given amount of fertilizer. For example, in a 25 pound bag of 10-10-10 fertilizer, there would be 10 percent of 25 pounds or 2.5 pounds of actual nitrogen.

POOR NUTRITION will cause serious problems in fruit plants. Signs that plants aren't receiving proper nutrition are small leaves that have a yellow or otherwise abnormal color, poor branch or cane growth, small fruit, reduced fruit set and excess wood injury.

A good gardener is an observer who looks for signs of poor plant growth and then does something about it, but take care not to go too heavy on nutrition, either. Too much nitrogen, for example, will cause excess vegetative growth, delay bearing of young trees and vines and slow down maturity of fruit.

One way to help your plants get along without receiving extra fertilizer is to keep tests close to the soil as much as possible. That can be done by moving the test wood and portions of limbs and branches that are growing close together.

Another efficient fruit garden management practice is to add organic matter to the soil — manure is particularly good — as a means of increasing the soil's nitrogen supply while reducing soil moisture loss.

Marketing strategy is suggested for bean and corn producers

Current market situation and outlook make it prudent for soybean producers to consider seriously possible marketing alternatives this spring for both 1983 crop beans still in the bin and the projected 1984 crop.

That's the analysis of University of Nebraska extension economist Lynn Lutgen, who said that because of a tighter supply situation in both soybeans and corn, the market is reacting to fundamental factors to which it was unresponsive last fall.

Lutgen said farmers need to watch distant (November 1984 and March 1985) soybean futures with the idea of locking in part of their 1984 crop. Assuming average weather, admittedly a forecasting hazard in any year, Lutgen said pricing opportunities to sell soybeans may be coming.

AN UNKNOWN is whether a price rise this spring would be enough to pull the futures up, he said. With soybean prices on an upturn, the next couple of months will be a critical period for growers to consider selling beans now on hand.

"I can foresee $6 (per bushel) soybeans this fall," Lutgen said. The grain market is as much people's perceptions and expectations, and sometimes more than actualities, the economist said. Now, the market is very sensitive and "is reacting to any news" or clue to a trend, such as the possibility of weather related late planting in the Corn Belt or the projected Brazilian soybean crop. "The market feels the Brazilian soybean crop, now forecast on the high side, is subject to change, downward," he said.

One major change in the soybean picture in Nebraska, an expected significant increase in soybean acreage this season, will not have much of an effect on soybean prices down the line, Lutgen said, because of the state's relatively small proportion of nationwide soybean production.

Corn and soybeans are intertwined in relation to supply and prices on through 1984 and into 1985, Lutgen said.

BOTH ARE in a fairly tight supply-and-demand situation. Corn prices could strengthen if Soviet purchases continue, he said.

If planting is late in major corn-producing areas, a "weather scare" could push prices up, also. If adverse conditions for corn planting prevailed in the Eastern Corn Belt, more soybeans acres would be planted. The "feeder-follower" relationship between corn and soybeans would push bean prices down later this fall under a normal harvest and bolster corn prices.

Farmers should take a hard look of "getting rid of 1983 corn" soon in light of relatively favorable prices, Lutgen said. With an average crop, "we're looking at $2.20 to $2.55 per bushel corn in Nebraska this fall, depending on where you live in the state."

Lutgen agreed with other economic forecasters who generally feel that a 10 percent set-aside of row crop acres will result in less yield reduction because of the type of land set-aside and more production inputs on acres tilled.

This is an example of the dichotomy of the market's perception and reality, Lutgen said. An expected decrease in production this fall can help prices now to a greater degree than the slight effect of fewer bushels harvested.

ALL THIS ADDS up to an imperative for corn and soybean producers to look at distant futures and to consider hedging or forward contracting part of the 1984 crop, the economist urged.

Another alternative this fall could be putting corn under loan, which at the $2.55 level would top the expected cash price. A large number of farmers are eligible for the loan provision under the current farm program, and if bins are emptied of 1983 corn, this would be a favorable move for many producers.

The situation this fall could be similar to 1982, Lutgen said, when a large volume of grain was tied up under loan and farmers "sat on it" until prices improved.

Getting a loan on a portion of their 1984 crop would help farmers meet the critical cash flow problem, Lutgen said. A large amount of grain under loan this fall could force the market to bid the corn price up after Jan. 1, 1985.

Farmers who can sell their 1983 grain on hand to open up storage space are in a position to anticipate putting part of their 1984 crop under loan and locking in part of it through forward pricing, he summarized.

farmer's wife by pete mcclintock

I finally have seen the ad with Clara Peller saying, "Where's the beef?" I was beginning to feel very left out. The whole country seems to be talking about her. I knew all about what a "natural" she was, and how they cue her because she is hearing impaired, and how much money she makes, but I hadn't actually seen her.

She is cute, I'll admit, though I have home health patients who are cuter. But that cat yowling is being worked to death! Don't you wish you had been the one to dream up the whole thing? And don't you bet McDonald's and Burger King wish it would just please go away?

The beef, currently, is in the mud. Feedlots look a lot like they did a year ago; and when it doesn't freeze at night, it gets to be a real challenge feeding the beef!

THE BABY beebes are being born in the mud. Farmers' legs are aching from slogging around in the mud.

I've seen more cars parked along driveways the past month than I can ever remember. If misery loves company, I should be happy. It really makes you think before you go somewhere: is this trip really necessary?

Actually, I'm sort of getting used to it. I have knee-high boots that fit over any shoe. I'm wearing the old plaid coat that doesn't show dirt. (The other two have been cleaned and hung away.) And I don't have to carry kids.

They are big enough to make it on their own. There is nothing heavier than a 40 or 50 pound, three-year-old hanging onto your neck while you try to step around the ruts. Now I just have to carry the groceries.

The thing we have to be careful of is the 15 foot dropoff on the east side of the low part of our drive. Sometimes it can be very slick and I don't relish the idea of rolling down that incline.

WHEN MY COUSIN worked for us, he took the pickup to get the mail on a rainy day. I happened to be looking out the kitchen window when I saw it slide down the bank, and it stayed right side up. That was our thrill for that day.

Even when it's dry, that slope can be a hazard. A truckload of corn had a brake that vapor locked one fine summer day, and ended up in the garden. And it didn't stay upright.

We've actually had two nice weekends in a row. But we are punished on the days between with rain and snow. With two days of drying weather, the driveways just begin to dry out. Then we start the whole process over again.

There's been a trend toward early planting the last few years. And I've heard some grain farmers worrying about getting into the fields. "I'd just like to drive on my yard. The old timers say one should never plant corn or take off the long underwear until May 1. Certainly has been true the last three years."

THE ROAD to the east of us has not been used since Thanksgiving. This means the Big Farmer must go three miles around the section to get to the stock cows.

We brought the cull cows home over that road on Saturday. As I've said before, there is something special about Wayne County mud. It has a unique sticking quality, and that was a hard way to walk a mile.

This morning it's snowing again in the month of April showers. Mother Nature has been awfully mixed up lately.

"Oh, what a blamed uncertain thing. This pesky weather is. It blew and snowed, and then it dried. And now, by jeez, it's frizzin'!"

And that's my beef!

Method improves stalk digestibility

Thermo ammoniated corn stalks showed higher digestibility in cattle than cornstalks ammoniated in a sack under plastic or in a silopress bag, said a University of Nebraska-Lincoln animal scientist.

This finding was presented in a research paper presented at the Midwest Section of the American Society of Animal Science which concluded in Lincoln March 28.

Terry Klopfenstein, NU professor of animal science who specializes in ruminant nutrition, said that thermo ammoniation of cornstalks (adding ammonia at higher temperatures) increased average daily gain, dry matter intake and gain to feed ratio.

Klopfenstein said the thermo ammoniation method could increase the usefulness of cornstalk roughage. Generally, by the time harvest is over and cornstalks have been collected, temperatures are not conducive to slack ammoniations, he said.

WHEN AMMONIATING roughages, the length of time required to attain maximal digestibility depends upon temperature, he said. In general, when ammoniating at 70 degrees the roughages need to react 14 to 21 days. However, at higher temperatures maximal digestibility may be attained with shorter reaction times.

After the roughage is put into the chamber and the chamber is sealed, ammonia is blown in directly from an anhydrous nurse tank.

In the first period (15 hours), ammonia gas circulates through the heating unit holding the roughage at about 185 degrees. During the second period (four hours), the plant's heating unit shuts off and the ammoniation reaction continues, Klopfenstein said. During the final period (four hours), the chamber is vented, releasing excess ammonia, and cooled.

Klopfenstein said levels of ammonia on hand to open up storage space are in a position to anticipate putting part of their 1984 crop under loan and locking in part of it through forward pricing, he summarized.

The outstanding principal on FmHA's single-family housing loans totaled $27.8 billion as of January 1. Altogether, the agency in Nebraska has a portfolio of about 24,697 direct loans valued at $1.1 billion.

proving another 508 home loans.

The delinquency rate for single-family home loans made by the Farmers Home Administration has declined steadily for the second consecutive year.

Frank Marsh, state director of the agency, today said the delinquency rate in January was 11.6 percent of the Farmers Home Administration total of almost 8,700 single-family home loans, down from 16.8 percent in January of 1983.

"In real numbers, this means that some 343 fewer borrowers are late in their payments," Marsh said. "Those families can feel more secure with the knowledge that their loans are current. Farm land values lower

Nebraska farm real estate values in 1983 declined for the third consecutive year with the statewide average sagging from $42 to $38 per acre, or 8.4 percent.

The trend was among preliminary findings of the annual Farm Real Estate Market Survey conducted by the University of Nebraska Department of Agricultural Economics and released by economists Bruce Johnson and Ron Hanson.

Declines in value were reported for all types of land in all crop reporting districts, based on land sales during a 12 month period ending Jan. 31, 1984, Johnson and Hanson said.

"THE DATA REFLECT the continuation of a very soft real estate market in every area of the state, although the rates of change vary," they said.

"On the average, cropland — both dryland and irrigated — was off 7 to 8 percent from year earlier levels," the economists said, while grazing land posted relatively larger percentage declines.

Over the 12 month period, declines by crop reporting districts ranged from lows of 6.3 and 6.8 percent, respectively, for the south and northeast districts to the largest declines of 10 and 10.9 percent, respectively, for the southeast and central districts.

The largest average declines over the period by types of land were 10.2 and 10.6 percent, respectively, for nonirrigated grazing land and hayland. Declines for other types of land were in relatively tight range, from 7.2 to 8.2 percent.

Of perhaps more significance, the economists said, are cumulative percentage declines in dollars per acre from the peak level of various types of land across the state and in the eight cropping districts.

For the state as a whole, land prices have slipped 22 percent from the high water mark of a few years ago. The greatest percentage change — 24 percent — is reported for land in the central cropping district, the smallest change is 16 percent for the northern district. Four other districts have posted a drop of more than 20 percent.

BY TYPE OF LAND, cumulative declines over the longer period are as follows:

- Dry cropland no irrigation potential — 19 percent; irrigation potential — 24 percent
- Grazing land tillable — 19 percent; non tillable — 20 percent
- Hayland gavelly — 21 percent
- center pivot — 22 percent

The value of the center pivot systems is not included in the per acre value, the report stated.

As of Feb. 1, the average dollar per acre value of farm and ranch land is by far the highest in the eastern cropping district — $1,341, and lowest in the northern cropping district — $299, the report revealed. The statewide average value per acre of gavelly irrigated land is $1,601, the highest figure, the lowest figure is the $184 per acre for nonirrigated grazing land.

On a more positive note, Johnson and Hanson said two factors should be considered as moderating an otherwise dismal picture:

1. Declines reported in the Farm Real Estate Market Survey are probably more modest than implied by the prevailing attitude of the market.
2. The market mood accentuates the negative just as it is capable of accentuating the positive.

It appears that in many areas, values are approaching levels where land earnings, even in the short run, would provide opportunity for a land parcel to provide cash flow.

Perhaps the extended decline in Nebraska farmland value is about to bottom out," Johnson and Hanson concluded.

Plant corn in soybean residue

As businessmen, farmers must concentrate on reducing expenses and increasing profits. Why not make a profit on your crop before planting? That profit is what you could save by reducing the tillage you do before planting.

How much tillage do you do to last year's soybean fields before planting corn? If you used to plow and now changed to a chisel plow, your fuel use could be reduced by 37 percent, or by 70 percent with a no till system.

There are many different approaches to reducing tillage, and no one system is best for everyone. The type of equipment available, soil types, herbicide type and application, are all factors which will influence your conservation tillage program. Less tillage, of course, requires more careful chemical management, since you cannot rely on tillage to cover your mistakes. As one no till farmer stated, "you need a good planter and a good sprayer and the know how to use both.

Today's agricultural trend seems to be fewer farmers, farming more land. Time, labor and expense can be cut by converting to a no till system, with side benefits of less soil erosion, and conserving moisture.

Roguing, crop rotation can control weeds

The old axiom "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" certainly applies to shattercane, said Orvin Burnside, University of Nebraska-Lincoln weed specialist.

But the "ounce" that some farmers are choosing may be costing them and seed companies "pounds."

Burnside said farmers have shied away from growing sorghum for fear of introducing or spreading shattercane on their farms. Those farmers are sacrificing the advantage of grain sorghum's higher yields, he said.

BURNSIDE SPOKE about the biology, seed dissemination and cultural control of shattercane at a national conference on Genetic Contaminants in Hybrid Sorghum held recently at the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education.

He said the best management practice would be to destroy infertile shattercane infestations by roguing before seed is produced. Once shattercane invades a field, it can increase from a few scattered plants to a serious problem in just three to four years, he said. After that, control can be costly and must continue over a number of years.

Farmers roguing shattercane from fields must watch for cane until Aug. 5. Shattercane seed harvested from the Aug. 5 or later planting dates showed no germination in Burnside's experiments. Shattercane produced viable seed 10 days after flowering, so plants cut after that time must be carried out of the field, Burnside said. Plants cut before August may tiller and produce viable seed before frost. The first week to 10 days of August is the best time to cut shattercane to prevent seed production, he said.

Also, farmers should ask seed dealers about their companies' method of checking seed lots for off type sorghums, the weed specialist said. Does the company conduct grow out tests to determine off type sorghums in their hybrid seed?

Through grow out tests and detailed attention to seed production methods, substantial improvements have been made in reducing the off types present in hybrid sorghum seed offered for sale.

ANOTHER IMPORTANT method to prevent the spread of shattercane from field to field is to clean machinery, particularly combines and tillage equipment before leaving an infested field, Burnside said.

After infestation, crop rotations can control shattercane because the weed cannot compete with small grains, alfalfa or perennial grasses, he said. Shattercane is primarily a problem in conventionally tilled or reduced tilled crops such as grain sorghum, corn and soybeans.

Burnside said moderate shattercane infestations can be controlled in corn and soybeans with a combination of herbicides and cultivation, but neither herbicides nor cultivation will do the job alone. Better shattercane control methods are available in soybeans than in corn or sorghum, he said.

Farmers, university personnel, regulatory officials, certification managers and seed company representatives from several midwestern states attended the conference which provided a forum to define and describe the problems of genetic contaminants such as shattercane in hybrid sorghum.

The conference was sponsored by the Cooperative Extension Service and Agricultural Research Division of the NU Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources and Nebraska Grain Sorghum Development, Utilization and Marketing Board in cooperation with the Division of Continuing Studies.

Last Chance to get a 1983 tax-break

Don't forget to make your IRA contribution, or if you don't have one, open yours before you file your 1983 income tax. There's still time!

Deposit up to $2,000. Your total contribution is tax deductible. And with an employed spouse, up to $4,000. Married couples with one employed worker can deposit up to $2,250. Even the earned interest is tax-deferred until you start withdrawing at retirement when you'll probably be in a lower tax bracket.

Unlike some plans, there are no fees or commissions to pay on a Midwest Federal Individual Retirement Account.

The money you save for your retirement is insured-safe up to $100,000 by the FSIC, an agency of the U.S. Government.

Don't miss out on this opportunity for a tax-break now and retirement security later.

Faculty members honored

Reprinted from The Wayne Stater
Twenty-five years of teaching was celebrated March 24 for three faculty members in the Humanities Division. Honorees and their families were treated to a surprise banquet at the Black Knight. Following the meal a short presentation was given which "roasted" the three veterans.

Honored were Dr. Helen Russell, professor of drama; Dr. Bob Johnson, professor of speech; and G. Richard Manley, assistant professor of journalism. During the entertainment section of the evening, Juli Burney, adjunct instructor of theatre, "introduced" the assembled guests to the three honorees. She began by telling stories about the three 25 year veterans and then brought out a few impersonators. Burney had arranged for three of her students to impersonate Russell, Johnson and Manley. The performance kept the audience laughing at Michelle Johnson (as Russell), Don Kneiff (as Dr. Johnson) and Dave Blenderman (as Manley) who came out and mimicked the three faculty members.

Photos of the three faculty members had also been collected and posted on one wall. These photos showed the development of the honorees in their careers at Wayne State.

The skill and integrity that Russell, Johnson and Manley possess and pass on to their students. She commented that in 25 years each of these teachers has probably taught 2,500 students. Taylor also presented each of the three faculty members with a plaque that she said was "only a small part of the appreciation their colleagues felt for them."
